My colleagues, as we shall see, there was a significant and striking resemblance between the attitude of the power companies when asked to bid on the power at Muscle Shoals and that of the fertilizer companies when asked to make a proposal for the operation of the nitrate plant in the manufacture of fertilizer. With one accord the fertilizer companies declined to assist the Government in any way in working out the problems of fertilizer manufacture at Muscle Shoals. Even the American Cyanamid Co., whose president, Mr. Washburn, had so eloquently presented the possibilities of fertilizer at half price through the operation of this plant, stated that they were not interested.

Gentlemen of the House, particularly those who may entertain the view that the acceptance of Henry Ford's offer for Muscle Shoals is unfair to those engaged in the fertilizer business, listen to this account of the efforts of this Government to interest private capital in this enterprise in 1919: Testifying before our committee on April 19, 1920, Mr. George J. Roberts, assistant to Doctor Glasgow, made the following statement:

FRUITLESS EFFORTS TO INTEREST CAPITAL.

The question naturally arises, Why does not private industry undertake the operation of these plants? I shall not attempt to give what is in the minds of those who are most interested in the production of nitrates in this country. All I can state is that months of time were expended trying to get the fertilizer industry interested in taking over and operating the Government plants. The presidents of all the large fertilizer companies in the United States were seen and the matter fully discussed with them, and they were asked if they would undertake the operation of these plants if they were to pay no rental to the Government until they had received 9 per cent on their working capital and after that the profit should be divided between them and the Government. A part of the agreement was that the United States would complete the plants so as to provide storage and bagging facilities, a sulphate of ammonia plant, and all the work outlined in Mr. Glasgow's letter of October 22. But they could not be brought to the point of making a formal offer. An effort was also made to get certain financiers in New York to undertake to form a company to operate these plants. Scant consideration was given to the scheme and no investigation undertaken. An appeal was likewise made to the coke-oven interest, with the same result. There seems to be a decided antipathy of capital to engage in any partnership arrangement with the Government. (House hearings, 1920, p. 95.)

So, after many months consumed in these unsuccessful efforts to interest private concerns Doctor Glasgow, in October, 1919, submitted a plan for the operation of nitrate plant No. 2 by the Government. This was embodied in what was known as the Wadsworth-Kahn bill which passed the Senate in May, 1920, but was lost when adjournment came without its having been considered by the House.

GENERAL BEACH ASKS FOR BIDS.

In March, 1921, Secretary of War Weeks requested General Beach, Chief of Engineers, to ask for bids on Muscle Shoals, and announced that if he got an offer representing a fair return on the investment necessary to complete the Muscle Shoals project he would send it to Congress. Realizing that private capital was not interested in the nitrate plants, and appreciating the difficulties and dangers of Government operation of the nitrate plants, Congress refused to continue the appropriations for the construction of the dam, and on April 30, 1921, work was stopped for lack of funds.

The Muscle Shoals project appeared to be dead—unsparingly condemned by its enemies and apparently deserted by its friends; the whole project was apparently destined for the scrap pile, and seemed about to meet the fate that had already overtaken many another Government war-time enterprise.

A BOLT FROM THE BLUE.

Then the unexpected happened. The well-laid plans of the power interests who were stalking about on the outskirts waiting for the Muscle Shoals project to die, so that they could come in and strip the bones, suddenly saw the Muscle Shoals enterprise come to life, and discovered that their carefully laid plans were thoroughly upset in a way that, to say the least, was disconcerting. On July 8, 1921, there arrived in Washington the first real proposal for the property. It was sent to the Secretary of War and its terms immediately made public. It was the offer of Henry Ford. Seven months later, on February 1, 1922, Secretary Weeks transmitted the Ford offer to Congress, and on February 10 our committee began hearings on it. Five days later the Alabama Power Co. sent an offer to the Secretary of War, who transmitted it to Congress, and we received it February 21.

GENERAL BEACH'S LETTER.

The circumstances connected with asking for bids and replies which were received were reviewed before our committee by the Chief of Engineers. In order that Members may have the facts—for these facts have a significant bearing on later developments—let us discuss for a moment this testimony of General Beach. Describing the original request for proposals made April 2, 1921, General Beach stated:

In order to bring this matter to the attention of the water-power companies and other parties whom I thought might be interested I sent out the following letter:

"The Secretary of War has directed me to ascertain what arrangements can be made to derive a reasonable return upon the investment if the United States completes the dam and hydraulic power plant at Muscle Shoals, Tennessee River.

"If you are interested, I would be pleased to discuss the matter with you at this office at the earliest date that may be mutually determined.

"It is desired to develop the matter and come to a conclusion at as early a date as possible." (House hearings, 1922, p. 99.)

General Beach further stated in his testimony before the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

I gave as wide publicity to that letter as was possible. A good many papers printed it. I furnished it to the press.

Mr. Ford's proposition was the only one which was received up to the time it was presented, and I forwarded it to the Secretary of War as evidence of the fact that the completion of this dam was a practicable undertaking, and he has had charge of the negotiations with regard to Mr. Ford and other parties since that date. (House hearings, 1922, p. 98.)

THE REPLIES OF THE POWER COMPANIES.

General Beach further testified that among those to whom he sent his request for bids were the power companies of the Southeastern States. The results were interesting. The officers of the Alabama Power Co. replied, according to General Beach, that—

They did not see their way clear to make a proposition because I was not in a position to state when the power would be available and the terms on which they could obtain it. I requested them, as I did all others with whom I had conferences, to make their own proposition, * * * but Mr. Ford was the only one that came in with a definite response.

This is the same Alabama Power Co. mentioned above as trying to secure control in 1913.

Mr. James B. Duke, president of the Southern Power Co., who was another one to whom the letter was addressed, stated, among other things, in response:

The market for power from the Muscle Shoals Dam has, in my opinion, been overestimated. The demand for power in this district during the war has materially decreased. * * * The estimates of the price at which power can be sold from the Wilson Dam will prove disappointing.

With every desire to assist the Government in the solution of its problem at Muscle Shoals, I am forced by the facts to the conclusion that the Government should leave the permanent work as it is and salvage the construction plant. The Government should then wait until labor and materials render possible the completion of the project at reasonable cost and until there has developed some near-by use for power at the Wilson Dam at an 80 or 90 per cent load factor.

The loss of discontinuing and deferring the work will be small compared to the loss which will inevitably be sustained if the work is completed at this time. Meanwhile, the Government should maintain the nitrate plants and their steam-power station in stand-by condition ready for war.

In my opinion, the United States Government can not at the present time complete the Wilson Dam and hydroelectric plant and obtain a reasonable return on its investment. (Signed: J. B. Duke.) (House hearings, p. 117.)

Four other large southern power companies, the same interests which have since come forward with proposals or suggestions for proposals, signed a joint letter to General Beach, which he placed in the record. Their conclusions may be summed up in one of their statements which they made in that letter, as follows:

Under prevailing conditions and rates for which power is sold under regulation in the southeastern territory the usable primary continuous available power output of the "dam and hydraulic power plant at Muscle Shoals, Tennessee River," can not be sold, delivered to the public-service market at an average price that will pay operating expenses, taxes, reserve for renewals, and replacements and a fair rate of interest on the estimated cost of the proposed plant, as planned, and upon the necessary transmission system to reach the distant and only market. (House hearings, 1922, p. 120.)

Mr GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McKENZIE. If it is a very brief one.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Are you going into the question of how much it can be sold for?

Mr. McKENZIE. No; I am not.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Do you know how much the primary horsepower can be sold for?

Mr. McKENZIE. I have not that in my statement, but we will furnish that information to the House.

POWER COMPANIES AVOIDED FERTILIZER OBLIGATIONS AS LONG AS THEY COULD.

It is apparent from the replies received from these leading power companies of the South that they did not desire to submit an offer for Muscle Shoals which involved the essential elements of carrying out section 124 of the national defense act. It is clearly evident from their replies that at best they had in mind the construction of the dam for power purposes only, unlike Mr. Ford, who in evident good faith is attempting to comply with the policy established by law at Muscle Shoals. It is such a proposal, submitted in answer to General Beach's request, which is before the House for consideration.

THE SITUATION AT MUSCLE SHOALS WHEN FORD OFFER WAS MADE.

Before proceeding in the discussion of the merits of these proposals let us see if we can get a bird's-eye view of the situation at Muscle Shoals as it existed at that time in relation to the expenditures made by the Government.

First, there had been expended on the Tennessee River at this point $3,191,726 for building an inadequate canal and $1,730,716 for its maintenance, a total of about $5,000,000, in an effort to encourage navigation, which, according to the testimony of witnesses familiar with the situation, was money absolutely wasted.

We had a great dam partially built, the uncompleted work representing an investment of about $17,000,000. We had, and still have, situated there nitrate plant No. 1, with all the necessary equipment, structures, and facilities, on which there had been expended $12,887,000 and an additional $800,000 in an unsuccessful effort to make it work, all on account of the recommendation of the nitrate-supply committee, especially resulting from the studies of Dr. Charles L. Parsons, and who, by the way, appeared before our committee and opposed the acceptance of the Ford offer. Then, as now, we had the great nitrate plant No. 2, with all its facilities and structures, paved streets, sidewalks, etc., constructed by the Air Nitrates Corporation, a subsidiary of the American Cyanamid Co., of which Mr. Frank S. Washburn was then president and who recommended the construction and who had only a few months before resigned as president of the Alabama Power Co. This great nitrate plant, using the well-known and much-condemned cyanamid process, together with Waco Quarry, from which limestone is obtained for use in taking nitrogen from the air, had cost us in all $67,555,355.

It is not unfair to say that all of this construction work was performed under what is known as the cost-plus system of contracting, and the fee paid to the contractor was over $1,000,000.

Also let us keep in mind the Government's interest in the Gorgas power station, located on the Warrior River, on which, with its transmission line to Muscle Shoals, there had been expended by the Government $4,979,782. Let me remind the House that there on the Warrior River in the heart of the coal fields the Alabama Power Co. had constructed a steam-power station of their own, and during the war, as I have stated, they more than doubled this plant at Government expense. Bear in mind that the Alabama Power Co. did this work on a cost-plus basis for the Government and constructed the Government's interest in this plant in such way that it was practically impossible to sever the Government's interest for the purpose of sale to any other purchaser than their own company. So they very wisely provided in their contract that they should have the exclusive right to purchase the Government's interest.

THE NEED FOR THE GORGAS PLANT.

I hope that this statement will clearly set forth to the Members of this House the interest of the Government involved in this proposition. I trust also that the Members of the House will get a clear conception of the far-seeing business judgment of the gentlemen who had this great work in charge. They knew better than anyone else that with the small amount of primary power at Muscle Shoals that it would be necessary and imperative to have an auxiliary steam-power plant with which to augment the continuous hydroelectric power at Muscle Shoals in order to operate the plant successfully.

As Maj. J. H. Burns, former Chief of the Nitrate Division of the Ordnance Office, testified regarding the reason for establishing the Government's Gorgas plant:

> We not only needed power for operation purposes at nitrate plant No. 2 when it was completed, but we also needed power to assist in the construction of it. (House hearings, 1922, p. 213.)

PECULIAR PATRIOTISM.

It was stated to the committee by the representatives of the Air Nitrates Corporation and the Alabama Power Co. that in their dealings with the Government in bringing about this great expenditure of money these concerns were animated by the loftiest patriotic motives. The fact that their contracts with the Government contained unconscionable provisions so far as the Government's interests were concerned does not necessarily bring into question the motives of the men who drew these contracts. That is a matter which I do not care to discuss, for it is not material to the present consideration of the matter before us.

FORD'S OFFER FIRST—OTHERS RELUCTANTLY FOLLOWED.

After Mr. Ford had submitted his offer and it had been made public a number of other offers were made. The Alabama Power Co. came in with a proposal to complete Dam No. 2 at its own expense and to set aside 100,000 horsepower out of the irregular or secondary power at Muscle Shoals for the manufacture of fertilizers, but they carefully avoided obligating themselves to engage in the fertilizer business.

Another proposal was that of Frederick E. Engstrum, who proposed to complete the dams for the Government on a cost-plus basis and to operate the dams and nitrate plants in the manufacture of fertilizer to the extent permitted by the proceeds from the sale of these fertilizers, together with a small portion of the receipts from the sale of power, the balance of the power receipts to be retained by him for his services.

This was also the offer of Dr. Charles L. Parsons, who had led this country into an expenditure of about $13,000,000 in nitrate plant No. 1, and who proposed to purchase this unsuccessful nitrate plant for the sum of $600,000. As a condition of that purchase he required an option to lease the great part of nitrate plant No. 2 for $50,000 per year and proposed to buy from the Government 100,000 horsepower of secondary power at the modest price of three-quarters of a mill per kilowatt hour.

NO FERTILIZER GUARANTY IN OPPONENTS' OFFER.

None of the offers contained a guaranty to produce any definite amount of fertilizers. With the opening of the new Congress, none of the bidders of two years ago renewed their bids except Mr. Ford, who notified this committee that his offer still stood.

The Alabama Power Co. came in with a new proposal which, although widely heralded in the press as a better offer than Mr. Ford's, turned out to be merely a proposal to utilize this water power for public-utility purposes. It is true that their offer contained a promise to operate a small plant of not less than one-eighth of the capacity of nitrate plant No. 2, but they did not agree to operate even this small plant at its full capacity, and their offer did not require the capital of their proposed company to be paid in in cash, and in general it failed to command the confidence of the committee.

The Union Carbide Co. also made an offer to operate nitrate plant No. 2 for the Government on a cost-plus basis; and an even less satisfactory proposal to the Government, whereln the Government took the risk and the proposers took part of the profits, if any, was that of A. H. Hooker and his associates, W. W. Atterbury and J. G. White.

These last two offers contemplated operation at the expense of the Government, and it is fair to say that there are a few Members of Congress and perhaps some citizens who favor the operation of these plants in the manufacture of fertilizer by the Government. However, it is apparent that but a small minority of the membership of Congress or of the people subscribe to this doctrine of Government ownership and operation of this great undertaking.

WHAT CAN BE DONE?

With the dam rapidly approaching completion and a large Government investment tied up in ineffective and idle nitrate plants necessarily costing the Government many thousands of dollars annually to guard and maintain, with the prospect of an ever-increasing expenditure for the maintenance of these plants, and faced with the undeniable fact that nitrate plant No. 1 was a failure and would require at least $4,000,000 for its reconstruction along successful lines, and further confronted with the fact that the great facilities at nitrate plant No. 2 were already practically obsolete, the question naturally arose in the minds of everyone charged with handling the people's money, What can be done? What solution of this problem can be had that will relieve the Government of this burden and at the same time provide, for national defense, that the great nitrate plant shall be maintained and kept up to date? And there was also to be considered the peace-time provision of our law looking to the manufacture of fertilizer for the benefit of the farmers of the country, and the interest of the Government in making the Tennessee River navigable at this point with the least possible expenditure was also to be kept in mind.

FORD'S THE ONLY SATISFACTORY OFFER.

When all of these things were considered it was the sense of a large majority of the present Committee on Military Affairs that of all the offers submitted the offer of Mr. Ford is the only one which is made in absolute good faith, and conserves not only the interest of the Government but gives great promise of bringing about what the people of this country have long hoped for—a reasonable price for fertilizer necessary on a great portion of the farms of our country. And, feeling as we do about the matter, we earnestly submit this proposal for your consideration.

WHAT MR. FORD AGREES TO DO.

Now let us see what Mr. Ford proposes to do:

First. That he is to form a corporation with capital stock of $10,000,000 or more, of which at least $10,000,000 shall be paid in in cash.

Please take notice of this first provision. It is a proposal to form a corporation, upon the acceptance of the offer, with a capital stock of $10,000,000 or more, of which at least $10,000,000 shall be paid in in cash. This is a straightforward, clean-cut business proposal. There is nothing in that paragraph which reads:

> That when a corporation having adequate powers for the purpose hereafter mentioned shall have been incorporated * * * that the corporation shall have a capital stock of not less than $15,000,000, subscribed by responsible parties.

You will note the difference. I am quoting from the last offer made by the allied power companies, which offer, by the way, was not prepared and introduced into the House until the 8th day of February, 1924, notwithstanding the fact that the gentlemen now submitting this so-called proposal in H. R. 6781 were advised two years ago and more that the Government had this property on its hands and was seeking a solution of this problem.

NOT A STOCK-JOBBING PROPOSAL.

I think all will agree that Henry Ford has sufficient capital to pay in this capital stock in cash, himself, if his proposal is accepted, and the business of making cheaper and better fertilizers for the farmers will not become the subject of a stock-watering and stock-jobbing campaign. Let us not forget that on this point the financing of this enterprise by the sale of $15,000,000 worth of stock for the purposes set forth in the proposal of the Alabama Power Co. and its associates, which I have mentioned, would probably result in the defeat of the whole effort to get rid of this great problem at this time. Of course, it would be a fine thing for the stock and bond salesmen of the country, for there is no obligation requiring that the stock be sold at par, and the opportunity is there to put the demands of a host of stockholders ahead of the interests of the farmers.

COMPLETES DAMS AT COST.

Second. The company shall complete for the United States, subject to the approval of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, Dam No. 2, its locks, power house, and all necessary equipment, all in accordance with the plans and specifications prepared or to be prepared or approved by the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, and progressively install hdyroelectric equipment in said power house adequate for generating approximately 600,000 horsepower, all work aforesaid to be performed as speedily as possible at actual cost, without profit to the company.

He further proposes that as soon as the release of suitable construction equipment and labor forces at Dam No. 2 will permit, or at an earlier date, if desired by the company, the company shall construct and complete, subject to the approval of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, for the United States, Dam No. 3, its lock, power house, and all necessary equipment, all in accordance with the plans and specifications prepared and to be prepared by the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, or by the company, at its option, and approved by the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, and progressively install the hydroelectric equipment in said power house adequate for generating approximately 250,000 horsepower, all the work aforesaid to be performed as speedily as possible at actual cost and without profit to the company.

You will notice that he is to do this work for the Government without profit to the company. This, of course, runs to the benefit of the purchasers of fertilizers by reducing the overhead cost of the capital invested. It is strange, indeed, that out of all the offers submitted not one of them carried any such provision, until the offer represented in House bill 6781, introduced into Congress on the 8th day of February, 1924, in which they have copied practically the very language of Mr. Ford's offer and have decided to be as generous to the public as Mr. Ford proposed two years ago. In truth, they seem to be trying to get on the band wagon, but the band wagon is crowded.

It is pertinent to state that the same provision in connection with profit to the company applies to the construction of Dam No. 3 that governs Dam No. 2, and it might be well at this point to say, in justice to some inquiries that have been made, why is it necessary to construct Dam No. 3? In the first place, it is necessary to construct Dam No. 3 in order to furnish additional primary or useful power to carry out the real intent and purposes of the Ford proposal in the manufacture of fertilizers. In the second place, the navigation of the Tennessee River must be considered, and it is important to understand that the construction of the locks at Dam No. 2 without the construction of Dam No. 3 would be an idle waste of public money.

LEASES DAMS FOR 100 YEARS.

Third. He further proposes that the company will lease from the United States Dam No. 2, its power house, and all the hydroelectric and operating appurtenances, except the locks, together with all lands and buildings owned or to be acquired by the United States, connected with or adjacent to either end of said dam, for a period of 100 years from the date when structures and equipment of a capacity of 100,000 horsepower are constructed and installed and ready for service, and will pay to the United States as annual rental therefor 4 per cent of the actual cost of acquiring lands and flowage rights and of building the locks, dams, and power-house facilities, payable annually at the end of each lease year, except that during and for the first six years of the lease period the rental shall be in the following amounts and payable at the following times: $200,000 one year from the date when 100,000 horsepower is installed ready for service, and thereafter $200,000 at the end of each year for five years.

Also, the company will lease from the United States Dam No. 3, its power house, and all of the hydroelectric and operating appurtenances, except the lock, together with all lands and buildings owned or to be acquired by the United States, connected with or adjacent to the end of the said dam, for a period equal to the lease term of Dam No. 2 and its hydroelectric power equipment thereat, in order that the said lease terms of the two dams and the hydroelectric equipment thereat shall expire at the same time, the said period to begin at the date when said structures and equipment of a capacity of 80,000 horsepower are constructed and installed and ready for service, and will pay to the United States as annual rental therefor 4 per cent of the actual cost of acquiring the lands and flowage rights and of constructing the lock, dam, and power-house facilities, payable annually at the end of each lease year, except that during and for the first three years of the lease period the rentals shall be for the following amounts and payable at the following times, to wit: $160,000 one year from the date when 80,000 horsepower is installed and ready for service, and thereafter $160,000 annually at the end of each year for two years.

Perhaps one of the strongest drives being made against the Ford offer is on the length of the lease period, and it is passing strange that some of this opposition comes from beneficiaries of 100-year licenses, and in some cases where the license is perpetual. Outstanding among these critics we find Col. Hugh L. Cooper, consulting engineer at a large salary in connection with the construction of Dam No. 2, and who for a time was vice president of the Mississippi River Power Co., which operates the Keokuk dam under a perpetual lease.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Just for a brief question.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman will admit that all those leases were obtained before the passage of the water-power act; is not that true?

Mr. McKENZIE. Oh, of course.

Mr. ALMON. So was the Wilson Dam ordered to be built two and a half years before the water power act.

Mr. McKENZIE. It is idle to ask a man who has been on the Committee on Military Affairs as I have such a question as that.

When questioned as to why a perpetual lease was necessary at that time he claimed that it was because of the competition that water power had to meet in low-priced coal. In other words, his argument was to the effect that while the Mississippi River Power Co. was entitled to a perpetual lease to reduce the cost of its power to meet competition, it would be unfair to permit Mr. Ford to have a lease limited to 100 years at Muscle Shoals so that the farmers could have the benefit of its advantages in the production of fertilizer. Another critic of the 100-year period proposed by Mr. Ford is Mr. O. C. Merrill, executive secretary of the recently created Federal Power Commission, which commission has charge of licenses over water-power projects.

FALLACIES IN THE 50-YEAR ARGUMENT.

But, my colleagues, there is a widespread misunderstanding about the significance and value of this 50-year lease period. The value of our water powers to the American people depends upon the cost of the power and the rates at which it is sold. The length of the lease of a water power has no more to do with the rates at which that power is sold than the length of the lease of a railroad has to do with the price of a railroad ticket. The absurdity of these arbitrary lease periods was well brought out before our committee by Col. J. W. Worthington, chairman of the executive committee of the Tennessee River Improvement Association, who brought to our attention the fact that on the Little Tennessee River, because of the fact that this branch of the main Tennessee is a so-called "non-navigable" stream, the rights to the use of the water enjoyed by Mr. Mellon's Aluminum Co. of America are perpetual. A few miles farther down the stream the same waters of the Little Tennessee pass through the turbines of the Hales Bar development below Chattanooga, and here the rights to the use of the water is limited by act of Congress to 99 years, and the reason assigned for the distinction is the fact that boats can pass through the locks at the Hales Bar Dam. For this reason the power is limited to 99 years. Passing on farther downstream we come to Muscle Shoals and here, because it is a navigable stream, it is proposed to limit the lease period to 50 years.

Gentlemen, the only argument that can be advanced in favor of a short lease is that it gives the Federal Government an opportunity to step in and demand a greater rental for the water-power rights at the end of the lease period, but that is clearly not in the interest of the consumer, for it is merely an arbitrary charge which unnecessarily increases the cost of the power. It might be claimed that the man with the perpetual lease or a 100-year lease had an unfair advantage over his competitors whose leases are limited to 50 years. If that be true, then the remedy is to tax all such powers and whenever in the wisdom of Congress such a step appears advisable then this body has the power to do it.

While the United States leads the world in the development of water power, only about 16 per cent of our total powers have been developed and 84 per cent of these powers still run to waste. It behooves us then in the interest of the country at large not to obstruct and make difficult and costly the development of these powers but to expedite their early development at the least possible cost.

POWER CONSTANTLY BECOMES CHEAPER.

While I am on this subject of the lease period I would like to state to the House, what I have frequently stated to the committee, that I can find nothing in the history of power development in this country which, in my opinion, warrants the conclusion that the cost of power in the future will be greater than it has been in the past, for the indications all point in the other direction. Electric power generated from coal is one of the very few commodities which is cheaper to-day than it was 20 years ago, and yet experts tell us that in the best of our steam-power plants we still waste more than 80 per cent of the energy contained in the coal, so that there is a vast room for improvement, and yet with all our deficiencies the cost of steam power in a modern plant favorably located is almost as low as the cost of water power in an economical development.

MUSCLE SHOALS NOT AN ORDINARY WATER-POWER PROJECT.

The chief argument against the 100-year lease period is that this Federal Power Commission of ours has been issuing licenses for the construction of power dams all over the country which are limited to 50 years. Let no man confuse the operation of Muscle Shoals under the Ford offer with the ordinary water-power project. The responsibilities of Mr. Ford at Muscle Shoals have nothing in common with the undertakings of a little power company lighting some village or operating a street-car system with power from a hydroelectric dam. Those who complain of Mr. Ford's lack of regulation deliberately close their eyes to the fact that at Muscle Shoals he is required to assume obligations to the public which far outweigh any regulations of the ordinary water-power company operating under the Federal water power act. No man will undertake to dodge behind this lease period for the purpose of defeating this legislation because he believes that the best interest of the people of our country are conserved by defeating the Ford offer simply because it is not limited to 50 years. If he believes that the Ford offer is a good thing for 50 years certainly the same argument would hold good that it would be a good thing for 100 years for the people. The truth is that this drive is not made simply to have this period limited to 50 years, but all these specious arguments are simply brought forward for no other purpose than to defeat the Ford offer, and when it is once defeated then these great power companies that are laying in the offing, viewing this dam with an avaricious eye, will come to the little bureaucratic commission down here on the Avenue and probably get what they want. So, gentlemen, do not deceive yourselves—do not think for a moment that the people will be deceived. [Applause.]

PROVIDES FOR OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE OF LOCKS AND DAMS.

Fourth. He further agrees that the company will pay to the United States during the period of the lease of Dams Nos. 2 and 3, $20,000 annually in installments quarterly in advance for repairs, maintenance, and operation of Dam No. 3, its gates and lock, and $35,000 annually in installments quarterly in advance for repairs, maintenance, and operation of Dam No. 2, its gates and locks, it being understood that all necessary repairs, maintenance, and operation thereof shall be under the direction, care, and responsibility of the United States during the said 100-year lease period. The company, at its own expense, will make all necessary renewals and repairs incident to the efficient maintenance of the power houses, substructures, superstructures, machinery, and appliances appurtenant to said power houses, and will maintain the same in efficient operating condition.

This provision in the Ford offer has been strenuously criticized by the friends of the power companies and others opposed to the Ford offer. On this point I strongly rely on the statement of Major General Beach, Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, under whose supervision this dam was started and who has had wide experience in connection with such matters. He stated in his testimony before the committee "that the amount mentioned—$55,000—would be ample," and, further, in a letter under date of August 15, 1921, to Hon. A. W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, said "the average annual costs of maintenance and repairs for both Dams Nos. 2 and 3 for dams, locks, and gates during the lease period is estimated at $50,000 per annum." But what do the critics of this provision have to say when they read H. R. 6781, the bill which represents the very acme of all the efforts of the power companies to write a proposal equal to or better than Mr. Ford's in connection with the subject of repairs? I would refer you to section 12 and section 17 of their proposal. They say in connection with this matter what they are willing to do, and then at the end of the section they state that "the necessary repairs, maintenance, and operation of Dam No. 3 and the locks shall be under the direction, care, and responsibility of the United States and at its expense during the said 50-year lease period."

FREE POWER TO OPERATE LOCKS.

Fifth. He further proposes that at all times during the period of the lease of Dam No. 2 the company will furnish to the United States free of charge, to be delivered at any point on the lock grounds indicated by the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, electrical power to the amount necessary for the operation of the locks, but not in excess of 200 horsepower, and shall also furnish power for the same purpose at Dam No. 3, but not in excess of 100 horsepower.

This provision is simply a straightforward business proposition to hold the Government free from any expense in connection with the operation of the gates and locks which will be utilized to the benefit of navigation. It is one of the provisions of this proposal running solely for the benefit of the Government and is of no small consequence.

PROVIDES FOR SINKING FUND TO RETURN GOVERNMENT'S ORIGINAL INVESTMENT.

Sixth. He further proposes to provide a sinking fund covering the lease period, which at the end of the same will amortize to the Government the cost of completing Dam No. 2, the construction of Dam No. 3, and the cost of the flowage rights in connection therewith.

Personally I am not an accountant; I do not know how to calculate such matters, but I am willing to take the word of the Secretary of War, who says that it will do the job and sets up a table which shows that the Ford payments into the amortization fund will create during the lease period, at 4 per cent interest, a fund of $49,071,935; at 4½ per cent, $58,570,003; at 4½ per cent, $70,100,049; at 5 per cent—which could be secured by investing in Federal farm-loan bonds—$100,869,642; and at 6 per cent, $213,134,690. (House hearings, 1922, p. 7.)

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield? How much money does he pay into the sinking fund in the 100 years?

Mr. ALMON. An amount which, if the Government uses it at the rate of 4½ per cent, will amount to $70,000,000.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I asked the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKENZIE. Do not take up my time in that way. I want to say to the gentleman from Iowa that I am not an accountant. The gentleman is one. I will take the word of the Secretary of War, the Hon. John W. Weeks, who says that this proposition of Mr. Ford's will do the job, and if it does the job and puts the money back into the Treasury of the United States, why quibble about the per cent? [Applause.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. McKENZIE. No; I can not yield further. I would be delighted to yield if I could.

Mr. McSWAIN. If the gentleman will permit, I asked that question in the committee, being a new member of the committee, and I submitted it to the Federal Reserve Board's expert and actuary, to the Federal Farm Loan Board's expert and actuary, and to the actuary of the Bureau of Economics of the Department of Agriculture, and I have the calculations of all three of them, and all three agree that it will be more than $49,000,000.

Mr. McKENZIE. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will pardon me, I want to go on.

PAYS $5,000,000 CASH FOR NITRATE PLANTS.

Seventh. Mr. Ford further proposes to pay to the Government for the conditional conveyance to him or his company of all the property constituting nitrate plants Nos. 1 and 2, the Waco Quarry, and the Government's rights in the Gorgas steam power plant on the Warrior River, and its transmission lines, the sum of $5,000,000 in five annual installments, providing that the deeds to this property shall refer to or contain the provisions of his offer, and that these deeds shall be so drawn as to make these provisions covenants running with the land.

It is perhaps fair to say that this provision in the Ford proposal has been the occasion of more thoughtless comment than all the other provisions in the proposal. As a bald proposition, thinking only of dollars and cents, it is somewhat startling to say that we will convey to the man or a corporation for $5,000,000 property which has cost the Government nearly $84,000,000, and, unexplained, this would be sufficient to defeat any such proposal without debate. But what are the facts? The Ordnance Department estimates the sale value of this property at $16,272,000, and Gen. C. C. Williams, in commenting on this matter—page 19, House hearings—said the following:

The Ford offer from the standpoint of the Ordnance Department has the very important advantage of materially assisting in the development of nitrogen preparedness and has the disadvantages of conflicting with the contractual obligations with the American Cyanamid Co. and the Alabama Power Co., and of making a net return to the Government of less than $5,000,000 for properties which has an estimated salvage value of some $16,000,000.

The difference, $11,000,000, appears, therefore, to be the price which the United States is paying for nitrogen preparedness. If the plant is diverted to any purposes which do not include nitrogen fixation, this asset is lost to the Government.

NATIONAL NITROGEN PREPAREDNESS FOR 100 YEARS FOR $2,000,000.

That is not all, my colleagues, for we must consider that Gen. Lansing H. Beach, the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, has stated to the committee that to improve navigation alone at Muscle Shoals would cost about $8,000,000. If this amount is deducted from the $11,000,000, it will be seen that we are paying only $3,000,000 for national preparedness. So you see after all we should not be startled by the mere statement of war-time cost expressed in dollars and cents, which no longer is any indication of the actual value of the property. In order that you may not be deceived about this matter, let us see what actually happened in other great governmental enterprises started during the war—sometimes by patriots, sometimes by people perhaps controlled by selfish motives, but in every instance we can find much food for thought.

I wish to call your attention to the testimony of Gen. C. C. Williams, Chief of Ordnance, regarding the sale of the Old Hickory powder plant. Here was a war plant that cost $84,912,000. Some $5,708,000 worth of materials were transferred from the plant before it was sold, so its net cost was $79,204,000. Its salvage value was estimated by the ordnance office at $7,600,000, but when the Government undertook to get cash for it they received $3,505,000, and the plant was scrapped.

At the Nitro (W. Va.) powder plant we fare a little better, receiving, according to General Williams, some $8,551,000 for a plant that had cost us net about $58,000,000.

On the other hand, our wooden ships, which cost us $800,000 apiece, were sold for $5,000 each—a salvage of less than 1 per cent of their cost.

It is evident, my colleagues, that the $5,000,000 cash payment compares favorably with the amounts received for other Government war property, but in this case there are other considerations of such great importance that in comparison this $5,000,000 is a mere cash payment to bind the transaction.

OTHER CONSIDERATIONS BESIDES THE $5,000,000.

What else does he propose to do in addition to paying the $5,000,000?

First, he agrees to maintain nitrate plant No. 2 ready for immediate use by the Government for 100 years, but he does not limit his obligation to the maintenance of this plant in its present state of readiness, for he agrees to research improved processes and to adopt such processes as prove successful. He not only agrees to maintain the nitrate plant, therefore, but he agrees to maintain it in an up-to-date condition, and the offer therefor states that he will maintain nitrate plant No. 2 or its equivalent, which is only another way of saying that either this plant or a better plant of at least equal capacity shall be available for the immediate use of the Government for 100 years. How much will such an obligation cost Mr. Ford no one knows, beyond the undisputable fact that it will be a large sum of money, and it is undeniable that if the Government should undertake to maintain the plants the best we could hope for would be that the plant would be kept in approximately its present state of readiness.

The second thing which he proposes is an agreement to furnish the power and the funds to take care of the locks and dams. When it is realized that the cost of maintaining the navigation improvements at Muscle Shoals has amounted to nearly 50 per cent of their original cost since their completion in 1890, it is evident that this is a provision of constantly increasing value to the Federal Government.

As a third consideration he binds himself for a period of 100 years to manufacture fertilizers, either as unmixed nitrates or as nitrates mixed with the other commercial plant foods—phosphoric acid and potash—according to demand. As to the amount of the fertilizers to be produced, the annual tonnage must be sufficient to contain 40,000 tons of pure nitrogen, which is the present operating capacity of nitrate plant No. 2. This is sufficient nitrogen to make 250,000 tons of Chilean nitrate, or 2,000,000 tons of 2-8-2 mixed fertilizer, and he further agrees to submit his books for the purpose of auditing to a committee selected by the farm organizations of the country, whose duty it is to see to it that his profit in the manufacture and sale of these fertilizers shall not exceed 8 per cent of the fair actual annual cost of production thereof.

As a fourth consideration he agrees to pay 4 per cent on the cost of completing Dam No. 2 and completely building Dam No. 3, including the flowage rights at both dams for the entire lease period, with the exception of the first few years when the nitrate plant is in progress of development and reconstruction.

His fifth consideration is a provision of annual payments for the purpose of setting up a sinking fund, and by the simple expedient of investing these payments in Federal farm-loan bonds they will return to the Government during the lease period the entire cost of both dams with their locks and power houses.

As a sixth consideration he agrees that the dams shall become automatically the property of the Government at the end of his lease. He does not require that the Government shall buy his property, and there are no loopholes whereby "severance damages" or any other kind of damages may be claimed as a condition to the termination of his lease.

Seventh, it is provided that the sale is conditional, for the deeds to be executed and delivered to Mr. Ford are to be so drawn as to make the provisions of this proposal covenants running with the land. Therefore, in addition to the $10,000,000 paid-in capital, and in addition to the Government property which is already at Muscle Shoals, we have as security the large additional investment which Mr. Ford must make in plants to utilize the power, which adds to the security of the Government's interest in the contract.

Finally, in addition to all the usual legal remedies available to the Government for the enforcement of his contract, Mr. Ford removes legal obstacles and makes doubly sure the faithful performance of this contract by a specific agreement that in case of the violation of any of the terms of his proposal the Attorney General of the United States, upon request of the Secretary of War, may institute proceedings in equity for the purpose of canceling leases on both dams or remedying the violation by injunction, mandamus, or other process of law.

FORD OFFER NEVER ESSENTIALLY CHANGED.

In order that the interests of the parties should be preserved, the committee, without objection from Mr. Ford, rewrote much of the offer, but in no place has the committee changed any of the essential provisions of the proposal.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield? I simply want to know if the gentleman contends that Henry Ford is bound by this contract beyond the formation of the company?

Mr. McKENZIE. Absolutely.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Where?

Mr. McKENZIE. Read the bill. You have got time; sit down there at the desk and read it.

Furthermore, gentlemen, I wish to say that at the time of the preparation of this proposal the Judge Advocate General of the United States Army took part in the preparation of the offer and saw to it that the interests of the Government were safeguarded in all particulars. The very fact that Mr. Ford worked in cooperation with the representatives of the legal arm of the Military Establishment made it evident that he had no intention of taking any undue advantage of the Government in any way.

REASON FOR THE "MADDEN AMENDMENT."

These are the essential provisions of the Ford offer, which has stood for nearly three years as the only proposal for the Muscle Shoals project fully providing for carrying out the policy of the Government as expressed in the national defense act, but there was an obstacle in the way of our acceptance of this offer. Mr. Ford recognized, as did the representatives of the power companies, that it was absolutely essential to the successful operation of the Muscle Shoals plant to have an auxiliary steam-power plant of reasonable size located conveniently, with respect to coal and water, in order to furnish economically the additional electrical power to carry on the operations at Muscle Shoals during periods of low water on the Tennessee River.

Mr. Ford is a business man, as are also the representatives of the Alabama Power Co.; and they all recognize the fact that it would be far cheaper to build the plant in the coal fields and transmit the current over wires rather than to haul the coal by rail from the coal fields to Muscle Shoals, and for that reason he included in his proposal the taking over of the Government's interest in the Alabama Power Co.'s Gorgas steam plant on the Warrior River.

It is also true that there was some question in the minds of some Members of Congress as to whether or not the contract entered into between the Government and the Alabama Power

Co. covering the Government's interest in this particular plant was a legal contract, and in the report of the committee in the last Congress the proposal was reported to the House with that part eliminated with the understanding that it was a matter which we felt should be determined by the whole membership. However, the bill reported in the last Congress was not reached for consideration, and during the recess of Congress the interest of the Government in this plant, located in the coal fields, was sold by the Secretary of War to the Alabama Power Co.

As I have stated, Mr. Ford informed our committee during the present session of Congress that his offer still stood, but his offer included the Government's interest in the Gorgas plant which had been sold, and it was obvious that we were not in position to accept his proposal which he had made for acceptance as a whole and not in part. Finding that he was willing to stand by his offer after an equivalent steam plant equally well located was provided, Mr. MADDEN proposed the so-called Madden amendment to be found in section 19 of the bill which is before us. This provides for the acquiring of a site on the Warrior River in the coal fields, together with a right of way for a transmission line to Muscle Shoals, and applying on the cost of same no more than the amount received from the Alabama Power Co. for the Government's interest in the Gorgas plant which Mr. Ford had included in his original offer.

The committee, seeing the necessity for this auxiliary plant, and having especially in mind the need for such a plant to reduce at least to a reasonable extent the cost of power to be used in the manufacture of fertilizer, feels that this amendment should be agreed to, or otherwise the whole proposal falls.

OTHER AMENDMENTS.

It might be pertinent at this point to say that several other amendments were adopted by the committee, to all of which Mr. Ford has given his approval. Notice especially section 23 of the present bill, which binds Mr. Ford personally, together with his heirs, representatives, and assigns, and also the amendment providing for the payment of interest on all money expended on Dam No. 2 since the date of the presenting of his proposal, April 31, 1922.

FORD OFFER NOT A SUBSIDY.

I wish to call to your attention the oft-repeated charge that this is a proposition to give to Mr. Ford a large subsidy by the way of surplus power as a reward for his producing fertilizer for the farmers. In other words, it has been charged that we are subsidizing Mr. Ford in the interest of the farmers of the country and at the expense of all the rest of the people of the country. I do not wish to take much of your time in discussing a proposition which, to my mind, is perfectly absurd. When I remember that we have expended more than a billion of dollars on the inland waterways of our country, $90,000,000 having been spent on the Ohio River alone and much more ought to be expended if we wish to make it a real navigable stream, all without any return to the Government. In this proposal of Mr. Ford, on the other hand, he assumes all the liabilities and responsibilities that I have mentioned and pays 4 per cent on the cost of the dams which are to produce the power, in addition to providing for the return to the Government of the entire cost of the dams, locks, and power plants. To call such a proposal a subsidy, to my mind, is to ignore its terms and to refuse to see the plain facts in the case. I want to submit, however, the testimony of a few distinguished gentlemen who are now found on the outskirts—standing in the background as snipers, shooting at this proposition the most vicious charges of subsidy or largess—they have used largess in the views of the minority, and I suppose that is a meaner word than subsidy, but I am certain, however, that my friend from Iowa can probably explain just what it means.

Now, let us see what they have to say:

> In our opinion, it amounts to a gift of enormous property and industrial advantage to a private citizen from the resources of the United States. No government, and especially no democracy, can single out for special favor any individual or group of individuals without grave wrong, injustice, and scandal.
> We do not think it just or wise or proper for a government to bestow largess upon individuals, no matter how great or good or beneficent or efficient they may be.

MINORITY FURNISHED HOUSE NO COMPARATIVE FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

It is all very well to talk about an enormous gift and special favor and call the acceptance of the Ford offer subsidy or Government largess, but mark well that the minority wisely refrained from including in their report a comparative financial statement showing the returns to the Government under the Ford offer and under the offer of the Alabama Power Co. and its associates, which they state is better than Mr. Ford's.

FORD OFFER RETURNS $535,000 PER ANNUM MORE THAN NEAREST COMPETITOR.

It is not my intention to go into details with regard to Mr. Ford's payments. That will be considered by others who will follow me in this discussion, but I do want to state that on a most conservative basis the comparison given in the majority report no longer represents the situation since the power companies' friends have come forward with their latest bill of February 8, 1924 (H. R. 6781). In the light of this, their most recent effort, it is evident that in 50 years the returns to the Government under the power companies' offer will be about $146,000,000, or an average return per annum of $2,915,000, while under the Ford offer the total returns for 100 years are about $345,000,000, an average of $3,450,000 per year, so that there is an annual financial gain by accepting the Ford offer not of $235,000 per year, as stated in the majority report, but of $535,000 per year. Please notice, my colleagues, that we do not compare the totals in these two offers, but we compare the average annual return under the two offers, which we believe, under the circumstances, is the only fair way of making the comparison. Is it not, then, absurd to cry "subsidy" in accepting an offer which returns half a million dollars per year to the Government over its nearest competitor?

It is perhaps true that the representatives of the great Chilean nitrate trust are somewhat disturbed over this matter and charge "subsidy" and "largess," but, gentlemen, let that be as it may. For one, I feel that in attempting to have this proposal enacted into law we are not handing Mr. Ford a subsidy but we are making it possible for a man with the money and the organization to take hold of this great enterprise and really accomplish something in the interest of the people of our country who are engaged in agriculture. Surely we could not be charged with committing a crime; surely we could not be charged as participating in a scandal if it should develop that Mr. Ford should happen to reduce the price of fertilizer to the farmers of this country 25 to 50 per cent. I always doubted that to some extent, but I have already submitted for your consideration the testimony given before our committee by some of the gentlemen who are now standing in the background shouting "Defeat the Ford offer! It may be a scandal!" and things of that sort.

As we pointed out in the majority report of the committee, even if the acceptance of the Ford offer does not result in a reduction in the price of fertilizer to the farmers of the country by 25 per cent or 50 per cent, but merely has the effect of eliminating the import duty on Chilean nitrate, the saving to American consumers, based on last year's record, would amount to the tidy sum of $1,100,000,000 in 100 years.

SCORES OF LARGE WATER POWERS ON NONNAVIGABLE STREAMS FAR LESS REGULATED.

There are others who charge, perhaps, that this is a scheme to give Mr. Ford an undue advantage in the industrial world by permitting him to use the surplus power not employed in the manufacture of fertilizer to be used in the production of articles which might go into the homes of our country. They say he should be compelled to distribute this power under State regulation, but how many thousands of water-power owners, large and small, are located on our streams who, merely because these streams have been held to be nonnavigable, enjoy their perpetual rights, free from any regulation, and use the power in their own business? Such, for example, are the large developments of the Aluminum Co. of America, at Niagara Falls and on the Little Tennessee River and the Yadkin River in North Carolina.

WHY NOT HAVE CHEAPER ALUMINUM?

It has been said by some that Mr. Ford expects to engage in the manufacture of aluminum. If this should happen, I have no doubt that the Aluminum Trust of this country, which is organized from the ground roots up to the polished dish that goes on your kitchen table for your good wife to use, will say that we are giving Mr. Ford a subsidy, but will the great mass of the people of the country object seriously if Mr. Ford should engage in the production of aluminum and it should turn out that our wives would be enabled to buy an aluminum tea pot for a little less money than we have to pay to-day? God forbid any such thing as that might happen.

Now, what is another charge that is made. It is said, and vociferously reiterated, that Mr. Ford does not expect to manufacture fertilizer unless he can manufacture it at a profit of 8 per cent, and that if he can not manufacture it at a profit of 8 per cent then he will not manufacture it at all.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, there is not any truth in the statement he does not propose, because he does propose, the manufacture of fertilizer, whether he makes anything or not, and never proposes to charge more than 8 per cent. [Applause.]

Mr. McKENZIE. I am coming to that point.

FORD DOES GUARANTEE TO MAKE FERTILIZER—HIS OFFER NOT CONDITIONAL ON HIS ABILITY TO MAKE 8 PER CENT OR ANY OTHER PER CENT.

Now, my colleagues, I am sure that you do not feel that those of us who have been on the committee listening to all of this discussion claim to be possessed of an unusual amount of human wisdom, but I sincerely trust that you do have some faith in our integrity when it comes to the consideration of a question of such general interest to the people of our country. One of the questions to which was given perhaps the most serious consideration of all the provisions of this proposal was the proposition contained in section 14 of the bill covering the manufacture of fertilizer. I am not a college graduate; perhaps I was unfortunate in not having had such an opportunity, but I do believe that in spite of that deficiency I can read intelligently the English language. I have read section 14 and I am absolutely convinced that there are no words in the English language that could be added which would strengthen this provision.

More than that, I have not relied entirely on my own knowledge in connection with these matters, nor have the other members of the committee. We have the testimony of the Judge Advocate General, Colonel Hull, who said before our committee in discussing Mr. Ford's obligation to make fertilizers under his offer:

He would have to do it unless relieved by Congress or a court of equity.

Mr. PARKER. But it says "other causes beyond his control," and the price of the goods on the market would be beyond his control?

Colonel HULL. As I said, in my judgment, the courts would not hold that price would be "other causes beyond his control."

In addition to that, I want to call another witness, Prof. Thorndike Saville.

Professor Saville, according to his testimony before our committee, is the associate professor of hydraulic and sanitary engineering at the University of North Carolina; he is also hydraulic engineer for the North Carolina Geological and Economic Survey. He was graduated from Harvard University with the degree of bachelor of arts; from Dartmouth College with the degree of civil engineer; from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology with the degree of master of science, and from Harvard University with the degree of master of science. No one can successfully claim that Professor Saville has lacked opportunity for obtaining higher education.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has consumed one hour.

Mr. McKENZIE. I will yield myself, Mr. Chairman, 10 minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman's time will be extended 10 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. McKENZIE. I asked Professor Saville the following questions:

Do you make it as a positive statement that Henry Ford will not manufacture fertilizer at Muscle Shoals unless he can make 8 per cent?

Mr. SAVILLE. I have that statement from the minority opinion on the testimony before the committee last year, if I remember, by Representative KEARNS.

Mr. McKENZIE. Have you read the bill?

Mr. SAVILLE. Yes, sir; I have read the bill.

Mr. McKENZIE. What do you say about that language in there? You are a graduate from Harvard University, the Institute of Technology, and so on, and what do you say about the language, as to whether he is required to make a profit at all?

Mr. SAVILLE. I say the language is indefinite; he does not commit himself.

Mr. McKENZIE. Please tell us. That is what we want to get at. If that is indefinite, we want to know. Just read section 14, if you please, to the committee and then point out to us, if you can, where that is indefinite.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield there for a brief question?

Mr. McKENZIE. If it is a very brief one.

Mr. BEGG. It is. I have just got through reading section 14 and I agree with the gentleman. Suppose he does not do it. Suppose the man falls down because he can not do it at the price, then what does the Government get out of it?

Mr. McKENZIE. He forfeits his lease.

Mr. BEGG. Where is that?

Mr. McKENZIE. Read the section.

Mr. BEGG. I have read it.

Mr. McKENZIE. Do not take my time by telling what you have done; just read it.

Mr. Saville then read section 14.

Mr. McKENZIE. Now, in section 15 is the other provision about the 8 per cent.

Mr. McSWAIN. I think, in fairness, he ought to read that, too.

Mr. SAVILLE. In order that farmers and other users of fertilizers may be supplied with fertilizers at fair prices and without excessive profits, the company agrees that the maximum net profit which it shall make in the manufacture and sale of fertilizer products shall not exceed 8 per cent of the fair actual annual cost of production thereof.

Mr. McKENZIE. I think that is far enough. Now, what is your criticism of that language; wherein is it indefinite?

PROFESSOR SAVILLE BACKS UP.

Mr. SAVILLE. The language recounted in the bill is not indefinite; no, sir.

Mr. McKENZIE. Then why did you make the statement?

Mr. SAVILLE. I will retract the statement that the language is indefinite.

My colleagues, this argument against section 14 is a mere subterfuge. In fact every argument that has been brought forward to throw discredit on the Ford proposal has had behind it but one purpose and that was the purpose of delaying and eventually defeating the proposal of Mr. Ford.

INCONSISTENCY OF OPPONENTS.

Two years ago the Alabama Power Co. did not contend so much against the Ford offer as a whole, but they contended that we had no right to convey to Mr. Ford the Government's interest in the Gorgas Warrior River plant and on that ground they made their fight. How inconsistent the position of many of these parties! Two years ago they contended that Mr. Ford could not perform under his proposed contract—to-day they contend that what they said two years ago was a mistake, that it is possible now for him to make fertilizers and deliver them to the farmer at half or even less than half their present cost. But they argue that even though he agrees to do this it is against the interests of the Government to accept his offer because they say that he will not distribute any of the surplus power but will use it all himself. So they have endeavored to turn the people of the cities and towns of that region against the Ford offer by telling them that if Mr. Ford's proposal is accepted the Muscle Shoals power will not be distributed. Apparently they have forgotten the fact that the only statement that Mr. Ford himself has ever made regarding the distribution of power from Muscle Shoals was sent broadcast throughout the country by the newspapers on October 11, of last year, a statement which contained the following significant announcement:

My offer is still before Congress. I shall not withdraw it • • • but I want to say this: If I get Muscle Shoals, we shall run power lines 200 miles in every direction from Muscle Shoals. We have been working and have learned how to send power long distances without loss by leakage.

FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION'S AGENTS' INTOLERABLE ATTITUDE.

In all these efforts to bring about delay the representatives of the power companies have been assisted and supported by the representatives of the Federal Power Commission, and that opposition is understood on the ground that this little bureau, which is a creature of Congress, desires to have within its power all of the water-power developments of the country. What a strange situation this suggests; that this puny creature, created by Congress, now attempts to say to its creator, "You do not know how to handle this proposition; let us do it; we are bureaucrats; we know how to guard the people's interests, because that is something we are taught when we become bureaucrats."

Gentlemen of the House, has the time come in this great country of ours when the Congress of the United States must surrender its function of deciding great public questions of national policy to a few bureaucrats here in Washington? If we have arrived at that point when the autocratic dictates of bureaucracy are such that Congress can no longer, as the representatives of the people, undertake to legislate in the people's interest, then it is about time to abolish some of these bureaus and to get rid of some of those autocrats.

WHAT MAY BE EXPECTED IF FORD OFFER IS DEFEATED.

What will be the result, my colleagues, if we listen to the song of these gentlemen in the bureau and the more urgent demands of the power companies who have had their eagle eyes upon this particular spot for lo, these many years? I will tell you what will happen. The great nitrate plant that was erected on the theory that it was to be for the defense of our country in time of war will deteriorate and fall into ruin. The Tennessee River will continue to be a nonnavigable stream. Dam No. 2 will be finally completed; the water will be flowing over the dam. Congress will be appropriating hundreds of thousands of dollars to take care of the project, and again the cry will rise, "What shall we do?" Then I can see in my mind's eye now the representatives of these power companies coming down to this little bureau on the Avenue, taking out a license under the Federal Water Power Commission, and a wire will be brought in and attached and the current will start out from that wire, and the profits will begin to flow into the coffers of the power companies in this country. Then the minority may perhaps be justified in their intimation that some special interests may be favored, and the results may lead to scandal. Gentlemen, scandal can not arise if we act openly here, above board, and let the people know exactly what is being done and for their interest; but if we fail to act and let this thing drift until it falls into the hands of some irresponsible representative of a bureau here, God knows what will happen! Such things as that are what bring about scandal.

A REVIEW OF THE OPPOSING FORCES.

My colleagues, just let us see if we can get a clear picture of the people favoring this proposition and those opposing it.

On the one hand we have the great agricultural and labor interests of the country, the people who toil from morning until night—the toilers of this country—then there is that great class of people who are interested in the development of the inland waterways of our country that are back of this proposition.

Opposed to it are the representatives of the power companies of the South. I am not criticizing them for being opposed to it, for in selling power they make a livelihood and pay dividends to their stockholders, that is their business. If they can defeat the Ford offer and get the power themselves they are not to be criticized, that is their business. Then who else is opposed to it? Why, the electric bonding corporation who handle the stocks and bonds of the power companies of the country, and sell them at a nice fat commission. Then the General Electric Co. is opposed to it. Why? They are interested in selling to all corporations developing water power all the electrical instruments, machinery, and so forth, that they use in their business. Probably they could not do business with Mr. Ford.

Then, the mayor of Mobile seems to be opposed to it. He is opposed to it because he wants the power taken down to Mobile.

Then, there is a gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. W. B. Cole, a very estimable gentleman, who believes this great national stream should be held tightly in the grasp of a few people.

Then, there is our good friend Mr. Frazier, from Selma, Ala., who stated before the committee the reason he was opposed to the Ford offer was because if a man came into Selma with a basket of tomatoes he would flood the market. Mr. Frazier earnestly advocated the transmission of the Muscle Shoals power to Selma so that they could develop a great town there and sell all the tomatoes that this gentleman might have to sell. But I want to say very frankly, and with due regard for the feelings of the gentlemen who live locally in that country, that the people of the United States as a whole are not particularly interested whether tomatoes are sold at Selma or at Muscle Shoals. Furthermore, they are not particularly interested in whether the factory in Birmingham, or in Chicago, or in Boston, or Muscle Shoals is giving employment to the workingmen of this country. What they are interested in is that the men shall have work. More than that they are interested in the success of agriculture; they are willing and anxious that the farmer shall have a fair living profit, and that can be done in many sections by only giving the farmer an opportunity to purchase cheaper fertilizer.

GOVERNMENT OPERATION THE ALTERNATIVE.

Permit me to repeat what I have said on former occasions: Two courses are open—one, Government ownership and operation, which in view of the character of the project would mean in the judgment of the majority of the committee not only the failure from the standpoint of income but disaster to the hopes of the farmers and other users of commercial fertilizer. To have the Government undertake to engage in the manufacture of fertilizer ingredients with political superintendents, foremen, and straw bosses is unthinkable, and to undertake such a scheme would be unspeakable folly.

The alternative course is to sell the tangible property to private individuals or to a corporation on conditions prescribed by Congress, lease the power at a fair rental, and permit individual American initiative and ingenuity to have an opportunity at this place, where a great water power can be developed, requiring the preservation of the element of national defense and at the same time giving an opportunity for relief, if such there can be, to not only the Southland but our entire country in the way of commercial fertilizer at reasonable prices.

ACCEPTANCE OF FORD OFFER RECOMMENDED.

Is this possible? Does the Ford proposal promise such a consummation? We feel that it does, or at least it is the only proposal yet made by anyone that even gives ground for hope. While some may believe that it is not entirely free from objections, his offer is of such great potential possibilities that the committee feels assured that action by Congress will be prompt and a final and satisfactory adjustment of the matter will be reached.

OPPOSITION OFFERS DEFECTIVE.

The question has been asked by many, Why did not the committee give more extended consideration to some of the other offers submitted? To this query I simply wish to say that the committee did give serious consideration to all proposals submitted. However, as I have said, none of the offers included all of the elements which the committee felt were necessary in order to conserve the Government's interest properly.

Even the last word on this matter, represented in H. R. 6781, introduced into the House by the gentleman from Iowa after the filing of the majority report on the Ford proposal, does not provide for the maintenance of nitrate plant No. 2 except at the expense of the Government and, as pointed out heretofore, is objectionable in many particulars. Personally, I have never been impressed with the sincerity of any of these proposals, with the exception of the offer of Mr. Levering, which I am willing to concede is in good faith, and the proposal of the Hooker-Atterbury-White combination, which is a frank admission that the Government should stand all expenditures and the bidders simply share in the profits.

PRESS CARRIED DECEPTIVE STORIES.

It is not strange, my colleagues, that you ask "Why not more consideration for other offers?" in view of the publicity given to the opposition. Studied interviews have been conceived in the minds of the opponents of the Ford offer and have been published under the guise of news, such as the one entitled "New Scandal Feared: Shoals Sale Opposed." In this article the public was informed that a warning to the effect that—

> The leasing or sale of the Government's nitrate and power properties at Muscle Shoals, Ala., to private interests might develop another great national scandal comparable to that of the Fall-Denby oil leases last night caused a decided change in the attitude of Congress toward the disposition of the Muscle Shoals project. (Washington Herald, February 10, 1924.)

Such a falsehood is an insult to every Member of this House, particularly to those who have studied this case and who know and have reported the facts. I repeat what I said before—there can be no scandal if we settle this matter here in the open with every man voting according to his convictions, but if we leave this great national policy to some little autocratic bureau to settle, then we may properly beware of scandal.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. I yield myself five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will proceed for five additional minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. McKENZIE. You also perhaps noticed the headlines put on the interview given out at the time the views of the minority were filed, which interview was given out by the Associated Press, "McKenzie bill makes great gift to Ford," which appeared in the great metropolitan dailies, including the Chicago Tribune.

There was method behind all of this. In particular the interview headed, "Offer $100,000,000 for Muscle Shoals"—New York Times, January 10, 1924—was obviously intended to convey to the minds of the people of this country that Mr. Ford was to get this property for $5,000,000, while these generous and patriotic power companies stood willing and ready to pay $100,000,000 for it.

Such information given to the American people has only one purpose, and that is to deceive them. The purpose of the deception is to start a propaganda having the defeat of the Ford offer in mind, and this is the object which the power companies have been striving for from the beginning.

These latest proposals were not presented until the committee resumed consideration of the Ford offer, from which I assume that the power companies had concluded that the Ford offer was forever dead, due to the sale of the Gorgas plant. Upon realizing that it was still alive they rushed in with ill-considered and fantastic propositions and proceeded to bolster them up with an evidently willing press, for no other purpose, in my judgment, than to delay and ultimately defeat the Ford offer. Having accomplished this their next move would clearly be to defeat the purposes of Congress in making the development—get their corporation fingers onto the power dam—use the power for their own purposes, thereby ignoring the farmer and his interests, interests which are conserved and provided for under the Ford offer.

Personally, I feel that it is to the credit of the intelligence of the members of the Committee on Military Affairs that they refused to give a willing ear to the representatives of these interests whose purpose is plain to any thinking man.

THE PROOF OF INSINCERITY.

To prove the insincerity of these gentlemen all you need to do is to read the concluding paragraphs in the views of the minority, where they virtually recommended to Congress that their own proposal be turned down.

OUR NATIONAL NECESSITY.

In conclusion, let us stop just for a moment and see if, in our imagination, we can get a clear perspective of the meaning of this whole matter. Muscle Shoals is located on the Tennessee River, one of the great rivers of our country, in the northern part of the State of Alabama. Stretching for hundreds of miles to the south and east, as far as there is land, are the great cotton fields which have clothed America for years, and from long-continued cultivation the soil has become impoverished in fertility. To the north and east for hundreds of miles stretch the lands which have been cultivated for three centuries. Here, too, the soil has become impoverished and abandoned and deserted farms are a familiar sight. Turning to the north and westward are the great fertile plains of Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Wisconsin, and the Dakotas, which have not yet been so impoverished. In the cotton fields of the South and in the agricultural districts of the North and Northeast commercial fertilizer is a necessity. Gradually but surely the virgin elements of the fertile plains and prairies of the great West and North are becoming depleted and the soils of these States are now requiring more and more fertilizer as the years go by. [Applause.]

Having this in mind, forgetting that Muscle Shoals is in the South, forgetting all provincial interest, thinking only of our Nation as a great family, having in mind the welfare of all, shall we listen to the selfish interests which are fighting this proposal and reject the only plan which offers permanent and substantial relief to the farmers and dash their well-founded hopes to the ground?

NOT AN ORDINARY BILL.

Finally, my colleagues, this is not an ordinary bill, which can be amended by the House at will. True, we have the power, but you must remember that this is a proposal for a contract unique in its character and made possible only by one occupying the unique position of Mr. Ford.

When he submitted his proposal, which all must concede was made in good faith, he said:

> The above proposals are submitted for acceptance as a whole and not in part.

Now, my colleagues, it is up to you to accept this proposal or reject it as it stands, and an amendment to alter its terms is a motion to reject it as a whole. We are confronted today with one of the greatest problems before our country. Shall we listen to the objections of selfish and interested parties and cast this whole matter into the discard with the foolish thought that by so doing we shall have made an end of the matter? Or shall we, as representatives of the great people, rise to the occasion, give our approval to the proposal, relieve our Government from the ever-continuing and increasing expense in connection with this subject, provide for the national defense, encourage agriculture, and open up this great inland waterway as a highway for the commerce of our country?

CONCLUSION.

It is a serious moment, my colleagues, and in conclusion let me say that having in mind, not our personal welfare, but the welfare of the generations which are to succeed us, may God grant that on this proposition we may be guided by patriotism, wisdom, and prudence. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS].

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] who has just taken his seat has vigorously denounced the false propaganda that has been broadcasted throughout the country in regard to the Ford offer for Muscle Shoals. I want to join in this denunciation and call to the attention of the country the malicious falsehoods that have been told here and there and everywhere about this very remarkable proposal that Mr. Ford makes for the Government activities at Muscle Shoals. I want to denounce, too, as being false from beginning to end many of the statements that have been made on the floor of this House by members of this committee relative to what the Ford proposal really is. Even the gentleman who has just taken his seat made the very startling declaration that—

> Mr. Ford, if he gets Muscle Shoals, is going to make fertilizer for the farmers of the United States that will be sold cheaper to them than they have ever bought fertilizer before.

Surely the distinguished gentleman does not get this information from the proposal made by Mr. Ford or the evidence that was taken in these hearings. If there is such information as this anywhere at all, it is most emphatically found outside of the record made in this case, because the proposal does not make any such a recital, nor does the evidence substantiate such a statement.

Let us read the paragraph in the Ford offer that deals with the manufacture of nitrates. This paragraph is taken from the Ford proposal itself and is very illuminating, indeed, upon this subject. It is as follows:

> Since the manufacture, sale, and distribution of commercial fertilizers to farmers and other users thereof constitute one of the principal considerations of this offer, the company expressly agrees that continuously throughout the lease period, except as it may be prevented by reconstruction of the plant itself, or by war, strikes, accidents, fires, or other causes beyond its control, it will manufacture nitrogen and other commercial fertilizers, mixed or unmixed, and with or without filler, according to demand, at nitrate plant No. 2 or its equivalent, or at such other plant or plants adjacent or near thereto as it may construct, using the most economical source of power available.

The above paragraph is an exact recital of the fertilizer clause found in section 14 of the proposal. This section must be read in connection with section 15, because it is modified by the language employed in this latter section. Listen to the further provision for the manufacture of fertilizer at that plant:

> * * * the company agrees that the maximum net profits which it shall make in the manufacture and sale of fertilizer products shall not exceed 8 per cent of the fair actual annual cost of production thereof.

Suppose that a charge of 8 per cent profit on the investment makes the fertilizer cost the farmers more than the farmers could afford to pay; then in that case there would be no "demand," and therefore there would be no need of making fertilizer. In that event Mr. Ford would not be required to make fertilizer under his contract, because he only agrees to make it at a profit of 8 per cent to himself, "according to demand." If the process of manufacturing fertilizer at Muscle Shoals would prove too expensive, then there would be no demand, and Mr. Ford would be relieved of his contract, because he only agrees to manufacture in such amounts as the demand may require. This clause in the contract leaves a loophole which, it seems to me, the lawyers of this House should be astute enough to detect. If they were drawing this contract for a client in private life, not one of them would allow his client to part with such valuable property under such a loose arrangement as this. I want to tell you that this leaves a hole in the contract through which a blind man could drive a four-horse team and never have a collision. And yet the proponents of this bill proclaim to the country that they are looking after the interests of the farmers. [Applause.] Amend this offer so that fertilizer must be manufactured, or upon a failure to do so the lease of the dams shall be at once canceled and the title to the 4,000 acres of land revert to the United States.

I am not opposed to Mr. Ford getting Muscle Shoals; but when he gets it I want him to get it under a contract that will compel him to do the things that the farmers are being promised, or else, in the event that he fails, the contract shall have in it a recapture clause by which the people can get back this gigantic and valuable property that belongs to them.

Remember this lease of the water power is for 100 years, and Mr. Ford can only live a comparatively short period of that time, and, after he is gone, into what unconscionable hands it may fall I do not know and neither do you. Amend this bill by putting in a clause that will return this property to its rightful owners, the people of the United States, in case the lessees some day may take advantage of this loophole and refuse to make fertilizer.

I want to tell the proponents of this proposal that if this contract is let to Mr. Ford unamended in any way the Teapot Dome scandal will pale into insignificance in comparison to this theft of Muscle Shoals from the people of the United States. If you will amend this bill so that it will be honest, I would be glad for Mr. Ford to get it and would gladly vote for it, but I am not going to barter away the rights of the people of this country. When it is too late the farmers will waken up to the fact that they have been handed a lemon.

It has been heralded to the country that Mr. Ford beyond the peradventure of a doubt will make cheap fertilizer for the farmer, and besides this he will sell at reasonable price the balance of that power down there to the consuming public, not a word of which is true, and those who send this out to the country must know of its falsity.

Because of this false propaganda sent throughout the United States to deceive the farmer and others interested there ought to be some committee appointed to investigate the source of all this information and to learn why such falsehoods are being broadcasted throughout the United States.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEARNS. No; I am sorry, but I can not.

Mr. RANKIN. I want to ask the gentleman a question right on that point.

Mr. KEARNS. I do not care to be discourteous, but I can not yield. Each one of you received on your desk yesterday a letter signed by one of the leading men of the Farm Bureau of this city, and this paragraph is contained in that letter. This letter goes out to the farmers in the United States, purporting to speak the truth, yet it is false in every detail. I do not know who actually wrote this letter, but the author must have known of its falsity. I do not know what compelling influence is actuating the writers throughout the country to spread propaganda of this character. I do know it can not be in the interest of the farmers of this country, because it is false, deceitful, and misleading. The following are parts of two paragraphs to which I refer found in this letter that I have mentioned and are copied therefrom verbatim:

The annual expenditures of the farmers for fertilizer are $350,000,000.

Opponents and advocates of his proposal both have testified that it will save the farmers at least half of this bill, or $175,000,000 annually.

That statement is not true. The opponents of this bill have never at any time conceded that there would be any savings in the fertilizer bill to the farmers of this country, because Mr. Ford says himself that he will make fertilizer if he can, and if he can not, he will not. So much for that.

I am reading now from the other paragraph in this letter of which I have made mention:

In addition to this saving in fertilizer, the plan of this proposal offers another great benefit to agriculture in the substitution of electric power for human labor, both in the home and on the farm.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. MORIN. I yield the gentleman additional time.

Mr. KEARNS. I do not know where the writer of this letter gets his authority for such a bold statement as this, but I do know he does not get it from either the proposal or the evidence in this case, and that is the only source of information we have.

Now, let me read what Mr. Ford's representative, Mr. Mayo, said on this same subject when he appeared before the Military Affairs Committee of the House when this bill was under consideration. This is what he said Mr. Ford is going to do with electricity, and Mr. Mayo is Mr. Ford's accredited representative. Mr. Ford has never spoken to the committee one way or the other, but sent Mr. Mayo to speak for him. Mr. Mayo speaks as follows, and his testimony will be found on this subject in volume 1 of these hearings, commencing on page 243:

The CHAIRMAN. He proposes to use all the power himself?

Mr. MAYO. He expects to.

Again, on page 262, Mr. Mayo testified as follows:

Mr. MAYO. Mr. Ford intends to use that power himself. It is not a question of selling the power.

On page 286 will be found the following testimony:

Q. Does Mr. Ford put very much stress on this clause relating to after the 100-year period?—A. I think so. He will have built up a plant to consume all the power, and if you took the power away from him the plant would have no value.

Mr. Chairman, the foregoing testimony is only a small part of similar statements that were made by Mr. Ford's representative on the subject of what he intends to do with Muscle Shoals provided this offer is accepted. This testimony is recited for two purposes—first, to disclose that Mr. Ford has no intention of selling power or electricity to any of the farmers or industries of the South.

That he does not intend to sell the farmer electricity to light his house, to grind his feed for his stock, or to run his tractors or to light cities or dwellings or to turn the wheels of the industries of that great section of our country is clearly proven by the evidence. If he gets it, however, the industries of this section of the United States will be idle because of lack of power, as he will use it all himself. [Applause.]

I recite this testimony to show you how false and malicious are the many misstatements that have been made on this subject. I am trying to give you the facts from an unprejudiced standpoint. It is recited to show that Mr. Ford is going to use all of this power in the manufacture of whatever suits his fancy at his own plant, and unrestrained and unhampered by any commission or other authority, either State or Federal. This power was placed in the Tennessee River at this point that it might be used by and for the benefit of all the people and not one favored man. This Congress has no right to set aside the great scheme of the Creator of the universe and thwart His plans by giving this great opportunity to one man, and that man the richest in all the world.

There is a plan by which he can get it, but this is not the plan. Why not be honest with the House and the country? [Applause.]

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEARNS. Yes.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. If Mr. Ford takes all of the power there, what States other than Alabama can get any benefit from it?

Mr. KEARNS. No other State can get any benefit from it, and no part of Alabama will be benefited except the plant at Muscle Shoals. Every other industry in Alabama and all the South will suffer from the want of power. There will be one great industry at Muscle Shoals, but the rest of the State and the South will be dead for want of hydroelectric energy. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FROTHINGHAM] is quite right in his observation.

So you see from the testimony that the farmer is not to have his machinery driven by power from Muscle Shoals or the housewife's work done by this same power or their buildings lighted. [Applause.]

Referring again to the part of the paragraph recited in this letter to which I have made mention, to wit:

The annual expenditures of the farmers for fertilizers are $350,000,000.

Opponents and advocates of his proposal both have testified that it will save the farmers at least half of this bill, or $175,000,000 annually.

As I said before, the author of that statement did not get his information from the record, because the record nowhere discloses such amazing testimony. Let us see what the testimony does show. Again Mr. Mayo testified on the subject of making fertilizer, and I quote some of the testimony on this subject. Commencing at page 245 will be found this testimony that so flatly contradicts the above-quoted statement. [Applause.]

Q. I will simply speak of it as nitrate, which can be produced at Muscle Shoals, and I understand you to say that as long as it is profitable or can be produced without a loss Mr. Ford would be glad to continue to produce that product?

Mr. MAYO. Yes, sir.

Q. And I think you stated it very correctly when you said that it is a fair assumption that if it was being produced at a loss it would only be a matter of time when even Mr. Ford, with all his wealth, would go out of business, and therefore the element of profit or the cost of manufacture has to be taken into consideration?

Mr. MAYO. Yes, sir.

Again, on page 254, is the following testimony:

Q. If found by Mr. Ford, after the starting of operations, that he can not produce ammonium nitrate in competition with the wholesale market price of the same materials from other sources, do you understand that his agreement binds him to continue the operation of the plant for nitrogen compounds at a loss?

Mr. MAYO. I do not think so.

Q. It would not bind him to continue?

Mr. MAYO. I hardly think so.

Again, on page 255, in response to a question, Mr. Mayo said:

Mr. MAYO. The only reason for him to discontinue (fertilizer) would be his actual inability to manufacture at a profit.

Again, at page 309, this testimony is found:

Q. What does that mean—that he does not have to do it (manufacture fertilizer)?

Mr. MAYO. In my opinion, he would not have to do it (manufacture fertilizer), as I have said before, if he exhausted every known effort and still could not make it except at a great loss.

Q. He could make it, whether he makes it at a profit or not, could he not?

Mr. MAYO. I do not think he could do it very long.

[Applause.]

I only recite this to show you that Mr. Ford does not know for a certainty that he can make fertilizer at Muscle Shoals and that he will not make it unless he can make it at a profit to himself, as stated in his proposal.

I am making this speech from the record in this case in order that the farmers of this country in after years may know that some of us did not deceive them but told them the truth. [Applause.] Mr. Mayo, Mr. Ford's accredited representative, as you will notice, has told you positively that if Mr. Ford can not make fertilizer at a profit that even he, with all his untold wealth, would some day have to quit. You will notice, too, that Mr. Mayo is not attempting to deceive the American people. He is only telling them the truth. It is only those who in their anxiety would have Mr. Ford given this plant regardless of the terms of his contract who are disseminating these false and malicious statements.

Mr. Mayo appears before Congress in an honest attitude and without any attempt to deceive, and tells you and the country what will be done at Muscle Shoals provided this proposal is accepted. He says very plainly and positively that if it should turn out that they can not make it they would quit. That is the testimony in the case and why be deceived by those who do not speak by the record? Mr. Ford has been fair and honest with you, and when you have voted to give away this great power plant down there at Muscle Shoals to this rich man you must not in after years condemn him for he has been honest enough to come before you and tell you through his representative that he will not do these things unless it is found profitable. And he has told you further that he intends to use the power developed at this plant that is not used in the manufacture of fertilizer, if he can make it at all, in running a manufacturing plant of his own, making whatever he may see fit to make for his own profit. He has told you that for one thing he intends to make automobiles and parts for automobiles, and that he will not sell one ounce of this energy to any person.

The Ford offer presents a very remarkable feature in regulation—a feature not found in any other Government activity in this country. I take it the idea is entirely new, not only to this country but to the world. Section 15 of the offer creates a board of nine voting members. Seven of these voting members are designated by the farm organizations and two voting members are selected by the Ford corporation. In addition, a representative of the Bureau of Markets, Department of Agriculture, or its legal successor, to be appointed by the President, shall also be a member of the board, but without any right to vote.

Here Congress is being asked to turn over more than $100,000,000 worth of property to a single individual and Congress would not reserve the right to have a single person on this board with any voting power to guard the interests of the Government.

If the railroads should present a plan to regulate their business through a commission on which they would have two of the nine voting members it would be received with derision. Yet this authority given to Mr. Ford for 100 years seems to strike the proponents of this offer as being entirely proper. They would shackle Uncle Sam hand and foot.

In conclusion let me call to your attention just what it is you are asked to do in this unparalleled proposition. First, you are asked to convey by warranty deed 4,000 acres of land near Muscle Shoals upon which two nitrate plants have been built, installed with the latest and most expensive machinery that money can buy. Upon this land many miles of railroad tracks have been built; a great number of the best railroad steam engines constitute part of the equipment; steam shovels, steel freight and dump cars, and many million dollars' worth of other kinds of property. Besides this there have been constructed on this 4,000 acres of land expensive dwelling houses; some of them cost as much as $20,000 to build, while there are several hundred cheaper dwelling houses.

The land and all that is on it cost the taxpayers of this country more than $100,000,000. We are being asked by the proponents of this offer to transfer this 4,000 acres of land with all these buildings and this great amount of personal property to Mr. Ford for the comparatively insignificant sum of $5,000,000. This is not all. We are asked to build him a steam power plant in that vicinity, at a cost of $3,500,000, and give it to him as an absolute gift without one dollar of consideration. We are asked to do this without modification or any chance of ever getting it back provided he fails to do the things that he agrees to do. It is an unconditional sale, or, I should say, gift, to him. If it were your own property, you would at least demand a recapture clause in the deed of conveyance by which you could compel this Ford company to reconvey the property to you provided there was a failure on its part to make fertilizer or do any of the other things that are stipulated.

This is not all. He demands that the Government complete the building of dams at Muscle Shoals that when finished will have cost the Government $67,000,000 of cash money without counting the interest on this money that will have accumulated during the course of the construction of these dams. When this is done he demands that the Government give him a lease on these dams for a period of 100 years, notwithstanding the Federal water power act that limits such leases to 50 years. He then only agrees to pay 4 per cent interest on $50,000,000 of the cost of construction, although they will have cost the Government $67,000,000 plus accumulated interest, which will amount to over $13,000,000 more. This, too, in the face of the fact that there will be no clause in either the deed or the lease that will reconvey the one or vacate the other in case there is a breach of contract. It is indefensible.

Personally I would like to see Mr. Ford get Muscle Shoals, and I would vote for such a lease to him provided you will limit the life of the lease to the 50-year period, and that you will make him pay a substantial rental for the leasehold. And provided, further, that you lease to him nitrate plants Nos. 1 and 2 and the land on which they are situated and not make him a warranty deed for them without consideration of any character. I will refuse, too, to vote to build him a steam plant at a cost of $3,500,000 and make him a present of it. This money belongs to the taxpayers of this country. We have no right, either moral or legal, to make the richest man in the world this costly present. Let him build his own steam plant as other companies do.

There are some five powerful farm organizations in the United States. Only the farm bureau has indorsed this Ford offer. This action on its part has been brought about by its Washington representative alone. The others have refused to indorse it.

However high handed may be the actions of this Congress in filching this great property from its owners, it has not the power to give to this man a perpetual life. All this talk about Mr. Ford and his superhuman powers is the prattle of the servile and not the wisdom of the statesman. It would give him a franchise in this water power for 100 years, while no other company can get a lease in any of the waters of the United States for more than 50 years. You place him beyond the control of the water-power act and give his company an unbridled authority to exploit the people for 100 years unrestrained by the hand of any Federal or State authority. Other companies are controlled.

You build these dams for him and pay the cost of $67,000,000, not counting the interest that is accumulating while the work is in progress, and then lease them to him at 4 per cent of only $50,000,000. This is about 2¾ per cent interest on the full cost and nothing on the other $17,000,000 and the accumulated interest. You give him these two nitrate plants and millions of dollars worth of other property there, all of which cost the taxpayers of this country about $100,000,000. You deed him this property by warranty deed for practically nothing and no clause in the conveyance by which it can be recaptured by the Government in case he fails to do what he ought to do. You build at the cost of the taxpayer a steam plant at a cost of $3,500,000 and give it to him without consideration. Do you not think this is somewhat generous with the taxpayers' money? That is your proposition, and you try to frighten us into assisting in this daylight robbery by proclaiming that Wall Street is against this steal and the people are against Wall Street. You may pull off this robbery, but the day of retribution will come.

Mr. Chairman, the farmers need fertilizer. No one recognizes this more than I do. They need cheap fertilizer, but this offer is a makeshift, and they are not guaranteed fertilizer under it, and I propose, so far as I am concerned, to see that they get what they are expecting. [Applause.]

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, there will be a good many speeches made on this proposition; and if I may do so in Committee of the Whole, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who speak on this matter may have the right to revise and extend their remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that is not in order in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON].

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I was greatly impressed with the eloquent, impassioned, and well-reasoned address delivered a few moments ago by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE]. It was a masterly presentation of his views upon the subject; and if anything could convince, that address ought to convince. But, gentlemen of the House, I am still unconvinced of the justice of turning over this plant to Henry Ford upon the offer which he has submitted to the American Congress.

WHAT SHALL BE DONE WITH MUSCLE SHOALS?

The question as to what shall be done with Muscle Shoals is one of very great importance to the American people. It is important not only because the development proposed will result in the greatest hydroelectric plant in the world but because there is in the proposed law a violation of our settled policy of conservation as embodied in the Federal water power act. This law was enacted after years of agitation and in response to the insistent pressure of public opinion. It was an effort to protect and to hold in perpetuity for the American people those invaluable resources of nature which will continue to be our greatest national asset when our oil fields shall have become depleted and cheap coal be a thing of the past. Water power is the last great resource of our people, and under no circumstances whatever should it be permitted to go into private hands, nor should it be tied up for such long periods of time as to deprive future generations of that normal development which new invention and discovery may suggest as the most advantageous. Neither should such restrictions be imposed upon the Government as will prevent it from developing along the lines of the most enlightened public policy. In the light of the development of the last century, it would be a presumption of extraordinary rashness for the American Congress to enter into a contract which, if followed in any considerable number of cases, would leave future generations bound hand and foot, utterly unable, without the violation of the most solemn contracts, to work out their destiny along the lines of the greatest good to the largest number.

PROPOSED SALE WILL BREAK DOWN CONSERVATION POLICY.

If we are to give to Henry Ford a contract for a hundred years, can there be any just reason for not giving the same advantage to any of his competitors? To say that Henry Ford's contract is more advantageous to the people is beside the mark. What may appear advantageous now may appear quite different a generation hence. There is a principle at stake of infinitely greater importance than any seeming temporary advantage.

Mr. Chairman, the proposed contract will serve as the entering wedge for a complete breakdown of our conservation policy. It is another effort to constitute a man of unlimited means a public guardian in the guise of a benefactor. If this may be done in one case, it may be done in others. Doheny and Sinclair undoubtedly flattered themselves that they were acting in the public interest when they secured the much-discussed leases for producing oil upon a royalty basis, but even though all parties to the transaction had acted in the utmost good faith it would have been condemned by the American people as inimicable to their highest national interest.

Muscle Shoals is a great national asset. No section has a right to claim it as its own. It follows that we should approach its development from a national viewpoint. With that in mind let us consider the Ford proposal which, with slight modifications, is embodied in the bill now before the House.

PROPERTY OWNED BY THE UNITED STATES AT MUSCLE SHOALS.

The property owned by the Government at Muscle Shoals consists of:

1. Dam No. 2, upon which the Government had spent over $17,000,000 prior to the Ford offer. When completed it will cost $45,500,000. This contemplates an equipment of 18 turbines of 30,000 horsepower each, or a total of 540,000 horsepower. This huge dam will be 4,500 feet long, have a lift of 97 feet, and back up the water some 14.7 miles, with a surface area of 14,037 acres. Fully equipped it would be capable of generating 1,000,000 horsepower during high water, while at the minimum flow it might range down as low as 100,000. Connected with this dam is a steam plant of 120,000 horsepower for use when the water is low, making 220,000 primary horsepower always available. This steam plant is in perfect condition.

2. Nitrate plant No. 1, consisting of 1,894 acres of land, 112 permanent and modern residences, water system, paved streets, steam plant of 6,000 horsepower, vast quantities of material, machinery, fixtures, equipment, apparatus, tools, and supplies. This plant has cost the Government $12,887,941.31.

3. Nitrate plant No. 2, consisting of 2,306 acres of land, 186 permanent and modern homes, 100-room hotel, water system, paved streets, steam plant of 120,000 horsepower, material, machinery, equipment, tools, and supplies. This plant cost the Government $66,252,392.21.

4. Waco limestone quarry, of 1,200 tons daily output, including 450 acres of land, rights of way, material, machinery, and full equipment for operation, railroad tracks, appurtenances, tools, and supplies. The cost of this quarry was $1,302,962.88.

5. The Gorgas steam plant of 40,000 horsepower, which cost the Government $4,979,782.33, which was owned by the Government at the time the Ford offer was made, has since been sold for $3,472,481.25.

The total cost of this property outside of the expenditures on Dam No. 2 was $85,423,078.73. Up to June 30, 1923, according to Congressman MADDEN, the total expenditures on Muscle Shoals amounted to $125,000,000.

ANALYSIS OF FORD PROPOSAL.

Having briefly summarized the Government's interest in Muscle Shoals, I shall endeavor to analyze Henry Ford's offer as finally submitted by him.

For the purpose of carrying out his offer, Mr. Ford proposes to organize a corporation with a paid-up capital of not less than $10,000,000, which shall "enter into and execute all necessary or appropriate contracts to effectuate this agreement" (offer). In his offer Henry Ford neither assumes nor pledges his personal responsibility, that being limited to a promise to organize the corporation, controlled by him, which he engages will execute the necessary contracts. By section 23, if the pending bill is amended as proposed by the suggested Madden amendment, an effort is made to bind Ford personally upon all contracts entered into by the corporation. The offer submitted by Henry Ford expressly provides, however, that his proposals must be accepted as a whole or not at all. This attitude of Ford is supported by the testimony of William B. Mayo, chief engineer of the Ford Motor Co., as it appears on page 279 of the House hearings, where he is reported as saying:

> The Government invited Mr. Ford to make this offer, and he has made the best offer he figures he cares to make. He has tried to make it as fair as he knows how, and you will have to take it or leave it, at its face value.

There is little likelihood, therefore, of Ford accepting a contract materially different from the one he submitted to the Secretary of War.

Through this corporation Ford offers to pay $5,000,000 in five annual installments for an absolute transfer of all of the property above enumerated, costing the Government over $85,000,000. Gorgas steam plant, which was a part of the property covered by his offer, has since been sold for $3,472,481.25, which would leave only a balance to be paid of $1,527,518.75 for property costing the American taxpayer $80,443,296.40. This offer is so small as to shock the moral sense, and if offered by any other man in the country would not receive the slightest consideration. Indeed, if such a sale to anyone else should be seriously considered it would create a public scandal of the first magnitude. [Applause.]

PRODUCTION OF FERTILIZERS AS ADDITIONAL CONSIDERATION.

But it is contended that there are other considerations in the Ford offer which justify the virtual donation of these vast plants, towns, railroads, and equipment to Henry Ford.

Among these is the agreement of the proposed corporation to manufacture nitrogen or other commercial fertilizers, mixed or unmixed, and with or without filler, according to demand, at nitrate plant No. 2. It is provided that the annual production of these fertilizers shall have a nitrogen content of at least 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen, which is the present annual capacity of nitrate plant No. 2. It is also provided that the corporation is to maintain nitrate plant No. 2 in its present state of readiness, or its equivalent, for immediate operation in the manufacture of materials necessary in time of war for the production of explosives.

If there is any consideration in the contract worth mentioning, this is it. But unfortunately for the farmer there is no agreement to reduce the price of fertilizer. On the contrary, Ford's profits are expressly provided for, the only stipulation for the protection of the American farmer being that Ford's net profit shall not exceed 8 per cent of the fair actual annual cost of production. In this cost of production will be included the cost of maintaining the plant in up-to-date condition, including any repair or replacement of structures, cost of power for operation, interest upon the investment, and every other element usually included by other commercial fertilizer manufacturers in computing cost of production. In addition to all this allowance, Ford is guaranteed a profit on the turnover, which for all practical purposes is fixed at 8 per cent. If fertilizer can be produced at a price at which it can find a ready sale, Ford's profits will run into large figures on this item alone.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes; for a question.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Does not the gentleman believe that had it not been for Henry Ford this project would have long since passed into private hands, and into those hands for a song?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I do not know what would have happened had it not been for the offer of Henry Ford. I say this to the gentleman: That the offer of Henry Ford has, in many of its aspects, more advantages than perhaps any other offer so far made, but I denounce acceptance of the offer because it is giving away to one individual what belongs to the American people. [Applause.]

COMPARISONS WITH OTHER OFFERS.

Comparisons have been made between Ford's offer and that offered by other concerns in an effort to show that even from the standpoint of a monetary return to the Government Ford's offer is the more advantageous.

The manifest unfairness of these comparisons is evident at a glance. In considering the return to be realized from other bids, all computations I have so far seen have been on a basis of 50 years, while on the Ford proposition it is invariably made for a hundred years.

Not only that, but in order to make the Ford offer look good in tabulated form he is credited with maintenance of nitrate plant No. 2 at the rate of $100,000 per annum and for replacements at the rate of $200,000 per annum, together with interest at the rate of 4 per cent for the 100-year period, when, as everybody ought to know, these items are figured into the cost of the fertilizer and are paid out of the annual earnings and passed on to the farmer in added cost per ton of fertilizer sold.

Not content with this amazing sort of computation, they credit Ford with another $20,000,000, arrived at by computing 4 per cent annual interest upon the $5,000,000 which he pays for an absolute fee title to property which cost the Government $85,000,000 and which if sold as junk would bring $9,000,000, according to the best available testimony, and if intended for use upon the premises not less than $16,000,000.

RENTAL TO BE PAID BY HENRY FORD.

As a further consideration Mr. Ford agrees to pay as rental for Dam No. 2, $200,000 per annum, commencing one year from the date when the first 100,000 horsepower is installed and ready for use, and $200,000 annually thereafter for the next five years. At the end of this period he agrees to pay 4 per cent annually upon the cost of the dam, exclusive of the $17,000,000 expended by the Government upon this dam prior to the Ford offer.

For Dam No. 3 Mr. Ford agrees to pay a rental of $160,000 per annum one year from the date when 80,000 horsepower is installed and ready for use and $160,000 annually thereafter for the next two years. At the end of this period he agrees to pay 4 per cent annually upon the cost of the dam and power houses.

If you will turn to page 21 of the majority report of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of 1922, you will find the following statement:

> If we make a computation of the amount actually paid, in accordance with Mr. Ford's offer, as interest, and take into consideration the $17,000,000 already expended and the nonpayment of interest on the various amounts that must be appropriated from year to year to complete the dams, and the fact that 4 per cent interest does not commence to run until six years after the completion of Dam No. 2 and three years after the completion of Dam No. 3, we find that Mr. Ford is actually paying as rental not 4 per cent interest, as it appears from a first examination of his proposal, but 2.79 per cent interest. This means that under the Ford offer this corporation is getting money from the Government of the United States for 2.79 per cent interest on 100 years' time.

If we include the so-called sinking funds of $19,868, payable semiannually after the seventh year on Dam No. 2, and $3,505 payable semiannually on Dam No. 3 after the fourth year as a part of the annual interest payments, which is the only businesslike way to consider them, we find that the total annual interest payments upon the Government funds from the time of expenditure in construction work on the two dams only amount to 2.85 per cent per annum. The entire amount that would be paid into the sinking fund by the Ford corporation during the 100 years would only amount to $4,368,378.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. Does the gentleman deny that that computation is mathematically correct?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I deny nothing of the kind, but the gentleman knows, as I do, that neither he nor the Government would handle money in that sort of way. The only fair way is to add these payments to the interest annually and compute it in that way. This is manifestly the only practical and businesslike way. If this is done, it will yield, together with other interest payments, 2.85 per cent upon the Government investment. I can not yield further.

As an additional consideration Mr. Ford, through his proposed corporation, engages to furnish electric power, not exceeding 200 horsepower, for the operation of the lock of Dam No. 2, and not to exceed 100 horsepower for the operation of the lock of Dam No. 3, free of cost to the Government.

Some provision is made for the expense of maintaining the dams, but, as these are clearly so drawn as to be favorable to Mr. Ford rather than the United States, I shall not take time to consider them here.

MUSCLE SHOALS AS UNCONTROLLED MONOPOLY DANGEROUS.

Mr. Ford engages that his corporation will utilize not to exceed 100,000 horsepower for the manufacture of fertilizer. Dam No. 2 will have an installation of 600,000 horsepower and Dam No. 3 an installation of 250,000 horsepower. It is evident, therefore, that the Ford corporation will at all times have a vast amount of surplus electric power which it is contemplated shall be used eventually in its entirety to carry on great industrial enterprises to be developed in the vicinity by Mr. Henry Ford or his corporation. No distribution to the public is promised or contemplated. So far as the municipalities, the business men, and the farmers of the South are concerned, they will get no part of the current.

Owing to the low cost at which the Ford corporation would secure the vast Government properties, his capital investment would be comparatively small. The rentals which he would pay the Government in the form of interest would be very much lower than those enjoyed by any other manufacturer in the country, and, in fact, would amount to a large annual subsidy. No competitor would have a chance with him in his chosen field of operation. He would, in fact, enjoy a virtual monopoly. Already incomparably rich, with agencies extending into every part of the land and into many foreign countries, it may well be doubted as a matter of public policy whether we can afford to give him this additional and unparalleled advantage. Once in possession of that enormous hydroelectric plant, the greatest in the world, uncontrolled as to the price of his output, he might easily become a menace of the first magnitude. Not that I have any fear of Henry Ford becoming such in his lifetime, but his successors would remain in possession, protected by his contracts. Long before the 100 years were up the people would come to realize that their ancestors had made for them a sorry bargain.

The concentration of great wealth into a few hands is going on at an ever-accelerating momentum. That it is growing into an increasingly sinister national menace can not be doubted by a discerning observer. Shall we give it aid and encouragement by turning over this incomparable national asset to Henry Ford? If we do so, can we consistently deny the same privilege to another? [Applause.]

SHOULD BE PUBLICLY OWNED AND CONTROLLED.

Personally, I do not believe that Muscle Shoals should be turned over to any individual, however good or great. Neither should it go into the hands of any grasping power monopoly. These are not benevolent institutions. They want the plant for the money they can make out of it. Experience should have taught us we can expect nothing else.

Muscle Shoals should be completed and held in perpetuity by the United States. It is one of our greatest national assets. Our posterity has a right to expect that we shall preserve it. The workmen of the city, the toilers upon the farm, the housewives in their homes have a right to demand that at least a part of the power generated at Muscle Shoals shall be distributed to them. It is time that we take measures to lighten their burdens and to add to their comforts. It is infinitely more important that 10,000 should be benefited than that one should be given an exclusive privilege and a monopoly that in its span of years would cover four generations.

For years I have made a careful study of municipal hydroelectric plants. They have been operated with almost uniform success. They have been the instruments of vast reductions in rates and have brought added comforts into uncounted thousands of homes that before their coming could not enjoy them because of high rates.

In my judgment Muscle Shoals can be economically and efficiently operated by the United States. We can manufacture fertilizer as cheaply as anybody. If this shall not seem immediately feasible, we can lease the nitrate plant for the purpose. The surplus current can readily be sold at a sufficient profit to retire the entire cost of the plant in 50 years and at the same time make a material reduction of the rates now paid by power users in the South.

I hope that on some future day I may be able to discuss this phase of the subject at length. [Applause.]

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WAINWRIGHT].

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, having had my time somewhat curtailed, I am obliged to omit some of the observations I intended to make. Possibly this will be your gain and not my loss.

There are other sections of the country besides those which may be characterized as purely agricultural which are interested in this question. Of course we are all dependent upon the prosperity of our agricultural regions and upon the fertility of the soil of our country but there are other considerations, possibly, which appeal to the section of the country from which I come which may not weigh as strongly in the minds of some of the gentlemen from the region immediately surrounding this vicinity.

Let me ask you gentlemen to keep in mind this, that this is a proposal to transfer to a private citizen a great property of the people of the United States and to lease a part of that property for a period of 100 years, which as far as we and our generation are concerned is practically a lease in perpetuity, because for us of this day 100 years hence is practically from now on.

This bill provides, in fact directs, the turning over to a private citizen of the United States, one Henry Ford, the properties, rights, and interests of the people of the United States covered by the term and colloquially known as Muscle Shoals. They embrace a great natural gift of God to the people or resource, resulting from the flow of the navigable waters of the Tennessee River; a great partially completed dam, erected by dollars taken out of the pockets of the American people to restrain the flow of waters for the purpose of generating the power contained in the flowing waters; and certain great manufactories or industrial facilities and establishments, also created by dollars taken out of the pockets of the people.

It is proposed to lease to Henry Ford that portion of the properties comprising the natural resources and the dam for a term of 100 years and to sell to him the remainder of these properties, namely, the nitrate plants, a certain quarry, and other vast properties at a price representing but a fraction of their cost to the people. It is so unique and startling a proposition as to require decided explanation and justification. Muscle Shoals, now referring to the water power, probably one of the greatest in this or any other country, comprises a priceless asset of the people.

The constantly developing and expanding use of water power in every field of industry and to otherwise supply the wants of the people puts it on an equal plane with all the other great natural resources with which this country is blessed, such as coal, iron, and oil, but a large part of which have unfortunately already passed out of the ownership or control of the people. Water power is eternal and inexhaustible—runs on forever. Other resources may be consumed and can not be replaced. So, if the disposal to private individuals or interests of our reserves of oil is subject to the just indignation and condemnation of our people, the project involved in this bill must be equally objectionable, unless it can be supported by a great compensating advantage to the people. If it is indefensible to turn over our oil reserves to a Sinclair or a Doheny, it may prove equally indefensible to turn over this great natural resource to Henry Ford.

I believe the time has come to peremptorily decline to part with the ownership and absolute control of any further natural resources to private interests. I further believe that this policy and principle must particularly apply to the power contained in the flowing waters of our great rivers and streams, especially where the structures erected to make that power available have been created by public funds.

To arrive at the alleged reason for this proposed departure from sound policy requires a brief review of the origin, purpose, and extent of the investments to date of the Government at Muscle Shoals.

In 1916, when the shadow of war was upon us, we adopted the national defense act. It was then realized as vitally essential for the national security that we should be made independent of any foreign supply of nitrates for the manufacture of explosives, and accordingly, and for the further purpose, that we should be similarly independent in regard to fertilizers, so necessary for our agricultural prosperity, it was provided by section 124 of the national defense act that the President should cause an investigation to be made to determine the best, cheapest, and most available means "for the production of nitrates and other products for munitions of war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizers and other useful products, by water power or any other power as in his judgment is the best and cheapest to use"; and he was empowered to designate such sites upon navigable or nonnavigable rivers as might be necessary for carrying out the purposes of the act; and was also authorized to "construct, maintain, and operate on such sites or site, dams, locks, power houses, plants, and other equipment, as in his judgment was best and cheapest for the generation of electrical or other power," and "for the production of nitrates or other products needed for munitions of war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizer and other useful products"; and the sum of $20,000,000 was appropriated to carry out the purpose of the act, it being provided that the products of such plants should be used so far as necessary for military or naval purposes, any surplus not so required to be sold and disposed of.

The act further contains the following significant language, indicative of the intent of Congress at that time:

> The plant or plants provided for under this act shall be constructed and operated solely by the Government and not in conjunction with any other industry or enterprise carried on by private capital.

Thereupon the great water power of the Muscle Shoals of the Tennessee River was selected as the site for this great national enterprise, and, starting at a period previous to our actual entry into the war and extending through the war period and down to the end of the fiscal year 1922, the Nation had actually expended in this project an aggregate of $107,337,710, namely, $16,281,960 on the principal dam, known as Dam No. 2 or Wilson Dam; $12,887,941 on nitrate plant No. 1; $67,555,355 on nitrate plant No. 2; $4,975,782 on what was known as the Gorgas-Warrior plant and transmission line; and for maintenance, experimental operations, and other purposes, $5,632,872.

At that time, namely, June 30, 1922, we had to show for these huge expenditures a partially completed dam across the Tennessee River; the two nitrate plants—No. 1, which had not been successful, designed to produce 9,000 tons of fixed nitrogen according to the so-called Haber process, and No. 2, with a designed capacity of 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen in the form of ammonium nitrate by what is known as the cyanamid process. The latter appears to be a success, having been successfully operated for a few weeks.

At that time it was assumed that at least $25,000,000 more would be required to complete Dam No. 2, and further expenditures for the remodeling and improving these plants to manufacture fertilizers.

Notwithstanding the great importance of the venture from the standpoint of national security and prosperity, Congress was appalled and balked at the further huge investment required, involving so many uncertainties and the possibly undesirable feature of Government operation.

All these installations had been made under the jurisdiction of the War Department—the dam by the Corps of Engineers and the plants by the Ordnance Department. Realizing the attitude of Congress with regard to a continuance of the venture upon the original lines, the War Department asked for proposals from private interests, laying down as a condition to the negotiation that the fundamental purpose of the manufacture of nitrates for munitions and fertilizer should be carried out, and that the whole enterprise, including both the nitrate plants and the water power, should be treated as one and inseparable. In other words, the fundamental purpose of the enterprise having been "nitrates," that the properties would be disposed of only upon condition that the quantity of nitrates originally intended should be manufactured, the water power to be treated as originally intended as incidental to the manufacture of nitrates and not as in any sense standing alone.

Thereupon, early in the present administration, Henry Ford made his now famous offer. It was practically the only offer received by the Government along the lines stipulated. It was a definite, fairly clear, and unambiguous offer to buy, through the medium of a corporation with a cash capital of $10,000,000, the nitrate plants and other accessories outright; to apply necessary funds, to be supplied to him by the Government, toward the completion of Dam No. 2; to manufacture at plant No. 2 fixed nitrogen to its full capacity, namely, 40,000 tons a year, applying the necessary water power from the dam; the Government further to agree to furnish him with the funds, $25,000,000, to complete another dam further up the stream to be known as Dam No. 3; Ford to pay the sum of $5,000,000 for the properties to be purchased, including both nitrate plants, which, as stated, have cost the Government about $84,000,000; and Ford to further pay as an annual rental for the properties to be leased—namely, the dam and water power—4 per cent upon all amounts to be furnished by the Government, after the acceptance of his offer, and to manufacture and furnish nitrates to the farmers at cost plus a profit limited to 8 per cent; to turn the plants over to the Government upon five days' notice in case of a war emergency; to furnish the Government with the trivial necessary amount of power for operation of the locks; to pay the small amounts required for the upkeep of the locks; and also a small payment, which, if amortized during the life of the lease, was calculated to produce a fund sufficient to retire the cost of Dam No. 2 and part of the cost of Dam No. 3.

Such were the essential features of the original offer which, with some modifications, are embodied in this bill. This offer met with enthusiastic response from the farmers and other agricultural interests of the Southeast, to whom the name and fame of Henry Ford for having already furnished them with automobiles, other motor traction, and tractors at reasonable cost was one to conjure with.

The War Department, having no authority under the law to accept this offer, transmitted the whole subject to Congress for its determination. There it became the subject of intense interest and acute consideration in both sessions of the Sixty-seventh Congress, and although the bill to dispose of these properties to Henry Ford upon substantially the terms stated, was favorably reported by the Military Affairs Committee, it failed of favorable action in the last House.

The question of the disposition of these properties has been one of growing interest, the strong feeling being at the outset of this session that some final disposition of the question was absolutely necessary. In the meanwhile an element in the property—the Gorgas-Warrior steam plant, an accessory which had cost $4,780,000—was sold during the past summer to the Alabama Power Co. for $3,472,487.25, owing to the fact that this company owned the land upon which the same has been erected and had the right either to buy it or have it removed from the property. Also, a grave question arose as to whether Henry Ford intended to guarantee personally the manufacture of nitrates at the plants by the company which he proposed to organize as his medium for the fulfillment of the terms of the agreement.

Among the bills introduced at the beginning of this session to turn the properties over to Mr. Ford was one by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] containing a provision requiring the application of $3,472,487.25, or the amount for which the Gorgas-Warrior plant was sold, toward the construction of a new plant of the same nature, and further containing a provision apparently intended to bind Henry Ford, his heirs and assigns, to the fulfillment of all the terms of the contract. These provisions have been incorporated in the bill before the House, H. R. 518, introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE], the Madden bill being identical except in the respects mentioned.

Since, as stated in the bill, the main consideration is the manufacture of fertilizer containing nitrogen, and the intention of Congress undoubtedly is to bind anyone to whom these properties are to be conveyed to supply that necessary commodity in any event, therefore the question whether it can be manufactured at a profit and whether Mr. Ford must continue to make fertilizer even at a loss is fundamental to the whole transaction.

This question has been one of conflicting opinion in the committee. The majority apparently deeming that the language employed will bind the company and Mr. Ford to the manufacture of nitrates even at a loss. As to this the minority entertain grave doubt.

By section 14 of the bill the company is bound—except as it may be prevented by reconstruction of the plant itself, or by war, strikes, accidents, fires, or other causes beyond its control—manufacture nitrogen and other commercial fertilizers, mixed or unmixed, and with or without filler, according to demand.

It is evident that unless the nitrate can be manufactured and sold at a price less than that of the Chile nitrates, that there will be no demand, and if there is no demand there can be no necessity or obligation to continue to manufacture nitrates; therefore, unless the nitrates can be manufactured at a price sufficiently low to be attractive to the farmer, there will be no obligation to continue their manufacure.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I would prefer not to yield, but would be glad to yield at the conclusion of my remarks. However, I yield to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MADDEN. I just wanted to ask the gentleman what difference would it make if such nitrates as may be manufactured by Mr. Ford at Muscle Shoals brought down the price of other nitrates one-half; would it not accomplish the purpose?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. It might.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I will yield.

Mr. JAMES. Does the gentleman from New York know that Mr. MORIN——

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I can well see I have touched on the sensitive point of this whole discussion.

Mr. JAMES. Does the gentleman from New York know that Mr. MORIN, who controls the time against this bill, helped draw up this section?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I was not aware of that.

As I was saying, gentlemen, in the event that there is no demand on account of high cost, Mr. Ford can shut down the nitrate plants indefinitely without any effect upon his lease of the water power, the whole of which he will then have unincumbered by the necessity of diverting any part to nitrate production and free to apply the whole of it to his own uses without any obligation to furnish any part to the Government, third parties, or the public. Also if nitrates can not be manufactured at a profit, this may be a "cause beyond his control," which again would relieve him from the manufacture of fertilizer.

Again, the question arises as to whether section 20, providing for the guaranty by Henry Ford personally, binds him and his huge estate during the life of the contract to fulfill its stipulations, or whether it simply binds him to furnish the necessary instruments to carry the agreement into effect. But, in any event, I submit that, as far as those who come after him, he is entirely incompetent to bind his estate or his descendants, and therefore that this element must be disregarded and the clause treated merely as his personal guaranty during his lifetime.

Apart from the uncertainties in these regards and the fundamental objections to the measures already indicated, the fact is that since the beginning of this session several other proposals have been received which, from a dollars and cents standpoint, undoubtedly offer greater advantages to the Government, and each of which, in my humble judgment, offers an equal assurance for the manufacture of nitrates with that of Henry Ford, unless there be some superior magic or virtue in what he undertakes to what any other citizen or combination of citizens can perform, or unless, frankly, it be considered that the great fortune which he has amassed offers a greater guaranty or assurance of performance over stipulations of the substantial and entirely respectable and successful interests competing with him for this great prize.

No one disputes the proposition as stated by the President in his reference to this subject in his last message that "while the price is an important element, there is another consideration even more compelling. The agriculture of the Nation needs a greater supply and lower cost of fertilizer." Nevertheless, the price and the financial return can not be ignored, and certainly should be a determining factor where there is from other sources an equal assurance of as great a supply of fertilizer at as low a cost; and this equal assurance, I firmly believe and am confident, will also appear to others who will but take the time and pains to contrast these offers in this highly complicated field with Mr. Ford's. I am now referring to the offers of the combined Alabama and Tennessee companies embodied in the bill of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and to that of Mr. Elon Hooker and his associates in their proposed Muscle Shoals corporation, and even in that of the Union Carbide Co.

These are all important, serious interests, controlling great resources of capital; and unless corporate interests in general are so repugnant to those charged with the responsibility of dealing with this matter that they must be ignored or excluded from consideration, and the swollen fortune of one individual, admirable and beneficial as may have been the processes of amassing that fortune, is considered to embody a superior virtue, entitling it to preferential treatment, they must be taken into account and treated on an equal footing.

Besides, is not Mr. Ford proposing to deal with us, not as an individual but, in sooth, through the medium of a corporation with a swollen capital of $10,000,000? I believe I violate no confidence of the committee in stating that these offers have received but scant consideration, and that Henry Ford and his offer alone seemed to interest the majority of the committee.

Why, gentlemen, I am amazed to find how many honorable Members appear to be hypnotized by this Henry Ford offer and determined to put it over just as made, practically without the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t." Neither Mr. Ford nor any agent or representative appeared before the committee. It was not until comparatively late in our deliberations that we received any assurance, even, that he still stood upon his original offer; and when such was forthcoming his rather curt confirmation was practically to the effect that we might take his offer or leave it—a refusal or declination to discuss or negotiate in any manner. We could take his proposition just as it stood or reject it.

It was, indeed, humiliating to some of us to note the almost abject attitude of some of our colleagues toward this gentleman who assumed to deal with us, representing the sovereign people of the United States, in so arrogant a manner.

Now, as to these other offers: The power companies' offer is that of a combination of the power companies already operating in that field—people with great experience and familiarity not only with the subject of power development generally but particularly as applied to the southeastern field. As the result of their hearing before the committee they offer to form a corporation—one corporation—with a cash capital of $15,000,000, to lease the dam and nitrate plants for a period of 50 years, paying after the first year a fixed rental of about $2,000,000 per annum, estimated as a return of 4 per cent upon the entire Government investment in Dam No. 2, with a firm undertaking to manufacture and supply nitrates at a profit limited to 8 per cent, making a far more liberal provision for a sinking fund to reimburse the Government than Mr. Ford; agreeing to surrender the plants to the Government in the event of an emergency; with a recapture clause in the event of nonfulfillment, omitted in the Ford offer; and in the event of the failure of renewal of the lease at expiration to surrender the property to the Government without reimbursement. They propose, as is of course preferable, that the moneys to be advanced by the Government shall be applied by its agents toward the completion of the enterprise in the same way as other Government work. They propose that all of the power not required in the manufacture of nitrates shall be distributed throughout the zone of their operation to the general advantage of the region, and all subject to the regulations of the Federal and State power commissions.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I prefer not to yield, I have such a limited time. If I have any time at the conclusion of my remarks, I shall be very glad to yield.

Mr. McKENZIE. It is only for a correction. I am sure the gentleman would not want to make a misstatement. The $15,000,000 was to be subscribed capital stock and not cash.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Subscribed capital? What is the subscription to be except cash?

Mr. McKENZIE. Did the gentleman ever buy stock at 50 cents on the dollar?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. No; I do not think I have.

Mr. McSWAIN. If the gentleman will permit, the $15,000,000 corporation is just talk, and nothing but talk, and never has been signed by representatives of any corporation; it is just talk.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. That may be the gentleman's view, but these are people of experience and standing in the business world and I submit are entitled to be treated seriously, and that offer was submitted in open committee by serious people.

Mr. McSWAIN. Submitted by Mr. Yates.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. The Hooker plan involves a license and agreement to manufacture nitrates and distribute power subject, to similar regulations, the operation of the plants and the quantity of nitrates to be produced to be subject to the discretion of the Secretary of War, and the entire profit to be shared between them and the Government at the rate of one-third to them and two-thirds to the Government for the first 10 years, one-fourth to them and three-fourths to the Government for the balance of the term of 50 years of the lease. This undoubtedly offers the prospect of the greatest return to the Government, from the money standpoint, of any of the proposals.

These are people with great experience in the manufacture of chemicals by hydroelectric processes, as, if not more, competent from such experience to deal with the problem of the production of nitrates for munitions and fertilizer at a lower cost than any other people in the country, unless it be the interests represented by the Union Carbide Co.

These last, the Union Carbide interests, have also had a vast experience in this field and claim to have control of the processes which in Europe are considered to offer the best prospect of practically supplying artificial fertilizers at low cost. Their offer deals exclusively with the nitrate feature of the problem. They offer to lease the plants and supply fertilizers to one-half the capacity of plant No. 2, paying a rental after the first few years of $750,000 for that plant and $15 per horsepower up to 100,000 horsepower per year. They will take and utilize of the water power 50,000 horsepower for the manufacture of nitrates, employ 50,000 horsepower in manufacturing their own products, leaving the balance for general distribution to the best advantage of the region. Their assurance and that of the Hooker combination, if not that of the power companies, for every proper, unprejudiced, and nonpolitical aspect, in my judgment, offers an equal if not a greater prospect of cheap fertilizers to the farmers than does that of Mr. Ford, who admittedly has had no experience in this field.

But the great objection to the Ford offer, and the one which can never be reconciled with our duty, or responsibility to those we represent, is his refusal to subject his use of this great Government-created property to the very regulations which the Government itself has imposed upon all others who secure the benefit of water power over which the Government has jurisdiction. Especially should such regulations apply to a water power made available entirely by Government funds.

How can it ever be reconciled with our duty, as representatives of the people, to transfer this great power to one individual to be applied exclusively to his own purposes, without any regulation or without any provision for others to share in its use?

The second great objection, as developed above, is that he may fail to be able to make fertilizers at a profit and cease their manufacture, but still maintain his hold upon the water power. In that event, having parted with the title, the nitrate plants may be permanently lost and therefore the original purpose of the act of 1916 will remain unfulfilled. No one of the other offers is subject to this objection.

The third great objection is that if Mr. Ford, as his supporters maintain, can make fertilizer at a profit, then he is obtaining a great water power at such a low cost as to be ruinous to any possible competitors in that section of the country. This is contrary to American principles.

In this connection, I believe and strongly urge that no disposition be made of the water power over and above that required for nitrates that does not compel and insure its delivery into all the surrounding States to the south as well as to the north and east, even to supply the city of New Orleans. Even now a great superpower system to link the whole United States is being advocated by some of our leading statesmen. This points the place that Muscle Shoals should occupy. Personally I can not bring myself to believe that this bill can be amended in any manner to justify turning over this entire great enterprise to any one individual or interest, and there I part company with my colleagues who signed the minority report. My inclination is strong for the Government itself to develop the power, reserve such as may be required for nitrate operations, and either wholesale the remainder under conditions determining the territory into which it will be delivered, or itself construct the transmission lines and effect the delivery. I see before us the determination of a great question of national policy relating to the major water powers still left to be developed, where the development is to be at Government expense. Our action on this bill can not fail in that respect to have a far and long-reaching effect.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. May I have a few minutes more?

Mr. MORIN. How much more time?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I can get along with 10 minutes.

Mr. MORIN. I yield the gentleman 10 minutes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. The whole method of dealing with this matter, since it was forwarded to Congress by the War Department, has been preposterous from the standpoint of ordinary business dealings and prudence. I submit, without further enlargement on the subject, that to leave it to a committee of Congress during its session, with all the other preoccupations of Members to deal with an intricate and complicated business problem such as this, involving negotiation, the measuring of one proposition against another for the purpose of extracting or evolving the best disposition possible in the interest of the people, and to fulfill the original purposes of the creation of the enterprise, is calculated to defeat the very purpose in view.

The result has simply been what might have been expected. We have by no means exhausted the possibility of consummating a far better arrangement. We are proposing to turn these great properties over to one individual, on his own terms, without negotiation and in the absence of the usual procedure employed by our business people under similar circumstances.

The President fully understood this when he suggested that a solution would involve complicated negotiations; that there was no authority for that purpose, and recommended "that the Congress appoint a small joint committee to consider offers, conduct negotiations, and report definite recommendations." That is so wise and sound that it should need no discussion. By failing to act upon that recommendation we have practically violated all the canons of wise business dealings. Fortunately this matter has not gone so far that we can not recede from the untenable position in which we now find ourselves, and adopt the wise course suggested by the President. In my judgment not one of these proposals offer sufficient advantage to the people to justify acceptance.

It is amazing, gentlemen, to see those of you who so recently showed antipathy to swollen fortunes and accumulated wealth in any form now so eagerly proposing to swell this already unduly swollen fortune by a grant of a great natural asset upon terms which will not only give it an advantage over all others in the field but upon terms so advantageous as to give it a practical monopoly of the water power of a great section of the country.

I believe I would be false to those I represent if I lent myself to any such procedure, and I believe such procedure to be not only contrary to the wishes of the vast majority of citizens in the northeasterly section of the country but there quite universally condemned. I further believe, gentlemen, that if you succeed in forcing through this deal with Mr. Henry Ford, even in your lifetime it will rise to plague you, and future unborn generation of Americans will condemn you for having in your generation parted with their patrimony for a mere mess of pottage. [Applause.]

Mr. McKENZIE. I am sure the gentleman from New York did not mean criticism when he spoke of the manner in which this bill has been handled in view of the fact that the gentleman only recently came on the Committee on Military Affairs and many of us sat for months listening to the testimony in connection with the case, so that we could not be charged with haste.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield in every way to the superior knowledge and familiarity of my colleagues with this subject, and I have been perfectly amazed with their familiarity with it, and I must confess I can not claim for myself any such knowledge of the intricate details. I could only discuss it from the general standpoint which I have. [Applause.]

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WURZBACH].

Mr. WURZBACH. Mr. Chairman, the fact that time has been yielded to me by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORIN], who does not favor the pending bill, might indicate that I am opposed to the pending bill. Such, however, is not the fact. I have been a member of the Committee on Military Affairs ever since the Ford proposal has been before that committee. I think I have attended all the hearings for a period of two years or more, and I have come to the firm conviction that the Ford proposal is the only proposal that appeals to the country and especially the great farming class. It makes a strong appeal to me and, I believe, to a majority of this House. [Applause.] I do not think it is necessary to make a minute comparison of the Ford proposal with some of the other offers that have been made. The Ford proposal, in my judgment, is better from the people's standpoint than any of the others. The time has come when the American people are expecting us to act one way or another upon this proposition. I am sure that of many of the gentlemen here who will vote against this bill favoring the Ford proposal some will do so upon the ground that they are in favor of Government operation, and some few others will refuse to support any measure or any proposition that may mean interference with the fertilizer manufacturers of this country, who have monopolized that great industry to the detriment of the American farmers.

It would be impossible for me within the 10 minutes assigned to me to go into the details of this bill or to point out all of its merits. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] has covered that very fully, and I am in accord with him. I believe that 90 per cent of the farmers of the country who have made a study of this legislation are in favor of the Ford proposal. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHNEIDER. If the gentleman will permit a question, does the gentleman think that 90 per cent of the farmers have really made a study of the Ford plan?

Mr. WURZBACH. Well, I think they have made as much a study of the Ford plan as they have made of any other plan. I am of the opinion that if this proposal were rejected by Congress and some other proposal substituted for it, as, for instance, the Allied Power Co. proposal, that we would find gentlemen who are now using the latter proposal to defeat the Ford proposal later voting against the proposal of the Allied Power Co. after the Ford proposal had been put out of the way.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WURZBACH. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman, having made a study of this proposition, could he tell us what would be the difference in the price of fertilizer produced at this plant, assuming that the contract is executed with Mr. Ford, and the present market price of fertilizer?

Mr. WURZBACH. I could not say as to that, except to refer the gentleman from New York to the record, from which it appears that fertilizers could be manufactured and sold for about one-half of what they are now being manufactured and sold for.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Was not that simply an expression of a hope instead of an accurate figure?

Mr. WURZBACH. No; I think that was the deliberate judgment of men supposed to be qualified to pass upon that question.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is the Committee on Military Affairs assuming the responsibility for that?

Mr. WURZBACH. As much as any committee of Congress can assume responsibility for legislation affecting the future.

Mr. Chairman, there is, however, one matter that has occurred to me as a defect in this bill which I think ought to be mentioned. I do not propose to offer an amendment to the bill to remedy it, but I believe I ought to suggest the matter to the members of the committee. I have one objection to the Ford proposal and that is it does not provide for proper governmental control over that part of the water power that is developed at Muscle Shoals over and above the amount to be used for the manufacture of fertilizer. I have the greatest confidence in the honesty and in the altruism of Henry Ford. The fact that he is the richest man in the world does not create any prejudice on my part toward him. I think he is a great man and a good man, and I have great respect for his judgment in matters of business, and I want to say that since his recent declaration with reference to his choice for the Presidency of the United States I have also acquired great respect for his political judgment. [Applause.]

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WURZBACH. I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. CROWTHER. Does the gentleman think it good policy to ignore the basic law of the country in the consideration of a proposition of this kind, reporting a bill that absolutely ignores the existing law, the water power act, in many of its parts?

Mr. WURZBACH. I have an amendment in mind, although I do not intend to introduce it. If submitted, I shall vote for it. If it is not adopted, I still intend to vote for the Ford proposal. The amendment I have in mind would read about as follows: "The Ford Co. shall, from and after the death of Henry Ford, in so far as the water power in excess of that used for manufacture of nitrates for fertilizer is concerned, be subject to the Federal water power act of June 10, 1920, except wherein the express provisions of this bill are inconsistent with said Federal water power act." Assuming the development of 90,000 horsepower, and deducting 10,000 horsepower devoted to fertilizer production, there would remain 80,000 horsepower. That remaining power ought to be under the control of the Federal water power commission act, in so far as that act is not in conflict with the express provisions of this bill and of the Ford offer.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WURZBACH. No; I regret I can not yield.

Mr. CROWTHER. Is that the gentleman's answer to my question?

Mr. WURZBACH. I have only a few moments.

Mr. CROWTHER. There is no answer.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. WURZBACH. No; I can not yield. If I had the time I would gladly yield, but I would like to go into this a little further.

Mr. BLANTON. You yielded to the gentleman from New York for one question.

Mr. WURZBACH. I, of course, recognize the great ability of the gentlemen representing the States of Alabama, Georgia, Tennessee, and the Carolinas in this House, and their devotion to the interests of their respective States, and I am not attempting to put my judgment against theirs. My good friend, Judge ALMON, representing the eighth Alabama district, in which Muscle Shoals is situated, occupies a different position than do the other Representatives above mentioned with reference to the suggested amendment. His district will be benefited in any and every event if the Ford offer is accepted regardless of whether or not limitations are imposed upon the use of such power. I am just a bit fearful as to what may happen to the established industrial enterprises of the remaining portion of Alabama and the other Southern States named.

God blessed this section of the South with a great water-power site, one of the greatest in the world. The whole Nation has a general interest therein, and that interest is fairly taken care of by a nation-wide distribution of the fertilizer product. After that interest is satisfied, the section surrounding Muscle Shoals is, I might say by divine right, next entitled to consideration. The people and the great industrial enterprises already established should be protected in those States. The amendment I have suggested has that in view.

Henry Ford, concededly a great benefactor and altruist, can not live always. In 15 years or so he will probably not be connected with the corporation he proposes to organize under the terms of this bill. This Government will then deal with just an ordinary corporation and for a period of 80 to 85 years. The question is, Are we willing to trust any corporation with unrestricted and unlimited use and control of 800,000 horsepower for a period of time extending far beyond the life of the youngest of us? It may be safely taken for granted that a power conferred to a corporation will be used and generally abused in its own interests and against the interests of the people. It is not impossible nor even improbable that this favored corporation will not destroy all competition and then fasten upon the very section of country entitled to greatest benefit a monopoly such as the world has never seen.

I do not say that this will result. I only point out a possible danger. I want to see the South prosper in every way, but especially in the line of manufacturing industry. Great progress has been and is still being made along that line. The whole section about Muscle Shoals for several hundred miles is dotted with great cotton mills. I do not want to put it in the power of any corporation, wholly or partially subsidized by the Federal Government, to endanger that industrial progress. I have a great interest in the whole country, but it is only natural that I have the deepest concern for the South, where I was born and where I have lived all my life.

As I stated in the beginning, I shall vote for the McKenzie bill, which provides for the acceptance of the Ford offer, whether the bill is amended or not. If the gentlemen representing the States contiguous to Muscle Shoals do not offer the amendment suggested, I shall not. They know the wishes of their constituents better than I do, and have a greater interest in protecting them than I have. They are all able men and devoted to the interests of their sections, and I am willing to accept their judgment on the suggested amendment. My purpose has been to put up the warning sign, "Stop, look, and listen." [Applause.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important subject. We are giving away a hundred million dollars. I raise the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers on that motion.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. McKENZIE and Mr. BANKHEAD.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 8, noes 94.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum is present, and the committee refuses to rise.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 40 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for 40 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there has been very much said this afternoon with which those of us who are in opposition to the bill agree, but there has been very little said in regard to the merits or demerits of the proposition before you by the gentlemen who have tried to sustain the idea of accepting the Henry Ford proposition as it is.

I want to just briefly call attention to one thing—a controversy in regard to the amount of money that Henry Ford proposes to pay as amortization. You will find it on page 7 of the bill, and any man can figure it. It does not take a mathematician to figure these two sums for 100 years. He proposes to make semiannual payments of $3,505 on Dam No. 3 and $19,868 on Dam No. 2. In 100 years this amounts to a little more than $4,000,000. The gentlemen in favor of this bill claim this amount will amortize $50,000,000 in 100 years. In other words, slightly more than $4,000,000 is paid in to amortize $50,000,000. I say, Why is it we do not amortize the national debt in the same way? Because you can not do it, and every man knows it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Let me suggest that if you are going to credit him with interest upon deferred payments you ought to charge him interest also on the other side of the ledger on deferred payments.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes. You would have to have more interest, and you would have to speculate to get the money.

I want to call the attention of the gentlemen on this side to the guaranty. The guaranty in this bill is not the original guaranty, but the gentlemen do not seem to understand that. Here is the guaranty which is written in the bill and which they ask you to accept. It is to be found on page 18 of the bill. That is all the personal guaranty is. It is section 23, and let us read it. Many of you are lawyers. I am not, but I know common sense when I see it:

> All of the contracts, leases, deeds, transfers, and conveyances necessary to effectuate the acceptance of said offer shall be binding upon the United States and jointly and severally upon Henry Ford, his heirs, representatives, and assigns, and the company to be incorporated by him, its successors, and assigns.

Now, gentleman, Henry Ford does not agree to a thing there except to take the $80,000,000 worth of property you are going to give him; that is all; he agrees to accept it.

Here is your original guaranty right here. I will read it:

> Upon acceptance, the promises, undertakings, and obligations shall be binding upon the United States and jointly and severally upon the undersigned, his heirs, representatives, and assigns, and the company, its successors, and assigns; and all the necessary contracts, leases, deeds, and other instruments necessary or appropriate to effectuate the purposes of this proposal shall be duly executed and delivered by the respective parties above mentioned.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. BEGG. Suppose this $10,000,000 corporation were to fail and go into bankruptcy, would the personal fortune of Henry Ford, outside of that, be in any way responsible for the bankruptcy?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly not, as everybody will admit who reads these contracts.

Mr. ALMON. Would not that apply to the power companies as well?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am not saying a word about the power companies, and if the power companies' contracts ever come on the floor of the House, I want to amend them if they are in any such shape as Henry Ford's proposition.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman allow me to finish my proposition?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; but I wish the gentleman would hurry.

Mr. BEGG. I will be as brief as I can, but I would like to get a little information. Suppose this bankruptcy should come about; then the only recourse the United States would have in order to recover the property that is given to Henry Ford for $1,500,000 would be to go in at sheriff's sale and buy it back, would it not?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Absolutely, that is all; and, as a matter of fact, they could dispose of the property to some one else and you would be left in a position where you could not regain your own property. Everybody knows that.

Mr. ALMON and Mr. McSWAIN rose.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I can not yield to the whole Democratic Party at one time.

Mr. ALMON. I am not the whole Democratic Party.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. But a gentleman back of you has risen.

Mr. ALMON. Does not the gentleman admit that under the Ford offer neither he nor his company could convey that property and give title to it?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not know.

Mr. ALMON. That is the condition of the sale.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I understand that, but I do not know.

Mr. ALMON. The gentleman ought to know by this time.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not know, and the gentleman did not know that that contract was changed.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. The gentleman said that if the bill proposing to authorize a lease to the Allied Power Co. should come before the House he would offer amendments to it, and I will ask him why, when he was drafting two bills to that effect, he did not put his ideas in his own bill?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman—and he knows it very well—that that was introduced simply for your information and so the country might know we had some other offer. I am not standing on that, but I will say this: That you should make this contract in such a way that we could go back to Henry Ford and say, "Here is the kind of a contract that the Government desires to make. Take it if you want it!" If he should refuse, then we have other offers, and the gentleman knows it very well.

Mr. McSWAIN. Has not my friend acquired some information about this matter which he did not have when he drafted his own two bills?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly. I am acquiring information about it every day.

Mr. SALMON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SALMON. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the word "severally," on page 18, line 17, in the section referred to, and ask him whether or not he considers that the estate of Henry Ford is bound to comply with this contract?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly not; and the best lawyers in the country have analyzed it, and some gentlemen who are lawyers will analyze that for the gentleman before we get through. It simply means that you bind yourself to convey, and Henry Ford forms a company; then when he has accepted, through that company, the property that you are going to give him Henry Ford ceases. You then have a corporation to deal with, and the gentleman knows it very well.

Mr. SALMON. If the gentleman will yield further, I want to assert that nobody can successfully explain away the word "severally" there and make the estate of Ford not liable.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Well, they will explain it away if you ever get into court.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. JAMES. Do you believe the original guaranty was a positive guarantee of Mr. Ford's personal fortune?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think it was; yes, sir; and some gentlemen wonder why it was that I, who at one time was supposed to favor the Henry Ford offer, have changed. It is simply because of the changes in the contract and the additional information that I have received since we started in on this matter. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN] asked me in regard to information. It is only on this side of the House that you seem to be unable to inform yourselves. You are talking about an offer that was made two years ago, and the world has gone on two years and we have found out some things in those two years.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas and Mr. HILL of Maryland rose.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. The gentleman, in reply to an inquiry made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] a moment ago, stated that in the event the corporation that was to be organized under this contract should fail or go into bankruptcy the only recourse the Government of the United States would have would be to have the property sold and buy it back.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. The gentleman certainly did not intend to answer that question in the affirmative in the light of section 19?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; I did. I refuse to yield further.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. The gentleman wants to be fair. The gentleman wants the truth.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly we want the truth.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. The truth is that section 19 of this contract gives the western division of Alabama Federal court the power to cancel this contract at any time there is a violation of the contract.

Mr. BEGG. If the gentleman will permit, that is only in case of a violation of the contract and not in case of bankruptcy.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. The gentleman certainly does not propose to say there would be a different rule applied in the case of bankruptcy?

Mr. BEGG. I certainly do.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Is not that included among the acts of omission?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has the floor.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. LAZARO. The gentleman just said that we on this side were discussing a thing that was two years old. Does the gentleman remember the speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] near the close of the Sixty-seventh Congress and what he said about Muscle Shoals?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; I know that Mr. MADDEN has had some idea here recently that we ought to give Henry Ford, among other things, $3,472,487.25 cash received by the Government for the Gorgas steam plant. I will admit that is new. It is a new idea for the chairman of the great Appropriations Committee that is supposed to try to save the Government's money and the people's money to try in this bill to give it away, and that is just what he is trying to do.

Mr. LAZARO. The gentleman knows that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has studied this subject.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I know this: I have been on this floor for nine years, and in the nine years I have fought with this side of the House for the development of Muscle Shoals, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], whom you mention, has always been opposed to me. I have been with you until now in the development of Muscle Shoals, and all I want you now to do is to preserve it for the people. [Applause.]

Mr. LAZARO. That is what we want to do.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I hope I have not advocated here for nine long years this development, and now that we have got it you are going to give it away.

Mr. LAZARO. You have quit us. That is the only trouble.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I quit you because you want to give it away and I want to preserve it for the people.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentlema. yield for a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman seems to be uneasy about the solvency of a Ford contract. I want to ask the gentleman, since Mr. Henry Ford has underwritten the gentleman's party and administration, does not the gentleman think he ought to be fair and let his party underwrite Mr. Ford?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have nothing to do with Mr. Ford and you have nothing to do with Mr. Ford after you pass this contract. He will take your property and it will go to a corportation of $10,000,000, and that is all there is to it. Gentlemen, what is before you is simply a business proposition and there is nothing else to it.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. The clause which the gentleman refers to is section 23, which is very brief and is as follows:

> All of the contracts, leases, deeds, transfers, and conveyances necessary to effectuate the acceptance of said offer shall be binding upon the United States, and jointly and severally upon Henry Ford, his heirs, representatives, and assigns, and the company to be incorporated by him, its successors and assigns.

That does not bind Henry Ford or his heirs or successors or assigns to anything except those things which are necessary to effectuate the acceptance of the contract, and when the contract is once accepted, there is not an iota of personal responsibility on the part of Henry Ford or anybody connected with him.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman is absolutely right.

Mr. QUIN. But the condition is in the deed itself.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I now want to call your attention to something else.

Mr. WYANT. Will the gentleman yield? Is there any provision in this bill at any place that prevents this stock, if any should be issued, from coming into the hands of foreigners or people who are not American citizens?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; there is. That is all right and we have no controversy about that.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman would not expect Mr. Ford to risk his whole personal fortune in a thing of this kind?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I certainly would; and you gentlemen on this side contend he is doing that.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Section 23 does that.

Mr. JONES. Section 23 binds the $10,000,000 corporation, to say the least.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. You are right, and I suggest that the gentleman talk to the gentlemen on his own side and convince them he is right.

Mr. JONES. And, in addition to that, it binds his estate to any contracts necessary to complete the acceptance of it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is all. You are right, and I thank the gentleman very much for his suggestion.

Mr. JONES. That is doing a good deal, is it not?

Mr. McSWAIN. The gentleman from Iowa agrees that it binds the corporation?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. McSWAIN. Does not the contract and the bill say that it binds Henry Ford, his heirs, representatives, assigns, and the corporation?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. To do what?

Mr. McSWAIN. If it binds the corporation, why does it not bind them all?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman from Texas has it right. He has seen the law, and he knows the law.

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes; he has seen it for the first time.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman says the company or corporation is bound on account of the language used in section 23?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is the theory upon which the gentleman says the company is bound. Now, how does the gentleman distinguish between the binding effect upon Henry Ford and the company when exactly the same language is used to bind the company that is used to bind Henry Ford, which he admits is binding upon the company?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am not a lawyer, but I believe the legal distinction is clear and that any court would so hold.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; I want to answer the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. All right, answer him. [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman says that this is binding on the company, a company with $10,000,000. But Henry Ford is not bound. In the bill you propose to deliver to the company $80,000,000 worth of property. The company is bound, but Henry Ford is not bound. It is very plain.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. On page 2, line 1, of the bill it says:

> for the purpose of carrying out the terms of this agreement, Henry Ford will form a corporation * * * which company will immediately enter into and execute all necessary or appropriate instruments of contract to effectuate this agreement.

There is the answer to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Henry Ford will form a corporation, and in section 23 he makes himself responsible as the guarantor for the corporation.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, not at all.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Then I can not read the English language.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Well, ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]. He has the right idea.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Michigan. I would like to ask the gentleman what contracts, leases, transfers, and conveyances there are, other than those contemplated by this arrangement, upon which Henry Ford could be subject or bound, except the contract entered into by the corporation?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. None.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Michigan. Then that settles the question whether Henry Ford would be responsible under this arrangement.

Mr. MANLOVE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MANLOVE. This committee, with many eminent lawyers, seems divided as to the true intent and interpretation of section 23. In view of this fact, and that a court of lawyers called upon to interpretate that section might not be able to agree as to the meaning of that section as it now reads, might it not be wise to amend that section by using language so plain that anyone could understand the binding effect and terms thereof?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am not a lawyer, but I sat in the Military Committee for three months and heard the debate in regard to the binding effect of this language, and the more I heard of the debate the less I knew about it. [Laughter.] I came to the conclusion that as they have changed the original binding clause from the original offer Henry Ford tendered to Congress, that somewhere along the line someone knew how to get around having a binding clause in the contract.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. If this was changed so as to read 50 years, and was corrected so as to meet the objection the gentleman made as to section 23—and I think he is clearly right about that—would the gentleman then favor the passage of this bill?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, certainly; if you would change the bill as it ought to be changed I would be glad to vote for Henry Ford. I always wanted to favor Henry Ford, but I want to protect the people of this country and the people of the Southeast.

Mr. SPEAKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SPEAKS. Would it satisfy the gentleman's mind, with respect to section 23, if after the word "offer" there should be inserted "and faithfully execute the provisions," so that it would read: "All of the contract leases, deeds, transfers, and conveyances necessary to effectuate the acceptance of said offer and faithfully execute its provisions shall be binding upon the United States," and so forth?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say to you, gentlemen, that if you can draw something that will bind Henry Ford I will be satisfied. I want to say this: If I can have my way about it I am going to offer the original binding clause that Henry Ford himself sent to Congress, and I think that will bind him. It is contained in the offer he made.

Mr. YATES. What was the guaranty that does not now appear in the bill?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If the gentleman will listen I will read it. I have read it before:

> The above proposals are submitted for acceptance as a whole and not in part. Upon acceptance the promises, undertakings, and obligations shall be binding upon the United States, and jointly and severally upon the undersigned, his heirs, representatives, and assigns, and the company, its successors and assigns; and all the necessary contracts, leases, deeds, and other instruments necessary or appropriate to effectuate the purposes of this proposal shall be duly executed and delivered by the respective parties above mentioned.

I have understood from lawyers that that is binding on Henry Ford.

Mr. WYANT. Does the gentleman think that a business man as shrewd as Henry Ford would create a corporation of $10,000,000 with all this risk and bind his personal fortune?

Mr. McSWAIN. Henry Ford has done a lot of things that the public calls foolish. When he raised the pay of the laboring men in his factories he was called foolish.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. ACKERMAN. What was the reason that the original clause in the offer was changed?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I can not explain that. It is something I could never understand.

Mr. WURZBACH. Let me ask the gentleman is there anything in the offer of the Allied Power Co. that shows any greater security for the performance of their contract than there is in Henry Ford's proposal?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. As I understand it, there is nothing that binds anybody excepting that they have $5,000,000 more capital. That is all the difference there is, and I want to say that I will have to analyze that.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I understand the gentleman to say in response to a question of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN] that this bill was framed with the intent to carry out the express provisions of the proposal made by Henry Ford, and I understand the gentleman further to say that the proposal made by Henry Ford does bind him personally to carry out the contract and the agreement which will be made with the United States. Am I correct in that?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am so informed by good lawyers. I do not know. They might change their minds, as lawyers do sometimes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If that be true, if the proposal made by Henry Ford would bind him personally for this act of Congress on its face, and it is intended by Congress to carry out that proposal, does the gentleman believe that there is a court in the country that would relieve Henry Ford from responsibility if he goes ahead and forms this company as he agrees to do under the terms of this act?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I know this, and the gentleman knows it, that when you have this contract, you stand on the contract, and it will not be propaganda such as has been spread out over this country. It is the contract that you have to stand on in any court, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. In addition to the $5,000,000 extra capital, the water power act supervises and gives guaranty, does it not?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly. There would be $15,000,000 capital.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Does not the gentleman recall the testimony of the president of the Alabama Power Co., or the representative of that company, in which he testified that his company had considerable outstanding bonds, and does he recall the testimony of Mr. Yates in regard to the $5,000,000 concern, when he testified that they did not intend to pay in more than 10 per cent, and perhaps would never have to pay in any more?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The trouble with the gentleman from Texas is that he is trying the wrong case. Let us talk about Henry Ford's contract. When you have amended this offer of Henry Ford's, as I hope you will, and he either accepts or refuses, then you can discuss some of the other offers, if necessary. Henry Ford's contract is the one we are considering. Let us confine our remarks to it.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I have no disposition to get away from it, but will the gentleman yield for this question? Is it not the purpose of the gentleman to offer his bill as a substitute for this?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I wanted to get the record straight.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If you had read the minority report, you would understand what we want to do.

Mr. McDUFFIE. But the gentleman from Maryland said——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, I am not responsible for anybody but myself.

Mr. SALMON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SALMON. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to section 23 of the bill. This bill provides that in the conveyances to Mr. Ford of the property, that his proposition shall become a part of the covenant of the conveyances. If this proposition is a part of the covenant of the conveyances, let me read in that connection section 23:

SEC. 23. All of the contracts, leases, deeds, transfers, and conveyances necessary to effectuate the acceptance of said offer shall be binding upon the United States, and jointly and severally upon Henry Ford, his heirs, representatives, and assigns, and the company to be incorporated by him, its successors and assigns.

That language beyond any kind of question——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, is the gentleman asking a question or making a speech?

Mr. SALMON. I am making an observation and calling attention to this point.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Get to the point.

Mr. SALMON. All right. The point is this, that this section 23 binds Henry Ford's estate to the carrying out of the contract contained in this proposition.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. I would ask the gentleman and also the gentleman who just was on the floor in respect to section 23, this question. I concede that section 23 does bind Henry Ford to all of the obligations looking to the acceptance of the contract, but I am wondering if the proponents of this bill would accept an amendment, to insert after the words "to effectuate the acceptance" the words "and execution" or "and performance" of said contract. So that it shall be binding on the United States and jointly and severally upon Henry Ford, his heirs, representatives, and so forth. If they do not accept the amendment making it binding for the performance of it, then Henry Ford is not any more bound than I am.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman has exactly the same thought that I did when this bill was in the committee. I offered that amendment and they rejected it, because they said—and this is worthy of your notice—that Henry Ford would not permit them to change the contract. They were impotent to change that contract, and I say, since when has it come about that a wealthy man sends to Congress a contract and says you must not change it, you must take it without the dotting of an i or the crossing of a t. That sounds familiar, but it is the first time that we have heard those words from a wealthy citizen, who has no official connection with the Government. It is bad enough when it comes from the bureaus or from the Executive.

Mr. WINGO. Is the gentleman speaking about Andrew Mellon now?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; I am speaking of others. I have been here for nine years, and I have heard that same expression in our committee many, many times, and it did not come from Andrew Mellon.

Mr. WINGO. Did it come from the General Staff? [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Sometimes; but I thank goodness for one thing, that I belong to the committee that refused to accept it in every case. We have changed their bill; we never stood for it; and the gentleman knows very well that during the hysteria of war I stood on the floor of this House and fought the General Staff on that very proposition, and I shall fight the General Staff or anyone else who sends a bill to Congress and says that we must take it just as it is and that we can not change it. That is one reason I am opposed to this bill.

But it is not Henry Ford who says you can not change this bill. It is a bunch of promoters right here within the shadow of this Capitol who are dictating how you shall word this bill.

Mr. QUIN. What are they promoting?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They are promoting Henry Ford's proposition to Congress.

Mr. McSWAIN. Have they any selfish motives? Has the gentleman heard of any loaning of money with the notes being torn up?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We have not got to that point yet. [Laughter.] That will come later.

Mr. McSWAIN. Does the gentleman think they will get to that point in time?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do, absolutely, and I hate to see the whole Democratic side indicted——

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will.

Mr. WINGO. I am fearful the gentleman did not appreciate the effect of some of the statements he made. The gentleman does not intend to leave the impression that there is any corruption back of this proposition; does he?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not know anything about it——

Mr. WINGO. Has the gentleman any knowledge of any facts which would justify the conclusion which is susceptible of being drawn from the gentleman's statement that there are certain influences back of this proposition that might lead to the indictment of some gentlemen?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not know.

Mr. WINGO. Has the gentleman any facts that even constitute the basis of the statement the gentleman has made?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I made the statement some gentlemen are promoting this thing through Congress.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman made another statement that certain Democrats were apt to be indicted growing out of it. The gentleman, of course, did not mean that seriously?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That the entire Democratic Party would be indicted? Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. WINGO. This is the point I am trying to make, and I am serious. I said I did not think the gentleman appreciated the effect of some of the statements he made. The gentleman made some statements that are susceptible of an interpretation. I am afraid——

Mr. MANLOVE. I would like to hear the gentleman make his own statement.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman yielded to me.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. What is the question?

Mr. WINGO. The question is, Is there any fact within the gentleman's knowledge which justifies the intimation he has made that there was corruption and men might be indicted?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman is putting something into my mouth I did not say.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman has no knowledge of any such facts?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have no knowledge of any corruption, if that is what the gentleman wants.

Mr. WINGO. And the gentleman's statement that men might be indicted was truly based on nothing at all?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That was just a little fun I was having. If you gentlemen will keep quiet I will try to make a speech. I am going to refuse to yield from now on, until I have completed my speech, when I will be glad to yield for pertinent questions.

Mr. HAMMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No, I will not; I have just said I would not yield. [Laughter.]

Now, gentlemen, the bill before you is a contract proposing to sell and lease to a company to be formed by Henry Ford the tremendous and valuable properties owned by the Government at Muscle Shoals. As a Government enterprise, these properties are second in value to the Panama Canal. When completed, the undertaking will be one of the greatest achievements of the American people. I believe it is the first time that an actual contract has been laid before Congress for its consideration and decision. Heretofore we have authorized departments, bureaus, and other agencies of the Government to make contracts and then afterwards we have, quite often, criticized them for showing favoritism or lack of business judgment. In this instance, however, the sole responsibility rests with Congress.

The Members of this body are the ones who will have to defend the gift of enormous property and industrial advantage to a private citizen from the resources of our country if this contract is made. With a few changes the present Ford "offer" is the same as the one made in May, 1922. At that time Congress had decided it would not appropriate the money necessary to complete construction of Dam No. 2. It appeared that the undertaking was to be abandoned for the time being, if not entirely. The great merit attached to the Ford "offer" at that time was the opportunity afforded the Government to relinquish the proposition and turn it over to private enterprise. In other words, these Muscle Shoals properties were looked upon as a Government "war baby," and Mr. Ford's bid presented a possible method of unloading. Few, if any, of the Members of this House had a real appreciation of the magnitude and future immense value of these properties.

At this time the Senate Agricultural Committee and the House Military Affairs Committee were authorized to make a trip to Muscle Shoals, investigate the properties, and make recommendation to Congress. We were all amazed at the tremendous work already accomplished and the possible immensity of the undertaking if carried on to completion. Everyone agreed that the enterprise should not be abandoned. Those favoring the development of Muscle Shoals were inclined to favor the Ford "offer" rather than have such development suspended. Hearings were held by the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, and also by the Agricultural Committee of the Senate. It was at this point that dispute arose over the disposition of the Gorgas plant. Many of the Members, including myself, believed that this particular plant was not an integral part of the Muscle Shoals development, and that the Alabama Power Co. was justified in contending that the Government should sell this plant to them at a fair valuation. Mr. Ford demanded that this plant must be included in the properties covered by his "offer." He was urged to withdraw his demand for this one particular unit, but his answer was to the effect that when he had anything new to offer on Muscle Shoals the two committees of Congress would be notified.

This controversy led to a most remarkable report being made by the House Military Affairs Committee. The report that was voted out of the committee by 11 members was immediately assailed by 9 of the 11 who voted to report the bill. The facts are that 10 of the members on the committee were opposed to reporting the bill at all; nine were in favor of reporting the bill including the Gorgas steam plant and two in favor of reporting the bill without the Gorgas steam plant. These two consisted of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE], who sponsors the bill now before you, and myself. We refused to vote for reporting the bill if the Gorgas steam plant were included. While I voted for reporting the bill, I was not at all satisfied with many of its provisions, but felt that the Members of this House should be given an opportunity to express themselves on the proposition then presented by Mr. Ford. The right to amend the bill as reported was reserved.

Congress has, since the time Mr. Ford made his first offer, appropriated funds to carry on the work at Muscle Shoals, and expert opinion testifies to the fact that it is being done rapidly, efficiently, and economically. The passage of two years time has brought many new developments. Muscle Shoals need no longer be regarded as an investment to be placed on the auction block and bid in at salvage value. Time and invention have greatly appreciatel the value of these properties. There is no longer any necessity for "bargain prices" to the Ford Co. or anyone else. Two years ago, when Mr. Ford's offer was the only substantial bid made, and the real values of these properties were indefinite, there was sound reason to consider his proposition. But there is none to-day. Any impartial analysis of his proposition and demands will disclose the absurdity of the Government entering into any such contract as the one embodied in the bill before you. These properties represent an investment and actual cost to the taxpayers of the United States of more than $135,000,000. They include several thousand acres of land; steam plants; fine residences; hotel; waterworks; various shops; railroad tracks; cement sidewalks; improved roads; concrete streets; sewerage systems, and other modern equipment.

For properties costing the Government more than $80,000,000 Mr. Ford proposes to pay $5,000,000 in several annual installments. But from this amount you must deduct $500,000 worth of platinum and $3,472,487.24 cash from sale of the Gorgas plant. This leaves a payment to be made by Mr. Ford of a little more than $1,000,000 for property costing the Government more than $80,000,000, and the actual scrap value of which is more than $16,000,000. If this is not a gift, I do not know what is.

The primary object of the Government in undertaking the development at Muscle Shoals was to secure an adequate production of nitrates, absolutely necessary for the manufacture of high explosives in war time, and the production of such nitrates for use in the manufacture of cheap fertilizers in peace time. These two factors are still paramount. The third is the utmost possible distribution of the hydroelectric power to be developed throughout the Southern States. I firmly believe that until recently the question of fertilizer production has caused the scarcity of bids for these properties. The costs involved in such manufacture and in maintaining plants for immediate operation by the Government in the event of war were problematical. The water power was very valuable, but this value had to be discounted in face of these other costs. By reason of recent discoveries it now appears that fixed nitrogen and other fertilizer compounds will soon be possible of production at far less cost than now obtains. If this be true, the value of the Government's properties at Muscle Shoals will be greatly enhanced.

I am not committed to the bid of the allied power companies of the South or any other offer that has been submitted. I am opposed to the present Ford Co. "offer" solely because I fail to see how it begins to make adequate return to the Government for value received. With the exception of the Allied Power Co. proposal, I have not had time to analyze any of the other propositions submitted, such as the Hooker-Atterbury offer or that of the Union Carbide Co. In the minority report filed by myself and several other members of the Military Affairs Committee a comparison is made between the Ford Co. "offer" and that of the power companies. I believe this comparison is fair and unprejudiced. In financial return alone the power company offer shows savings to the Government amounting to more than $34,000,000 over a period of 50 years and more than $75,000,000 over a period of 100 years.

It is estimated that the amount of hydroelectric power capable of development at Muscle Shoals upon completion of Dams Nos. 2 and 3 is more than 850,000 horsepower. Under the Ford offer this power would be placed at his company's sole disposal for 100 years. If obtained on the basis of his present proposal, he would have the cheapest power in this country, if not in the world. Mr. Ford refuses to subject his company to the jurisdiction of the Federal water power act. He demands that Congress ignore its own policy, arrived at after mature deliberation. Many specious arguments have been advanced by Mr. Ford's proponents about advantages accruing to the Government and the serving of public interest by granting him this special privilege. They do not state, however, why if Mr. Ford desires to become a philanthropist he insists on the 100-year lease period. The majority report favoring the acceptance of the Ford Co. offer contains this statement:

There is nothing in the history of the electric-power business to indicate that water-power rights will be more valuable 50 years hence than they are to-day.

Again, I ask, why, then, the insistence on the 100-year period. True it is that some mention is made that Mr. Ford's so-called retirement fund can be set up over a 100-year period for about one-seventh of the annuity required for a 50-year period. And this brings to our attention another fallible benefit to be derived from Mr. Ford. He goes into the Ponzi realms of finance. It is suavely suggested that a retirement or amortization fund be created. Over a period of about 100 years Mr. Ford will pay into this fund slightly more than $4,000,000. The Government is to shrewdly invest the annual payments made in such manner that at the end of 100 years or thereabouts this same $4,000,000 will have multiplied itself into an amount ranging anywhere from $49,000,000 if compounded at 4 per cent to more than $100,000,000 if compounded at 5 per cent. It is pertinent to inquire, if such a weird scheme is practical, why the Government should not set up a similar fund to retire the entire national debt. Why limit its financial ability and shrewdness to benefit only Mr. Ford? If any such absurd scheme can be supported as favorable to the Ford Co. offer, it might be pointed out that the Government by taking the annual payment made by the power companies of 4 per cent on $17,000,000, which is not made under the Ford proposal, and establishing a similar fund, would secure a return of more than $700,000,000 over the same period.

However, to revert to the 100-year lease period demanded by Mr. Ford, we find that the value of merely these special water-power privileges over and above what the same might be worth to any individual or corporation, taking the same properties under the regular terms and procedure of the Federal water power act, is estimated by Mr. O. C. Merrill, secretary of the Federal Power Commission, as approximately $200,000,000.

As I have already pointed out, the primary object for the Government's venture at Muscle Shoals was to provide a sure supply of nitrates necessary for the manufacture of high explosives in the event of war. This requirement is absolute and must be met for the purpose of national defense. It is also desired and deemed essential to advance the conservation of our soils by providing cheap fertilizers for the farmers. The depletion of soil fertility has caused the economic downfall of nations in the past. The need and use of good and cheap fertilizers is recognized. A nation devoid of nitrogen supply would be defenseless in time of war. A nation devoid of fertilizer supply would ultimately lose its economic power. The maintenance and improvement of these nitrate plants is therefore absolutely necessary. It would be an outrage for the Government to permit Henry Ford to dismantle plant No. 1 and turn it into an automobile factory, as he intends to do. Notwithstanding the many allegations made by Mr. Ford's self-appointed agents as to his intention and ability to supply cheap fertilizer to the farmers, he has never evidenced the desire to enter into a binding guaranty to do this. As a matter of fact, his attitude concerning fertilizer manufacture has been negative instead of positive. The language of the bill before you is quite peculiar, and it has a peculiar history. It is certain that Mr. Ford's original offer contained no binding provision for the manufacture of fertilizer. I am not convinced that Mr. Ford could be compelled continuously to produce fertilizers under the terms of this present bill. Several members of the Military Affairs Committee sought to have Mr. Ford's fertilizer commitment made more definite and binding. Different legal interpretation can be made of the language used in section 14 of this bill.

As Mr. Ford has refused to clarify this particular provision, it is right to bring attention to certain records contained in the former hearings before the committee. These disclose that Mr. Ford stated to the Secretary of War that if he could not make fertilizer at a profit he intended to "quit." According to the testimony of experts, the cyanamide process used at plant No. 2 is excessively expensive and practically obsolete. This is the plant and process Mr. Ford proposes to use. At least no other plan is set forth in his "offer." I do not believe he could manufacture at a profit under this process. If he could not, would he proceed to "quit"? If he did quit, could he be compelled to resume operation under the terms of this fertilizer provision as now worded? If Mr. Ford is sincere in his intention to manufacture and provide cheap fertilizers for the farmers, as claimed for him, why should be object to a plain, definite statement binding him and his company? Why does he balk at the actual guaranty desired? Why is it that for two years he has always refused to come before our committee and explain his real intention? Recent developments have indicated that it will soon be possible to manufacture fixed nitrogen at greatly reduced costs. This being true, the production of cheap fertilizers can be accomplished by applying the new and more economical methods. It is no longer necessary for the Government to give special privileges to any individual or group in order to dispose of Muscle Shoals.

The refusal of Mr. Ford to place himself or his proposed company within the scope of the Federal water power act is not difficult to understand. The tremendous advantages and benefits he derives thereby are easily determined. But it is difficult to follow the reasoning of those urging the 100-year lease period. It is absurd to claim that the Government or anyone else will benefit from such a procedure except Mr. Ford and the company to be formed by him. Mr. Ford is an industrial genius, but he has competitors. If he secures the use of this power at the cost he proposes to pay for it and without any restrictions governing its distribution, he will have more industrial power than any one man ever had in the world's history.

The 850,000 horsepower to be developed will equal about one-third of all the remaining undeveloped water power resources in nine Southern States. Mr. Ford is not obliged to distribute this power throughout these States, and there is no reason to believe he would do so. There is reason to believe that he would absorb this power by building various manufacturing plants, such as cotton mills, automobile factories, etc. This cheap power, coupled with Mr. Ford's industrial capacity, would enable him to destroy all competition in the immediate vicinity. He would be supreme. These properties are adjacent to rich mineral deposits, including coal, iron, and aluminum. It is safe to say that the cry of "cheap fertilizers for the farmers" has been used as the campaign slogan by propagandists favoring Mr. Ford to divert attention from the great value of this water power. Give Mr. Ford the unrestricted use of this power at the cost proposed and he will become the greatest monopolist this country has ever had. He will not be subject to Federal or State regulation. On the other hand, the bid of the power companies subscribes to both Federal and State jurisdiction and assures the distribution of this vast power throughout the South where it belongs.

I have no personal antagonism toward Mr. Ford. I admire his commercial capacity and industrial genius. We must all understand that it is not Henry Ford we are dealing with; it is promoters here in Washington that we deal with now, and if we accept this offer it would be a corporation that would carry out the contract, not Henry Ford. I hold no brief for the power companies' "offer," or any other bid thus far submitted. What I do object and earnestly protest is the enormous gift of property proposed in this bill. Those favoring this measure have argued that Mr. Ford will not accept any changes made in its provisions. Claimants for special privileges and Government favors are usually more patient and diplomatic. Is it Mr. Ford or his supposed agents who say to the Government, "Here is my proposition; take it or leave it"? In the past, those seeking to have advantages bestowed by the Government have evidenced a readiness and more often an eagerness to bargain for such advantages and special privileges. Are we sure Mr. Ford would not do likewise if pressed?

But why this great rush to present Mr. Ford with Muscle Shoals? Is the desire to benefit the Government or to benefit Mr. Ford? Everyone must recognize the great appreciation in the value of these properties that has taken place during the past several months. It is now easier to visualize their probable future value. The Wilson Dam and installation of the first eight units will not be completed until about July 1 of next year. No great advantage will accrue to the Government in disposing of Muscle Shoals at the immediate moment. I firmly believe that far better offers than any of those thus far submitted will be forthcoming during the next several months. Even if this were not so, I can see no reason why Congress should single out Mr. Ford as the one best entitled to Government bounty. The Ford offer is not the best that can be secured. At least one better proposition has already been submitted. But if the Ford Co. offer is to be favorably considered and the best interests of the people of this Nation protected, it must be amended so as to carry the following provisions:

First, by placing the power projects under the control of the Federal water power act, to insure distribution of power; second, by leasing the projects for 50 years on terms which will insure a net annual return as great as other bids submitted; third, by leasing the nitrate plants for a nominal rental for the guaranteed annual manufacture of fertilizer or fertilizer compounds.

I do not believe that any of the offers yet submitted make adequate return, either in money payments or otherwise, for the value of the present and future assets available at Muscle Shoals. The water-power value alone will constantly appreciate. Any disposition of the power available should specifically provide for its general distribution throughout the Southern States.

I earnestly hope that the Members of this House will defeat this bill, unless proper safeguards are inserted to protect and provide for the best interests and welfare of the people.

If the people's interests are to be served and protected, it is imperative that this bill be amended as suggested. Otherwise it would be the greatest gift of property ever made by this Government to anyone.

My wish in this entire matter has been to develop this great property and, now that we have it developed, to protect the interests of the people, especially of the Southern States, so they will receive full benefit. Selfish and corporate interests must not be permitted to exploit the people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. HAMMER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman be allowed, by unanimous consent, to proceed for one minute. I want to ask him a question.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to call your attention to this: It is not only the guaranty that Henry Ford offers that is lacking, but Henry Ford destroys the hope of the people of this country to receive cheap fertilizer. He proposes to take these great nitrate plants and destroy plant No. 1, the synthetic-ammonia process plant. There is no question about that. He is going to make it into an automobile factory. Read his testimony on page 258:

Mr. HULL. Under this contract you also take plant No. 1.
Mr. MAYO. Yes, sir.
Mr. HULL. What do you intend to do with that?
Mr. MAYO. Use it for manufacturing purposes.
Mr. HULL. For manufacturing fertilizer?
Mr. MAYO. No, sir.
Mr. HULL. For manufacturing nitrates?
Mr. MAYO. No, sir; manufacturing parts for our automobile business.
Mr. HULL. You intend to manufacture parts for the automobile over there?
Mr. MAYO. Yes, sir; raw materials.
Mr. HULL. That would, of course, contemplate changing that plant entirely from a nitrate plant?
Mr. MAYO. Yes, sir.

There is new testimony as to the value to the people of the United States of nitrate plants Nos. 1 and 2, which it is proposed that we shall here practically give away for nothing to Mr. Ford. The testimony I allude to was given by the Government's most expert witness on this subject—Dr. F. G. Cottrell, director of the fixed nitrogen research laboratory of the Department of Agriculture, at a hearing before a subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee, Mr. MADDEN's own committee, on February 20—just a few days ago.

Testifying as to the scope of the work at the nitrogen laboratory—and if we are not going to accept as authoritative the testimony of the Government's own experts before Mr. MADDEN's committee, whose testimony are we going to accept—Doctor Cottrell said:

We have plans worked out now for plants that will operate where one of those that were built at Muscle Shoals during the war failed to operate. That was our first major problem in regard to what is known as plant No. 1 in the Muscle Shoals project, and we have that now in shape, so we feel certain we can actually build and put such a plant as that into commission and operate at a lower cost than anything that is now being done in this country.

The whole point of our work, of course, is aimed at cheapening the production of the nitrogen portion of the fertilizer that the farmer uses.

At the close of the war period the plants at Muscle Shoals were shut down. There were two plants, plant No. 1 and plant No. 2, plant No. 2 being the cyanamid plant, and plant No. 1 being the so-called modified Haber process plant, or, more generally, the direct synthetic ammonia process. It was recognized from the beginning, or from the time those plants were put up that there was no question but what we could make plant No. 2 operate and make cyanamid. That technique was pretty well known in this country, but it was also recognized that it was to be an obsolete method so far as fertilizer was concerned.

It had served its purpose in the development of the art. It was too expensive.

The Haber plant, or plant No. 1, was the one we were taking the greatest gamble on being able to work, but the one that would go furthest toward the cutting of the costs if successful.

At present we believe we have the No. 1 process in such shape that it is economical.

I, for one, have always felt that it was aimed more directly at the fertilizer question than No. 2.

Plant No. 2 might, when the Wilson Dam is completed, be able to produce at about the current fertilizer prices, but it gives no promise of appreciably bettering them.

I think we can already say with confidence that we see the opportunity of cutting the cost of the nitrogen side of fertilizer very nearly one-half. That must not be interpreted, however, to mean the cutting in half of the finished fertilizer for the farmer. That is a confusion that sometimes comes in there. The nitrogen is the largest part of the cost in fertilizer.

There is the testimony of the Government's principal expert witness as to the value of nitrate plant No. 1. And it is nitrate plant No. 1 that Mr. Mayo, Mr. Ford's personal representative, says Mr. Ford will tear to pieces after we give it to him, if we do, although it cost $13,000,000; and after he tears it to pieces he is going to turn it into an automobile factory for his private uses.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; I refuse to yield.

Mr. WYANT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question pertinent to this matter.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. All right.

Mr. WYANT. It is stated that these plants are capable of producing 800,000 horsepower. Can the gentleman give us any idea of the value of this current at the point of production?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I wish I had time, I would go into that feature of it. I will answer it briefly. When you come to find out what that great hydro power that you are going to give to Henry Ford for $1,200,000 involves, the figures are staggering. You, gentlemen, most of you, pay for electricity, from 5 to 10 cents per kilowatt hour. The maximum flow over the two dams and probable installation is more than 850,000 horsepower. And yet if we set up down there and sold that power at 1 cent per kilowatt hour, the entire amount per year would be more than $50,000,000. Think of it, my friends, and yet you are giving it to Henry Ford for $1,200,000.

Now, that is the maximum amount, remember. I am figuring 1 cent per kilowatt hour and that may be a little high. I do not know. I am trying to find out—honestly trying to find out—what that electricity is worth, and I say here you can not find out what it is worth. This Government is buying electricity. They are buying it out at Rock Island Arsenal, and they pay nine-tenths of a cent per kilowatt hour, and if you figure that on Muscle Shoals the maximum amount of power that would go over those falls, not for 50 years, not for 100 years, but forever, would be worth more than $48,000,000 a year.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman give us the amount of profit that would go into the coffers of the Alabama Power Co. if their offer were accepted?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I know that if you would take an agency that can produce that power you can make people pay for it. The Alabama company or the Tennessee company can be made to transmit that power at a reasonable figure to the people that use it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MAPES, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 518) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to sell to Henry Ford nitrate plant No. 1, at Sheffield, Ala.; nitrate plant No. 2, at Muscle Shoals, Ala., Waco Quarry, near Russellville, Ala.; and to lease to the corporation to be incorporated by him Dam No. 2 and Dam No. 3 (as designated in H. Doc. No. 1262, 64th Cong., 1st sess.), including power stations when constructed as provided herein, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

SALARIES OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES.

Mr. CAPPER. I present a memorial of the city commissioners of Kansas City as to the salaries of postal employees, which I ask to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KANSAS CITY, KANS., February 21, 1924.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: The following resolution was passed by the city commissioners of Kansas City, Kans. This for your information:

Resolution 8191.

"Be it resolved by the Board of Commissioners of the City of Kansas City, Kans., That the salaries paid the postal employees of the United States fixed by an act of Congress and approved June 5, 1920, are not sufficient to properly enable these employees to live in accordance with their proper needs. We therefore urge your committee to recommend the scale of wages presented by the post office clerks, letter carriers, and the Railway Mail clerks (H. R. 4123, S. 1898); be it further

"Resolved, That we recommend that a differential for night work be granted these employees, as it is quite evident that the night work is more arduous and exhausting than day work; be it further

"Resolved, That their retirement legislation be recommended as presented. (H. R. 705 and S. 1220.)"

Adopted by the board of commissioners, February 5, 1924.

HOWARD PAYNE, City Clerk.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, at a recent meeting of the National Merchant Marine Association in this city its governing council adopted a rather interesting set of resolutions touching the merchant marine and its relation to the pending commercial treaty with Germany. I ask unanimous consent that those resolutions may be referred to the Committee on Commerce and inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions adopted at annual meeting of the governing council of the National Merchant Marine Association, in Washington, D. C., March 4, 1924.

Resolved by the governing council of the National Merchant Marine Association, That we are unalterably opposed to any provisions of the contemplated commercial treaty with Germany, or of any future treaty with any other country, that would prevent the United States from granting aid and encouragement to its merchant marine in foreign trade through a system of preferential customs duties and tonnage dues, or through a system of preferential railroad rates, whenever such methods of assistance may seem desirable or necessary. We do not, however, object to the inclusion, in the pending or any other treaty, of the most-favored-nation principle.

Resolved, That we heartily uphold and urge the prompt enactment of the bill before Congress for the use of the construction loan fund provided in the merchant marine act, 1920, for the conversion of steamships into motor ships as the most immediate and direct means of promoting the efficiency and economy of American shipping in overseas commerce.

Resolved, That we also reaffirm the resolutions adopted by the governing council of the National Merchant Marine Association September 25, 1923, as follows:

"That the National Merchant Marine Association favors private operation of American shipping and is opposed to any form of Government operation.

"That there should be prompt enforcement of section 21 of the merchant marine act of 1920, applying the coastwise laws to insular possessions, including the Philippines; and also of section 34 of the same act, providing for notification of an intent to modify the commercial treaties that now stand in the way of a return to preferential duties and tonnage taxes.

"That enactment by Congress is favored of legislation applying the principle of preferential duties and tonnage taxes for the encouragement of American shipping as against vessels of other nations engaged in the indirect trade.

"That certificates should be issued to American exporters of goods of American production in American vessels, and to American importers of goods on the free list in American vessels; these certificates, which could be made negotiable and transferable, representing a percentage of the value of the goods, and ultimately to be used in the payment of customs duties.

"That governmental forces and supplies should be carried in privately owned American ships, and that ocean travel by Government officials and employees should be restricted to American ships, when these are available.

"That a national policy should be adopted, reserving the transportation of, as nearly as practicable, one-half of the total number of immigrants admitted to the United States in any fiscal year to vessels registered or enrolled and licensed under the laws of the United States.

"That an immediate and thorough revision is recommended of the navigation laws and rules of the United States, through the cooperation of the Department of Commerce, the Shipping Board, and the private ship owners and operators of the country, with prompt action by Congress.

"That there should be a closer coordination of rail and water transportation for facilitating the export commerce of the interior of the country, and that the association pledges its best efforts to bring about a practical working out of this policy.

"That the officers and men of the American merchant marine should be enrolled in the Naval Reserve of the United States under suitable regulations as to pay, qualifications, and duties.

"That the repeal is recommended of all laws that admit foreign-built ships, including yachts, to American registry."

Resolutions adopted at the annual meeting of the governing council of the National Merchant Marine Association, held at the Washington Hotel, Washington, D. C., March 4, 1924.

Whereas the Hon. JOSEPH E. RANSDELL, Senator from Louisiana, has served as president of the National Merchant Marine Association since its inception; and

Whereas Senator RANSDELL has unsparingly devoted his time and energy to the purpose of this organization, namely, the development of a merchant marine under the American flag adequate to the needs of the Nation in time of peace as well as in time of war; and

Whereas Senator RANSDELL has constantly, with admirable persistence, in public addresses and on the floor of the Senate, brought to the attention of the public a realization of the value and necessity of an adequate merchant marine; and

Whereas Senator RANSDELL has recently in his appearance before the Foreign Relations Committee opposed a treaty which in the opinion of the governing council of the National Merchant Marine Association would have so tied the hands of this Government that the upbuilding of the merchant marine would have been seriously impaired, if not destroyed: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the governing council of the National Merchant Marine Association tender to its president, the Hon. JOSEPH E. RANSDELL, their hearty appreciation and sincere thanks for his services in thus promoting the development of a merchant marine, as before said, under the American flag adequate to the needs of the Nation in time of peace as well as in time of war.

Mr. MOSES submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 184), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ an assistant clerk during the Sixty-eighth Congress at the rate of $2,000 per annum, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

DISMISSALS IN THE BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

On motion of Mr. CARAWAY, the resolution (S. Res. 23) requesting the President to inform the Senate what facts warranted the dismissal from the public service of certain officials of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, submitted by Mr. CARAWAY December 10, 1923, was indefinitely postponed.

AGRICULTURAL DIVERSIFICATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2250) to promote a permanent system of self-supporting agriculture in regions adversely affected by the stimulation of wheat production during the war, and aggravated by many years of small yields and high production costs of wheat.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, the bill now before us provides—

That it is hereby declared in the public interest that conditions existing in those portions of the United States known particularly as the wheat areas resulting from the stimulation of wheat growing during the recent war and aggravated during subsequent years by low yields and high costs of production should be changed through the encouragement of a system of agriculture not dependent for its success upon wheat alone, but cultivation would include the raising of livestock, such as dairy and beef cattle, hogs, sheep, poultry, and the products thereof.

This bill proposes for the Secretary of Agriculture to lend money direct to farmers in the wheat-growing States on chattel mortgages, cattle, hogs, sheep, and so forth.

If such legislation is to pass, why not let it apply to all agriculture in the United States generally. This act is paternalism run mad. The object to be attained is exceedingly desirable, but the method is contrary to all the doctrines of good government. We have a reputation to sustain, a duty to perform, an oath to uphold. I am not surprised at the introduction of the bill after considering our action of last week in passing the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES]. That was a joint resolution appropriating a million dollars for similar purposes in New Mexico. I am glad that I opposed that measure. But it shows the effect of precedents. Now, where are we to stop? We know that the next bill along this line will attempt to appropriate $150,000,000, instead of $50,000,000, as provided in the pending bill. It seems to me that we have lost all sense of proportion. It occurs to me that this is about the greatest charitable institution in the world. I must admit that I admire the kind-heartedness of my colleagues, but I question the soundness of their conclusions.

This particular bill undertakes to affect only a very small section of the United States, a few States in the northwestern section, and when we pass this bill, if we do, though I hope we will not, it will put up the price of wheat in that section of the country so that the people in the cities and the farmers of the South will have to pay an increased price for the bread they eat. I regret to raise my voice against any measure which undertakes to benefit any farmer in the United States. I feel kindly toward everyone who produces and thereby adds to the wealth of the world, but unless we are going to reverse all of our policies of the past and unless we are going to put the United States in the banking business, we ought not even to consider this kind of legislation.

Our friends come here and say that the people of those States principally grew wheat and increased their wheat production during the war for patriotic purposes. I do not question that; but they also increased the production of wheat because the price was attractive.

Furthermore, Mr. President, the people of this country were not only urged to produce wheat with which "to win the war" but they were urged to increase the production of livestock. The Government urged the people to produce all kinds of food, not only wheat, but everything else which could be consumed.

There is no difference between the condition which exists in the part of the United States which is now proposed to be relieved by the pending legislation from the other sections of the country. In my section, indeed in the whole South, during the World War we increased the production of cotton not only from patriotic purposes but because the price was attractive. We decreased the production of hogs, cows, sheep, and poultry in the southeastern section of the country; in fact, there is a greater scarcity of those products in that section of the United States to-day than there is in any other section of the country. It is not necessary to go to North Dakota in order to find farms on which there is no livestock. The same condition may be found in going over the South and other sections. I do not like to expose the improvidence of my State, but a year ago, I believe it was, we consumed 83,000,000 pounds of butter while we produced only 13,000,000 pounds; we consumed 21,000,000 fowls but we produced only 7,000,000; we consumed 24,000,000 dozen eggs while we produced only 11,000,000 dozen. I presume that about the same relation between production and consumption obtains all over the South as obtains in South Carolina.

The condition which now confronts us is not dissimilar from that which existed after the Civil War. At that time the people in my section of the country had been deprived of all of their property except land, including their horses, mules, and other livestock. They had nothing with which to work their farms; they owned the land but that was about all they had; yet those people, possessing the sterling qualities of manhood, went to work and soon restored themselves.

If Senators will excuse me for a personal reference, I desire to say that I was raised on a farm. Of course, I can not remember very much as to the condition which existed immediately after the Civil War, I being then so young, but during the latter part of the seventies and early eighties the farmers in my section of the country were prospering notwithstanding they were getting an exceedingly low price for their chief product, which was cotton. When one visited a farm he would be entertained most royally. The farmers who had the correct idea of farming raised on the farm what was necessary to support the farm; they had but little to buy.

I was almost a grown man before I ever heard of a mortgage on a farm. It would then have been considered a disgrace in my section of the country for the farmers to have mortgaged their property.

In those days there was not a single bank in my county, which was one of the most prosperous counties in South Carolina. I remember when the first bank was organized in 1886 in that county, and I helped to organize the second bank there in 1887.

So it is not altogether a question of providing money; the great fault is in ourselves, in being the slaves to the system of producing too much of one crop. The Government is not to blame for this. We ourselves should regulate these things. If we produce more of a particular kind of crop than can be profitably marketed, we ought to diversify and grow something else, particularly something which can be consumed on the farm, and thereby stop paying middlemen's charges, high freight rates, and a profit to others. Farmers should make their farms self-sustaining, and then they will be independent of all the interests which now live off the farmer.

Not only that, Mr. President, but the World War was fought to protect and save the very people who are now here asking us to make this enormous loan. They received the benefit of the war, and, therefore, they should not come here now and ask to be parceled out and favored in this unsound, this uneconomic, this unconstitutional manner.

I wish there were some way to test the constitutionality of the bills which we undertake to pass and which we do pass here with such ease. I wish it were possible for Congress to be hauled into court and enjoined from donating the money of the people; and I believe it will come to that by an amendment to the Constitution or in some other way, if we break our oaths and go on from time to time passing such unsound measures. There is no ground upon which to justify them. I venture to say that not a single self-sustaining legislature in the United States would advocate this kind of a bill. They would know it was unsound; that it was dangerous; but because Washington is remote from the sections which it is proposed particularly to benefit, their constituents come here and make pleas for legislation under the belief that we are ready to dump the Treasury into their laps and enter upon this kind of unsound legislation through motives of sympathy. We will never have a country worth calling a country until our people learn that they should be self-sustaining and that they should work out their own financial salvation, instead of coming to Congress and asking that some other taxpayer shall make them a living. The people do not ask it; politicians ask it.

We thought the farm-loan bank system was a good thing. The idea back of it, indeed, is commendable. We will all admit, of course, that it is beneficial for people to own their homes, and that is a condition which I should like to see—a property-owning population, every man owning his own home. We would thereby make stronger citizens, better citizens, more prosperous citizens, independent citizens, citizens who would defend their country in time of war, and would think more of themselves and more of their surroundings and more of their posterity. I happen to know, however, that even under the farm-loan system—certainly it is true of certain cases which I have investigated—very little of the money made available has been used to buy additional homes. I am not opposing the system in saying that; but I talked to a lawyer not long ago who said that he had passed on some 50 or 60 titles, and only one man had bought any additional land, and he bought only 17 acres. So it is a false preachment, it is a false doctrine, it is an erroneous notion, that the citizen can go to his Government and get rich. We should legislate according to the Constitution; we should legislate honestly and fairly and equitably as between all classes of our people, with no special privilege to any of them. I do not believe that even the farmers want any special privileges. If we would pass correct laws, including a just tariff law, honest banking laws, correct freight laws, and other legislation along those lines, and get back on a balanced legislative system, we would better promote the interests and the welfare of all the people of the United States. We need a balanced agriculture.

People do not like to be put under obligations to their Government any more than they do to their friends and their neighbors. We want an independent population, but we are going a long way now to raise up a dependent citizenry, unmolested by the National Government, as they should do.

The idea of the Government loaning money directly to the individual on his wheat crop or livestock is preposterous. The Agricultural Department is not prepared to administer such a law; and to come here and talk about the professors of agricultural colleges or demonstration agents or some State official offering to tender their services is nonsense. If a business does not justify paying people for carrying it on, that business ought not to be embarked upon. Not only that, but the first few offers the Secretary of Agriculture would receive from private individuals in the State to handle the money would require him to proceed cautiously, lest some one might have a job to put upon the Government and might misuse the funds in some way or another.

The Government has no business to engage in banking. It is dangerous, unscientific, and unsatisfactory, and too expensive. The friends of this bill in their arguments say the banks out in the northwestern section of the country are broke. Why did they break? Simply by lending too much money to the very same kind of people, I presume, who now want the Government to come in and sink a large sum of the taxpayers' money, the money of people who have worked hard and who are already overburdened to the breaking point with unnecessary taxation.

Perhaps, Mr. President, they are trying to farm where the soil and the climate and the surroundings are not suitable to agriculture. The remedy would be, therefore, to engage in something that they can make profitable, and if they can not do that I would invite all of the native farmers out there—I emphasize the word "native"—to come down South where the Creator blessed us with a climate and a soil and a rainfall unsurpassed, and where they could not only make a living but they could get rich and be happy as soon as the Congress of the United States will repeal some of the nefarious, unjust, one-sided laws which discriminate against that section of the country.

Last year we established the intermediate credit banks. We thought at that time that that was about all the legislation that would be required to carry on the different kinds of business in the United States. Under that system the Government is relieved from the details of lending money, but if the paper is sound the money will be forthcoming from the local banks. It seems to me that that is a splendid piece of constructive legislation, and it ought to be availed of, and it should furnish relief to the people who need help in that direction. A year or two since we also restored the War Finance Corporation, which has done great work in aiding agriculture.

This bill can not help the man who is down and out and who has no security to put up. I do not know what they have done to the land out there if they can not get some money. Why do they not call their legislatures together? Why do they not call their bankers' State conventions together, or why do they not call a public meeting and see if they can not devise some scheme whereby whatever is necessary to the diversification of crops can be done? They should not come here and complain because they did not get as much for their wheat as they expected to get. They got more than they ever got before. I asked Senator NORRIS yesterday what was the average price of wheat in 1914. He said he would have to look it up. My recollection is that it was about $1 per bushel. The Government fixed the price at $2.20, which was looked on as a pretty good price. Perhaps they wanted more; but because the Government had to take over some wheat and because the Government may have made a little profit on it they say now that they want us to go back there and practically donate that money back to them.

This Government has already loaned a good deal of money to that section, which it has not collected. I ask unanimous consent that the statement which went into the RECORD yesterday, showing the amount due the Government and the losses, be made a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Statement showing the amount of seed loans by States in 1921 and 1922, with the total collections and the percentage collected to November 24, 1923.

[Original amount loaned by States, amount of principal collected to November 24, 1923, and percentage of total collected to November 24, 1923.]

	1921 loan.			1922 loan.
	Loans.	Collections.	Per cent.	Loans.	Collections.	Per cent.
Idaho	$295,331.00	$77,376.97	81.17	$24,684.50	$20,698.39	83.85
Montana	1,044,578.00	578,184.51	55.35	755,492.29	468,503.71	62.01
North Dakota	808,079.20	551,163.26	68.20	660,588.05	500,520.24	75.76
South Dakota				37,611.85	32,527.29	86.48
Washington	9,419.00	5,248.74	55.72	1,730.00	555.85	32.13
Total	1,957,407.20	1,211,973.48	61.92	1,480,106.69	1,022,805.48	69.10

Of the $1,211,973 of 1921 loans collected, $660,403 were paid in by June 15, 1922; $500,576 between June 16, 1922, and June 30, 1923; and $50,994 between June 1, 1923, and November 24, 1923.

In other words, more than $550,000 have been paid on the 1921 loans since June 16, 1922, most of this, of course, having been collected out of crops subsequent to the one on which the loan was made. Of the payments on the 1922 loan, $56,863 have been collected since July 1, 1923, most of which being paid out of proceeds of the 1923 crops.

The Treasury Department has appropriated $45,000 to collect the amounts past due.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, the way to diversify is by local help, local assistance. Just get ready and go ahead and diversify.

If Senators will excuse me for another personal reference, I will tell them of a little incident that occurred in my life, and it might be well for them to consider that process.

Along about 1914 the people in my county had almost stopped raising hogs. I called a demonstration agent into my office and told him to buy me a carload of stock hogs. He was astonished. He wanted to know what I wanted with them. I told him I wanted him to sell them to the people and help them raise hogs; that I had gotten tired of paying about 40 cents a pound for western bacon, and that we were going to raise some hogs in Laurens County, S. C. He bought a carload of 124 hogs and shipped them to my town. I told him to sell them for cash if he could get it, if they wanted to pay cash; and, if not, to sell them on credit. I told him to credit any white man or white boy; I did not care whether the boy was over 6 years old or not; to take his note for a hog and let him go into the hog-raising business.

The first day he sold 85. He came to the office and said: "What are we going to do? We have about 50 left. They are going a little slowly." I said: "Sell them." He said: "To whom?" I said: "If the white people do not want them, sell them to the colored population." He disposed of every one of those hogs, without any profit except the regular bank rate. Of course, nobody wanted to handle those little notes, they were for such small amounts that the interest was not appreciable; but I wanted to try the experiment.

It was not long until we began to increase the hog population of that county, and it multiplied most rapidly, and be it said to the credit of my people, we did not lose one cent upon that purchase. We did carry a few notes over until the next year, but every dollar was paid, with only the regular rate of banking interest, what I charged myself. That is the way to build up a country, if you will allow me to say so.

A few years after that the price of cotton got so high that our people did not want to raise hogs. They came to me and said: "Here, you made us overdo it." I said: "What do you mean?" They said: "We have so many hogs that we do not know what to do with them. We have all the meat necessary to live on this year, and we have great, big, fat hogs in the pasture, and the butchers can not take them. There is not enough local demand for them." "Oh, that is fine, thank you; I will take them." So I sent for the demonstration agent and had him write on to Kingan & Co., the packing men, who sent a man there, and he bought a carload of hogs and shipped them away from my county. I am delighted to say that those hogs were sold at about the peak price, over 20 cents a pound on the foot at the depot at home, and they paid cash for them.

Mr. President, I do not mention that in order to draw attention to myself, of course, but merely to show our friends that there is a way for individuals to help their neighbors and thereby better their own condition. Tell the bankers out in the Northwest to get busy. If they have not the money they have credit, and in less than 12 months they can be eating hogs raised in their own pasture.

When are you going to stop coming here? In my State a few years ago we raised 1,600,000 bales of cotton. The next year we raised about 800,000 bales of cotton, the next year a little over 500,000 bales. In my own county during that time we raised 65,000 bales one year, and next year the crop dropped down to about 37,000 bales, and next year down to about 18,000 bales on account of the boll weevil and some unfavorable climatic conditions, and so forth. I know men who raised as much as a thousand bales of cotton one year, and the next year they raised 125 bales. I know one man who raised 26 bales of cotton with two plows, and the next year he raised 4 bales. I know a man who did not raise 1 bale of cotton to the plow.

Where are you going to stop? God knows I sympathize with the worker; but suppose the South comes here and asks the Government for aid because we raised cotton with which to make tents and uniforms and horse collars and automobile covers, and so forth, and then when this deflation came on, brought about a good deal by the stupidity of the Government officials, our commodity declined from 43 cents down to 11 cents a pound—a greater decline than any other commodity had ever made in that space of time in history.

Talk about being hard up and not able to buy a pig! Those people were sold out completely. Nine thousand farmers in about two years left their farms in South Carolina and went to the cotton mills, to the towns, and public works. One acre out of every six in my State that was cultivated a few years ago was not cultivated last year. In all probability, Senators, we are not going to make enough cotton to supply the mills this year, or certainly in the very near future, unless the Creator relieves us of the boll weevil, because I do not think the Government is going to be active enough to do it. I fear that we have not discovered an effective remedy to eradicate that pest. Therefore, it will not be long until the people of the South can not exist by raising cotton. We are not going to perish, however, because we will raise something else; but when the mills of the North are shut down for the want of material with which to feed their spindles, that labor can not go and seek employment on 24 hours' notice nor on 30 days' notice.

There will not be enough employment there for them; and when they consume their little savings, which they have been able to save out of their daily toil, they will become dissatisfied, and the North and the South will join in coming to Congress and saying: "Give us $100,000,000 to help support these people"; and we will bring people here not only to make you feel that we have suffered a great misfortune, but we will make you shed tears clear down to your toes.

Where are you going to stop? Had you not better stop now? I do not want to be a party to such unsound legislation. We indeed sympathize with the unfortunate, and we ought to do everything we can, legally and legitimately, to alleviate their misfortune; but we never will get anywhere when we turn the United States Treasury into a charitable institution. I shudder for future generations unless we are going to adhere more closely to the Constitution and sound governmental principles and attend to the things we were elected and sent here to attend to. The fact is that we stay here too much anyhow. We ought not to be here half the time we are. We ought to attend to our legitimate legislative business, investigate fraud wherever it comes up, expedite legislation, get through with it, and let business have a rest.

This bill will put up the price of bread, as I said, on my people, who suffered just as greatly as the wheat growers of the West, or more so. I have no intention of being unkind; but I have not the sympathy for a wheat grower that I have for a cotton grower, because wheat is cultivated and harvested by machinery, whereas cotton is cultivated to a very great extent by hand labor, and is harvested altogether by hand labor, as the Southern Senators know. It requires much more work, much harder work, than it does to raise wheat or to raise corn.

These are just some general ideas I have on the subject. This unrest is natural after all wars, until we can become restored to normalcy. The thing for our good friends out there to do is for every one of them to curtail their production of wheat. They should organize, as farmers all over the United States ought to organize, and if they can not get each one to reduce his acreage, then those who make less and who can not make ends meet will have to go into some other vocation. I looked up the statistics last night, and I find that the increase of wheat is no greater than the increase of the population of this country in the last 10 years. The great trouble with that section, as it is with our section in the South, is that we produce too much of one commodity. We have been slaves to this uneconomic way of farming; and on account of causes which I need not go into at this time the markets of the world have been closed or greatly curtailed, and we are not going to regain our prosperity as we should until those markets are again opened.

What the farmer needs, if I might be allowed to say so, is not so much regulatory laws as to be let alone and to have no unjust legislation pressing down upon the price of the commodity he grows. He should get more for what he raises; then he will be an independent citizen, as he is entitled to be. I need not go into the details of some of these unjust laws at this time, but I will do so in the future.

I feel that this bill and the one to follow it are the robust offspring of the baby bill that was hatched last week.

I have a bill coming along down the line, which I put in the hopper a day or two ago, which I think is sound and which I think would answer the purpose all these bills are intended to meet. It is a bill to employ the funds in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian to aid in the exportation of our raw material. I find nothing in the Constitution which it would violate. I think it is sound. It would not only help us get rid of the surplus agricultural products we have in this country, particularly cotton and wheat, but it would help the people of Germany and Austria and Hungary to get on their feet. It would give employment to their people. They would use the $100,000,000 funds that are impounded here temporarily as a revolving fund, and it would bring about a good feeling between those countries and our country. As soon as we settle those differences over these funds which arose during the war the matter can be finally adjusted. The Alien Property Custodian strongly recommends that bill. It is now before the Agricultural Committees of the Senate and of the House. I hope it will receive early consideration and a favorable report and that it will be enacted into law. I believe that if that were passed there would be no necessity for this bill and the one to follow it. It will quickly export surplus agricultural products and we will start a new season as we should.

I had thought of saying more about this matter, but Senators are business men and I know they would not loan their money in the manner in which the Government is asked to loan public money under this bill, and I do not believe we have any right to attend to the public business in any less safe manner than that in which we loan our own money.

As I said before, I deeply sympathize with all people who are in distress, or who imagine they are in distress, but if we hold up here the announcement that every time men do not succeed at home as they think they should, this is a place for them to come, where they will receive a ready ear and an open hand, we will constantly be making drains on the Treasury. While we want to be just to those people, yet there are other people who are toiling, who are laboring from January to January, who are paying taxes, who have obligations to meet, whose taxes are taken and loaned out in this unsafe, dangerous manner.

The way the money may be handled will depend altogether upon the honesty and the energy of the man receiving the fund. The Government will have no way to keep track of it, and if it had to keep track of it there would be an enormous expense put upon the Government, taken out of the taxpayer or somebody else. A farmer could not kill a pig without getting consent from Washington. When we stop to think that the United States Government has not a dollar except what it takes from the people by taxation or what it receives for our bonds, we should be exceedingly cautious how we vote on any of these matters.

Mr. President, I trust that we will not go further. I think the time to call a halt has come. There are other bills pending in Congress which will demand the expenditure of a great deal of money, which I have not favored; but if we are going to try to break the Treasury or to burden the people beyond their ability to exist, I do not know the end. All are going into debt too deep—individuals, National Government, and all subdivisions thereof. If business can not make ends meet, enterprise will stop and no one will be willing to create employment, hence all will suffer and after a while there will be none to pay taxes.

I am sorry this bill received a favorable report, and I trust Senators will seriously consider now where we are headed.

I will not speak of the political effect of this bill, but that might be considered. My people are in no position or humor for the price of flour or other commodities which they have to purchase to be raised. I have a small farm that is not being cultivated this year, because I feared it would not be profitable. This is sufficient funds to buy the electoral vote of many States.

The purpose which this bill seeks to remedy can be accomplished otherwise. I trust it will fail.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] seems to feel fearful and apprehensive that if this bill is passed it may cause a revolution. If we do have a revolution or any other kind of serious trouble, the first element to be called upon by the Government and the first to respond will be the American farmer.

To my mind, we owe the American farmer something. During the war and preceding the war, we well remember, the agencies of the Government carried on propaganda in behalf of raising more wheat, more food, more beef, more mutton, more pork, and for having meatless days and wheatless days. We should not forget that during the war we controlled the price of the farmer's wheat. It was said on the floor that he was not obliged to sell it. I remind the Senate of the law in force at that time relating to the hoarding of foodstuffs. Had he not sold it, he would have been amenable to very severe penalties for hoarding food.

While the farmer was using every effort of which he was capable in support of this Government and in support of our allies overseas, while his sons were serving on the field of battle, the farmer's wife and his children who were not in the service were working and toiling in the fields to produce in order to save the situation.

During those days wages were very high. The price of everything the farmer had to buy was inflated. The farmer gave his support unstintingly, in the spirit of loyalty, in the spirit of upholding this Government, without regard to costs or expenses; and he did so in many instances—in most instances—without profit. To-day the farmer finds himself in distress; and he is appealing to Congress not for alms, not for charity, but for some agency which will enable him to get by.

Some Senators have expressed doubts about the security upon which it is proposed to advance moneys under the pending bill. There is nothing unusual about the provisions of this bill with reference to the extension of credits. There is nothing in the extension of credit as proposed that has not heretofore been in vogue through the banks of the country. The only difference between the pending bill and other bills which have been passed by the Congress in the matter of credit extensions to meet emergencies is that under the pending bill loans may be made to individuals instead of to corporations, instead of to cooperative associations or banks or other classes of credit concerns. Under the pending bill loans will be made to the individual.

The rate of interest provided in the bill is 2 per cent less than that which has been paid under former bills, because under the others the farmers were compelled to deal with third parties or intermediate agencies. That 2 per cent reduction in itself, carried over a period of five years, would be the equivalent of 10 per cent, or the equivalent of the margin which our loan agencies have been in the habit of taking, and it absorbs the difference in the hazard, which would of necessity result in favor of the farmer.

The situation is this, that under the pending bill loans are to be made, to be secured by livestock—cattle, hogs, or poultry—to farmers or renters of farms. The bill in itself assumes—and, of course, we must assume—that if money is loaned for the purchase of livestock it will be loaned only to individuals who are capable of taking care of livestock and who have conveniences and who have feed and hay. It is nothing unusual for a banker to loan money to a feeder to purchase livestock for fattening, basing the margin upon the feed which is to be fed to the cattle for fattening purposes. That has always been considered good security. Take, for instance, a loan on a cow. We will say that the cow costs $50, if it is of a beef variety. That cow is fed and taken care of. It will produce a calf which, at the end of 12 months, under the present market, will probably bring $30. That is a return of 60 per cent on the purchase price of the cow.

Can anyone say that is not good security? There is no better security in the world than the security on livestock, provided those producing it have the means to feed and take care of it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BURSUM. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. I would like to advise the Senator to sell that calf when it is 6 or 7 weeks old instead of keeping it until it is 12 months old. He would get more for it.

Mr. BURSUM. That may be true. That would give him the money all the sooner. I was not proposing to restrict the time to a year in which the increase might be sold. What I am attempting to show is that security on livestock, and particularly on breeding stock, is the best security in the world if those taking over the livestock have the means of taking care of it.

This is not a gift. This is not charity. So far as the Government is concerned, it is good business. It would give the benefits of a reasonable rate of interest to the borrower. I can not see why we should be so concerned or apprehensive about Government loans. When we say Government loans, that does not mean that the Government fund is any more sacred than any other fund. The people do not belong to the Government. The Government belongs to the people. What we are doing is in behalf of the people, and certainly in this case what we are attempting to do is in behalf of a people not only deserving but a large proportion of people who occupy a very large area of the country.

Our experience so far as loaning money on livestock is concerned has been pretty satisfactory. For instance, according to the report of the War Finance Corporation, the advances to banks and other loan agencies, made up to November 30, 1923, amounted to $169,780,410.94. The balance outstanding on November 30, 1923, was $43,702,169.44. To livestock loan companies the advances up to November 30, 1923, amounted to $80,005,671.90, while the outstanding balance on livestock loans on November 30, 1923, was $29,494,480. This shows that out of the $80,000,000 advanced more than $51,000,000 had been repaid to the Government and covered back into the Treasury.

The War Finance Corporation advanced in Iowa, up to November 30, 1923, over $24,000,000, and outstanding at that time there was $5,617,566.59. Thus, out of $24,000,000 loaned nearly $20,000,000 has been repaid. In Kansas they borrowed less than $5,000,000, and there was outstanding a little over $1,000,000, 80 per cent having been repaid in Kansas. In Minnesota there were advances of $12,551,815.20; outstanding, $4,000,000; more than two-thirds having been repaid.

In Montana there was $12,500,000 advanced; outstanding less than $5,000,000, nearly two-thirds having been repaid. In Nebraska the advances were $12,000,000; outstanding less than $1,000,000, 90 per cent having been repaid. In North Dakota the advances were $20,621,000, outstanding $10,986,000; in South Dakota advances $14,000,000, outstanding $7,000,000. So that even in North and South Dakota 50 per cent of the moneys loaned have been repaid.

It has been said that the pressure for collection has been a little hasty; that it has in some cases left the country in a distressed condition, and that the loans should have been carried for a longer time. I think there may be some truth in that in view of the situation of the banks in the two Dakotas, Minnesota, Montana, and other Western States.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate and of the sponsors of the bill to this provision contained in it:

> No loan shall, however, be made to any farmer who has overdue principal and interest or general obligations likely to result in early foreclosure of mortgages or other liens upon his farm lands or necessary farm equipment unless extension shall be granted by his creditors in such form as will give him a reasonable opportunity to work out his future and to get the ultimate benefit from such loan.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BURSUM. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. I have to leave the Chamber; otherwise I should not interrupt the Senator. The Senator referred to me as connected with farming. I desire to state that my individual means are very small, but I own some land and I have at least one farm that is not being cultivated because it is not profitable to do so.

Mr. BURSUM. Of course, the Senator may be so fortunate as to be in the position that it matters little, so far as getting along and making ends meet may be concerned, whether he farms or not, but all people are not in that situation.

Mr. DIAL. I was afraid I would lose more than I would make, and therefore I would not undertake it.

Mr. BURSUM. The Senator from South Carolina, I regret to see, is leaving the Chamber. He said cotton sold in the South at one time for 10 cents a pound. I remember that situation very well when cotton did sell at 10 cents a pound. The Government was appealed to for relief then, just as now. Congress renewed what was known as the War Finance Corporation act. Under that act one of the first loans which was made was upon cotton, $10,000,000 being advanced to incorporated associations in one of the Southern States; I think Tennessee. The immediate result of that credit was that within a very few days cotton went up to 20 cents a pound. That simply demonstrates the stimulation that adequate credit can accomplish in times of distress and when there are no other means of relief.

I had just called the attention of the friends of the bill to the provision contained in it with reference to the limitation of those who may be eligible to obtain loans under its provisions. It is my understanding that the banks in North Dakota are in a very distressed condition. In fact, if I recall correctly, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], the author of the bill now pending, stated on the floor of the Senate that 95 per cent of the banks in North Dakota had failed, and said the same statement might be made with reference to South Dakota, Montana, and Idaho.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURSUM. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. May I correct the Senator? Did the Senator mean to say 95 per cent of the banks in North Dakota were closed?

Mr. BURSUM. That is what I understood the Senator from South Dakota to say.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. No; that is incorrect. The Senator from North Dakota is here and probably can inform us what was said. I do not know, but there is no condition like that there at all.

Mr. BURSUM. I am glad to know it is not that bad.

Mr. LADD. The official reports with reference to banks having failed up until early winter showed that 96 banks out of about 800 had closed their doors.

Mr. BURSUM. That is a very different situation.

Mr. KING. My understanding is that the 96 banks which failed were relatively small banks with small and impaired capital and improvident loans.

Mr. LADD. I do not think I can say that; but there were frozen loans, and many of the other banks have their loans frozen in the same way and are unable to liquidate and hence unable to tide over.

Mr. BURSUM. My attention has just been called to the statement of the Senator from South Dakota by the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER]. What the senior Senator from South Dakota did say was that probably 95 per cent of the banks were practically broke. What he meant to say was that they were in no condition to extend any credit whatsoever. Is not that the true situation?

Mr. LADD. That is the correct situation, I think.

Mr. BURSUM. So I assume that most of the persons who are intended to be beneficiaries under this bill are probably indebted to banking concerns or to mortgage companies or loan companies and that their obligations may in the larger number of instances be past due. Under such circumstances those persons would not be eligible to the benefits of the bill unless extensions could be granted upon guaranties that would secure the debt from being foreclosed or the probability of being foreclosed on account of loans either on their land, on their equipment, or on other appurtenances essential to the conduct of their farms.

Under such a condition of affairs, it seems to me that not only is it necessary to extend credit to individual farmers but that it is highly essential that we should also do something toward rehabilitating and stabilizing the banks of the country, not only in North Dakota and South Dakota but all over the West and in every State where such a condition exists. I may say that so far as my State is concerned that nearly 50 per cent of the banks have failed; that 40,000 depositors are worrying about the safety of their savings and a likelihood of obtaining a settlement at any time within the near future. The result of this situation is that public confidence has been alienated from our banking institutions. Everyone knows that the only foundation upon which banking institutions can function, the only foundation upon which credit can be based and upon which it is based, is public confidence and faith. Without it the banks can not function. Not even the Government could function without faith. With all of the surplus gold which we have at this time, more than 50 per cent of the gold of the world, that surplus would mean nothing in the face of the alienation of the public confidence throughout the Nation.

It seems to me that the situation which now exists demands the serious attention of the Congress. Some say it is not the proper function of the Government nor is it a proper procedure to intervene or interfere in rendering aid to bankers; that the banker takes his chances and that he must take care of himself. I have no great concern for the individual banker, and that is not the question; my concern is for the depositors. Who are the real owners, the real stockholders of our entire banking system if they be not the depositors? The depositor goes to the bank with the faith that his money will be properly taken care of; that it will be safely handled; that it will be forthcoming when needed. The wage earner saves his little mite and deposits his little surplus every month with the absolute confidence that his earnings are being taken care of and supervised by the Federal Government. He has a right to have faith in our banking institutions. Lack of confidence and faith is a serious matter. Fear on the part of the public is the hardest element to control. There is nothing so hard to control as a person's fear. One failure will bring on another failure. A lack of confidence spreads and spreads and spreads like a prairie fire, and unless checked it may spread all over the Nation.

I say that the integrity of the banking system itself is endangered by reason of the widespread alienation of the confidence of the public in our banking institutions. That condition is not local to my State, but also obtains in Arizona, Idaho, Montana, parts of Oklahoma, of Kansas, of Nebraska, of Iowa, and of Minnesota. Who can say that this is a local situation? How can a government function without a system of credit? How can people transact business in the absence of confidence and an agency of credit? Are we to go back to the olden times of exchanging commodity for commodity and have no basis of exchange? It may be that in some instances, perhaps, banks have failed on account of mismanagement; in isolated cases, perhaps, they have failed from other causes; but, Senators, I am confident that as to the overwhelming number of banks which have failed the failures have been on account of no fault of the bankers themselves but on account of causes beyond their control.

To my mind, it is absolutely essential that this condition be remedied. It has been said that private corporations have been organized for the purpose of granting aid and relief to the Northwest, and that this agency will be extended to grant relief to the Southwest. Up to the present time I have not heard of any transactions or of anything actually having been done in their behalf. Furthermore, the purpose of the organization, as I understand, is to purchase good paper with adequate security. While such an agency might grant some relief and greatly aid the distress existing in certain districts, it will not cure the situation; it will not cure the evil which exists.

The great trouble with most of the banks, including many that are still open and others that have been closed, is that their capital has become impaired. There is only one way to rectify such a condition, namely, to repair the capital of the banks that can be repaired and which can be made solvent and are needed for the public service in their respective communities, and the business of which is sufficient to justify the reopening of the banks for public service and placing them in a condition to recapture the confidence of the public.

This can be done, to my mind, only by an agency in possession of an intelligent appraisal of the condition of the securities and of the business possibilities of every bank in the country, and I know of no other agency in possession of those facts than the Comptroller of the Currency. The Comptroller of the Currency is in possession of intelligent information, of an absolute appraisal of every security contained in every national bank in the whole country, and I propose that we provide a reasonable appropriation, to be used under the supervision and control of the Comptroller of the Currency, for the purpose of stabilizing the banks of this country. I would take care of the State banks as well as the national banks, provided that the State banks submit to examination and audit and to regulations which the comptroller may prescribe.

There are many banks, perhaps, which can not be saved, which can not be reopened. That is a matter which must be left to those in authority, who are in a position to judge. We must trust those authorities to do that which is for the best welfare of the public and for all concerned. It is just as important that no bank which is worthy of being aided shall not fail to receive consideration and aid as it is that no unworthy institution shall be given any aid whatsoever. In cases where our financial institutions are not in such condition that it is practicable to place them upon a certified solvency list, so to speak, and give them a certificate of confidence, under such circumstances the best thing that can happen for all concerned is to liquidate; but if we are to stem the tide of alienation of the confidence of the public in our banking institutions, something must be done whereby public confidence will be restored.

For that purpose I have introduced an amendment, which is pending, to the present bill. I hope the amendment will be adopted. I hope this bill will pass. It is a fair bill. There is nothing unreasonable about it. I do not agree with the views of my distinguished friend the Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING] about its effect on livestock.

I am of the opinion that if this measure is enacted into law it will tend to stabilize livestock and will create a better market for livestock, something that surely everyone will admit is a much-desired condition in this country.

There is no surplus in livestock in this country. The only reason why values have become demoralized is the fact of the wholesale liquidation of breeding cattle, even calves, which have been sent to the slaughterhouse under foreclosure, under the pressure of demands for the liquidation of indebtedness. That is the only reason why livestock is so low in value. I do not know of a Western State that has within its borders 50 per cent of the livestock it had a few years ago. There is no doubt but that within a year or two the people of this country will find that unless something has been done to preserve the livestock industry they will pay the penalty and they will pay a high price for beef and mutton. The only reason for the depression has been the lack of orderly marketing and lack of ability of the raisers and owners to control the distribution and sale of their products.

In my opinion the passage of this bill will create a healthier condition and will stimulate the market price of all kinds of livestock.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of New Mexico in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, before this measure is further discussed it occurs to me that the bill is not properly here. I therefore raise the point of order against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Rule XVI, paragraph 1, page 20, provides that all general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Appropriations Committee. We changed the rules of the Senate some years ago in order to harmonize them with the Budget. Therefore this provision was made, that all general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Appropriations Committee. This bill itself, as the Chair will see if he will examine it, originally provided for an authorization to make it in order; but that has been stricken out by the committee and it now provides for an appropriation directly from the Treasury, which, I maintain, makes it out of order, and it should go to the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the point raised by the Senator from North Carolina is not a new one. It has been frequently raised, and always overruled. This is not in any sense a general appropriation bill. We have many precedents where the point has been raised and interposed against a bill carrying a specific appropriation and not a general appropriation bill.

The rule invoked, or attempted to be invoked, by the Senator from North Carolina applies only to the annual supply bills, general appropriation bills carrying appropriations for the support and administration of certain departments of our Government. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has called my attention to the joint resolution which was passed just a few days ago, introduced by the present Presiding Officer [Mr. JONES of New Mexico in the chair], carrying an appropriation of $1,000,000 to relieve the drought-stricken region of New Mexico. The same point of order was made then and was properly overruled by the Chair. It does not matter whether the bill carries $100,000,000 or $50,000,000 or $1,000,000 or any other sum that is proposed by the various amendments; the principle is the same in either case. The question is whether it is a specific piece of legislation or a general appropriation bill.

I contend, Mr. President, that at no time has such a point of order as that made by the Senator from North Carolina been sustained.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from Oregon can cite a single precedent where a point of order of this kind has been made. Points of order have been overruled in the case of special appropriation bills, but the joint resolution introduced by the present Presiding Officer and passed a few days ago was different from the bill now pending. That was a measure making an appropriation for use in one State. This provides for a general appropriation. I suppose the present Presiding Officer has read the pending bill, but I will say that it is very general in its nature, seeking to appropriate a large sum of money. It does not apply to any particular State. It does not describe any particular State or any particular person. Therefore it is general in its nature and subject to the point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I submit that because Rule XVI uses the language, "All general appropriation bills," would not necessarily make it apply to a bill like this. The term "general appropriation bills" as used in the rule means general supply bills, and I submit that under the precedents established since the adoption of that rule the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has the right to bring in an appropriation in a special bill. It has no right to report a general appropriation bill, because Rule XVI expressly provides that that can not be done, and the decision of the Chair the other day was with respect to the joint resolution in charge of the Senator who now presides over the Senate, which was on all fours with the pending bill.

While it is true that that applied to one section, the situation would not have been changed if it had applied to the whole United States. It was an appropriation; it was not an authorization. To that joint resolution the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] first made a point of order and he relied upon Rule XVI. After the matter was discussed the Senator from New York, who is a good parliamentarian, recognized that the point was not well taken, and agreed to the decision of the Chair that his point of order was not sustainable.

I submit that this point of order is not well taken, and that in the case of bills like this the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has the right to authorize the appropriation.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not rise to discuss the point which has just been raised, but I notice that while the bill as first introduced authorized that appropriations might be made, in the amendment which has been reported by the committee, which was not in the bill when it was first called up, an attempt is made to directly appropriate. I do not raise any question as to the general point of order at this time, because it is a very much debated matter, but if we are to have a Committee on Appropriations, and if appropriations are to be made, and made promptly, the power should rest in the Committee on Appropriations to appropriate, and the appropriations should then come in regular order.

Since this subject has been brought up I think I ought to say that if this bill is to be passed, I shall, at the proper time, ask to have that matter changed by offering an amendment restoring the language "authorized to be," which will bring about the result desired whatever might be said of the other question.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator then supports the point of order?

Mr. WARREN. No; I am not discussing the point of order, but I am stating what would be good legislation, what legislation we must pass in the long run, without any doubt. If we follow the policy of attempting to provide in special bills permanent appropriations for years to come we will get nowhere; we can proceed in no regular way to do business, providing in the first instance for the revenue, and, second, for the proper disposition of it.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the situation the rule was made to meet—to get bills before the proper committees and to act in harmony with the Budget.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of New Mexico in the chair). The language of the rule is, "All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations," and so forth. The question is presented in two aspects. The Chair does not recall that the one now suggested by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] has ever been presented before. There is a distinction between what is commonly called a general appropriation bill and a bill providing for a special appropriation. The Senator from North Carolina raises the point whether the pending bill carrying a general appropriation comes within the meaning of this language stated in the rule.

The Chair is of the opinion that the rule itself was intended to include only the general appropriation bills, which are well defined, carrying general appropriations for the various departments; but the Chair will be glad to submit the question to the Senate, if the Senator from North Carolina would prefer to have that done.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will let the Chair decide it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I think the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] desires to discuss the amendment briefly before the vote is taken. Just now he is absent from the Chamber, but I have sent word to him, and while awaiting his return I will occupy the floor for a few minutes.

Mr. KING entered the Chamber.

Mr. McLEAN. The junior Senator from Utah is now present.

Mr. KING. Has the Senator from Connecticut the floor?

Mr. McLEAN. I will be glad to surrender the floor to the Senator.

Mr. KING. I do not want to take the floor at this time.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, at this time I would like to offer an amendment to the pending bill. In the amendment of the committee, on page 5, line 13, after the word "hereby," I propose to insert the words "authorized to be," so that it will read "is hereby authorized to be appropriated." Also, in line 23, on the same page, after the word "hereby," I propose to insert the words "authorized to be," so as to read "hereby authorized to be appropriated."

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator merely wants to have the amendment printed, I take it. There is already an amendment pending.

Mr. WARREN. I simply give notice that I shall offer those amendments at the proper time.

Mr. HARRISON. I was in hopes the pending amendment could be gotten out of the way so that we could get down to the bill itself.

Mr. WARREN. I am not asking for the present consideration of my amendments. I am offering them so that they may be taken up when we reach that point in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments to the amendment of the committee will lie upon the table. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I have no desire to occupy very much time in the discussion of this bill, because I realize that nothing I can say will change the view of any Member of this body; but for the sake of the RECORD I do wish to present, very briefly, my objections to the bill.

When the bill was being discussed on yesterday, I endeavored to secure from the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry [Mr. NORRIS] his view of the broader scope of the bill, and the conditions which might warrant its support. I did not have very much success in that endeavor. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] admitted he knew much more about the bill than I did, and with that proposition I agreed. I was in search of information, which I did not get from the Senator, which seems to me to be rather important, when we propose to take something like $90,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States at a time like this, and pass it over to the Secretary of Agriculture to be disposed of as outlined in the bill. I am frank to say I find nothing in the bill which provides for any—I was going to say sane administration of the act.

I did suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that in other sections of the country there might be conditions not dissimilar to those which prevail in Nebraska. I happen to know, as we all know, that the agricultural interests of the country have been at a low ebb for some time. We know the reasons why. The dairy business in the East is unprofitable at the present time, and has been for many years, and I was wondering whether the originators of this scheme had taken into consideration the fact that there might be other sections of the country where the need was as great as the need in the sections mentioned by the Senator from Nebraska, if not greater.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. McLEAN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. In that connection I suggest that in certain counties of my own State the farmers raised only about one-fifth of a crop of cotton this last year, and the situation of the cotton farmers in those counties is very serious indeed. Of course, the bill would not apply to them any more than it would apply to the farmers of the Senator's State.

Mr. McLEAN. I know something of the potato growers in the East, especially in Maine, and that a year ago the average price of potatoes in the country was much less than the production cost and there were very serious losses on that account.

I did not get very much information from the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, but happily, in the course of the discussion, the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] offered a suggestion which it seems to me might well be considered by the Senate. I had stated that I thought that in most lines of agricultural products there was either overproduction or underconsumption, and that due to the high cost of machinery, the price of labor, and perhaps the spread, the agricultural interests of the country were generally at a low ebb. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], who represents one of the four States which the Senator from Nebraska informed the Senate would be benefited by this bill—and there were only four States, if I remember correctly—called the attention of the Senate to the conditions in the State of Montana. I want to quote to the Senate what he said.

Bear in mind, Mr. President, that this appropriation is for the purpose primarily and principally of reestablishing in these States a diversity of production, principally in the dairying industry. The Senator from Montana said:

> With the kindness of the Senator from Nebraska, the Senator from Connecticut seems to be apprehensive about overproduction of dairy products. I would like to say for his information that last year there were produced at Miles City, Mont., about a million pounds of butter, a very considerable portion of which was sold in the Orient, in China, Japan, and the Philippine Islands; so that is a field in which the opportunities for expansion are indefinite.

After listening to the very eloquent and earnest appeals of those Senators that Congress should go to the assistance of Montana and the Dakotas and one other State because the farmers were in such straits, it occurred to me that if the dairymen of Montana were at the present time producing butter in large quantities which they could sell in Japan and China and the Philippine Islands at a profit there could be no real reason why Congress should take $50,000,000 out of the Treasury for the purpose of providing the farmers of Montana with extra capital to carry on this profitable business.

A little later on the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] made a very intelligent statement as to what he thought the bill should and would accomplish if properly administered, which did not altogether agree with the statement of the Senator from Nebraska. If I remember correctly—the Senator from North Dakota is present and will correct me if I am in error—his position was that the object of the bill was not to enable the farmers of North Dakota to establish commercial dairies in a general sense of the term, but to enable the farmers here and there who did not happen to have any cows or chickens or pigs to obtain a very small number—two or three cows, or something of that sort—in order that the farmers could have this source of food for the sustenance of their families, and that it was not intended in any way to establish large commercial dairies. That is a strong appeal to anyone. But, Mr. President, it does not seem to me that we ought to go into the Treasury of the United States and appropriate any such sum of money as is sought here for that purpose. If that is necessary, if there is real distress in North Dakota, I would be among the first to vote to relieve it.

I know the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] based his conclusion largely, and so stated, upon the distinguished professors and economists who reported to the committee. One of them mentioned was a Doctor Willard, whose statement was put into the RECORD by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] when he discussed the bill. The statement is in fine print. I doubt if very many Senators have read it. It occupies two or three columns in the RECORD. I am satisfied that any Senator who would take the trouble to read this report would come to the conclusion that there is no real distress in North Dakota. There are farmers there who are heavily in debt, who can not pay their interest, and who do not pay their interest. The banks are worrying about that. The banker is the one who is concerned about that. These gentlemen, I take it, are still in possession of their farms and they have plenty to eat and comfortable clothes to wear and comfortable shelter. I gather that from the statement to which I have referred, and I am going to take the time of the Senate to read some portions of it because it is very interesting. It goes to the real condition upon which the request is made.

I desire to say that I shall be glad to yield the floor if the Senator from Utah so desires.

Mr. KING. No; I am very much interested in the Senator's discussion, and he is elaborating the subject much better than I could.

Mr. McLEAN. I shall have to disagree with the Senator from Utah in regard to that.

I want to call attention to what Doctor Willard said, and I shall have to read a considerable portion of his statement:

> I wish to turn now for just a few minutes to a short discussion of a survey that we made near the central part of the State for the very purpose of determining the necessity and the applicability of this $1,000-loan proposition as embodied in the proposed legislation. We took a corps of 12 men, who are trained men, who understand how to get this sort of information, to this region, and we completely covered three townships and half of a fourth, taking every farmer without regard to who he was, and got a set of detailed information from him as to his cropping system, his amount of stock, the various classes, his net worth; that is, his assets of all sorts and liabilities, consisting of first, second, and third mortgages, his chattels, personal notes, back taxes, interest past due, etc. We verified those liabilities with the financial representative of those farmers and found that they had given in general a very true report, and some of the information contained in that survey I will touch upon, and you may find in these sheets the detailed information, which you can consider at your leisure. That region is representative of probably more than two-thirds of the State of North Dakota, and also is applicable to parts of Montana and South Dakota.

The average size of farms in this region was 575 acres.

Mr. KING. May I inquire whether that is North Dakota or South Dakota?

Mr. McLEAN. It is North Dakota, I assume.

The average size of farms in this region was 575 acres, and 217 acres were in wheat, and this comprised 47 per cent of the crop area of those farms.

Now, note this, Mr. President:

The average yield of wheat for five years was slightly over 8 bushels on these farms, and for this year 5.6 bushels.

It must be that many acres in that State have been developed and put down to wheat which should not have been. These men are intelligent men, there is no question about that. Most of them are economists by necessity and statesmen by training. They are close to the Canadian boundary. These gentlemen must know that just north of the border, a few miles distant, they produce 20 bushels or more to the acre. Now, I submit that that is a condition which Congress can not remedy. It is a serious natural disadvantage, but it is one that can not be remedied by any diversification of products in my opinion. If it is not suitable for wheat, can it be assumed that that section of the country can support commercial dairies which require silos, subjected as they are to an uncertain rainfall and a soil that produced last season but 5 bushels of wheat to the acre? This is an emergency, it is stated, and that is true, but in so far as that phase of the subject is concerned it is an emergency as permanent as the State of North Dakota. It is there to-day and it will continue to be there as long as the earth turns on its axis.

I continue my quotation:

Of all the crops produced, corn, which occupied about 11 per cent of the crop area, maintained its average five-year yield of approximately 24 bushels to the acre.

Now, I do not know whether that is a fair average yield for corn or not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is very low, extraordinarily low.

Mr. McLEAN. I know that in Connecticut we expect to get 60 bushels to the acre, but Connecticut, I think, holds the record for producing the largest quantity of corn to the acre of any State in the Union. Twenty-four bushels of corn to the acre at the price which the farmer gets is, of course, not remunerative.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STANFIELD in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McLEAN. I yield.

Mr. KING. Before the Senator leaves the point of the average acreage per farm in the States under discussion, permit me to invite his attention to a table which I have here, which shows that on January 1, 1920, in North Dakota, where a number of counties were selected, in Grand Forks County the average acre per farm was 408.3; in Foster County, 509.6; in Morton County, 569.7; and Slope County, 627.2 acres. In South Dakota, in Potter County, the average was 777.9 and in Harding County 1,352.8 acres. In Montana the average in Sheridan County was 480 acres; Toole County, 611 acres; Garfield County, 571 acres; Carter County, 652 acres. So that the Senator will see that the average in North Dakota is approximately 500 acres, in South Dakota the average is about seven or eight hundred acres, and in Montana a hasty computation would show an average of perhaps 600 acres.

Mr. McLEAN. The farms are large. I am merely calling attention to the fact that no matter what the capital of the farmer may be, the land is such that it is very difficult for the farmers to produce anything that will return a profit.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut expresses a very indifferent opinion about the value of our country out there. I am reminded that Daniel Webster who once represented in the Senate the neighboring State of the Senator from Connecticut, expressed a similar indifferent opinion about the entire country west of the Mississippi River.

Mr. McLEAN. When I went to school a large portion of the State of Montana was marked on the map as a portion of the "great American desert," and perhaps I have not been fair to the Senator's State. I do not know whether or not the Senator was in the Chamber when I called attention to his statement yesterday in which he said that the farmers of Montana were producing a surplus of butter and marketing it in China, I assume at a profit.

Doctor Willard goes on to say that:

There were 21 farms out of the total 106 farms that had no brood sows whatever; there were 48 out of 106 that had 2 or less; out of 106 farms there were 13 who did raise some sheep and 88 per cent raised no sheep at all. There were 14 farms that had less than 50 head of poultry, and there were 54 farms, or more than 50 per cent, that had less than 100 poultry, which is about the lowest economic unit for our conditions.

There were 50 farms that had less than five milch cows.

He does not state how many they had, but if they had four they had about as many as the New England farmer had when he had to meet western competition.

Mr. President, I came into this world just as the homespun age was going out. I prize the recollection, but I would not again want to go through with the experience. When the great fertile fields of the West were opened up they drove the New England farmer out of the production of beef and hogs and sheep and grain, and his activities were limited to dairying. It was a pretty serious experience for a good many years. In my boyhood what we did not grow or make on the farm we went without. I question if we would be better off to-day if in those days Congress had come to our assistance and done what it could to deaden and destroy the spirit of self-reliance and individual responsibility which brought us out of our dilemma in very fair shape.

Doctor Willard further states:

Of 61 owners, 52 reported that they had barns and other buildings; and I might say that this section was visited by a terrific storm during the last year which almost completely demolished a few farmsteads, which accounts for the fact that not all owners of farms are now equipped with buildings, because it is rather the exception that they do not have barns for their work stock at least which are capable of housing some more additional livestock.

I have no doubt the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] used good judgment when he obtained the rule which requires the printing of quotations in invisible type, but it makes them rather difficult to read. However, I am able to read this:

Twenty-one out of 61 owner farms reported tractors and 47 reported automobiles.

The average sales from these farms, that is the 578-acre farms, amounted to only $968 a year. It is very important that we shall know how much of that was net profit. If the aggregate return from these farms was $968 a year and there was any profit, it seems to me that the farmers ought to be in a position to buy two or three cows, a few chickens, and a pig or two. I take it, their interest has been overdue a good while, and whether they are pressed for payment or not, I do not know. I am glad so many of them are able to own automobiles.

I am not dealing with this subject, I hope, in a spirit of captious criticism. Before I conclude I am going to call attention to the principle which is involved in this bill. It does not seem to me that, taking the statement of the learned gentleman who made the investigation upon which the committee largely based its findings, there is any such condition in that section as will warrant an appropriation of this character in order to meet an emergency that Congress can not control. An emergency that will continue as long as the natural disadvantages of climate and soil continue.

I will repeat, farming as a whole there and throughout this country is at a low ebb. The cotton men are having better days just now, but it is only a short time since the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] called our attention to conditions which were most distressing. Not only agricultural conditions but conditions in all other activities are subject to their ups and downs. Certain sections may be prosperous at times, and then whenever overproduction comes or for some other cause prices drop.

I wish to repeat that if the farmers of North Dakota were suffering for want of the necessities of life I would say, "Find out who they are and make the contribution direct to relieve the distress; but do not adopt a proposal that, in my judgment, will defeat its own purpose and in the long run be regretted by the very men who propose it to-day." I say that, Mr. President, because this legislation violates the fundamental and vital principle upon which the social and industrial life of this Nation is based. In the first place, it takes $50,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States and gives it to the Secretary of Agriculture, and authorizes and empowers him to use it in direct competition with the existing credit merchants of the country, to compete with the Federal reserve system, to compete with the Federal farm-loan system, to compete with the intermediate-credits system, to compete with the State banks, directly or indirectly; and the capital which is represented, the amount of money that is taken out of the Treasury, is more than the combined capital of the Federal reserve system and the land-bank system when they were formed.

But that is not the worst feature of this bill, Mr. President. It takes this large sum of money out of the Treasury for the express purpose of repairing the capital of farmers who have failed, to enable them to compete with their next-door neighbors whose methods have been measurably successful. I do not know what it would be called. It certainly is not individualism, and it would be difficult to find an advocate of socialism who will say that it is not extremely offensive to his view of what true paternalism should be. He thinks that the Government should take control of production and transportation, and he gives his reasons for it; but I have yet to hear of a Socialist who advocates taking large sums of money out of the Public Treasury for the express purpose of permitting individuals who have failed to compete with individuals whose methods have succeeded in private occupations.

Of course the trouble is one which we all recognize. It is a pretty hard one to remedy. I have heard it stated that with our improved agricultural implements one man can cultivate as many acres to-day as three men could cultivate before the introduction of the power machines. Consider for a minute what that means. It means that the farmers to-day can produce as large a quantity of food products as could have been produced in 1860 if the entire population of the country had been engaged in farming.

I take it there is not a State in this Union that could not produce enough foodstuffs to maintain its population and have a surplus. I have heard it stated that we could easily feed a billion people. I think the two States of Florida and California could produce enough citrous fruits to supply the normal wants of a billion people. This is not only so with agriculture, but it is so with almost every industry where the conditions permit reasonable economic manufacture.

Congress can not regulate production in this country. Marketing associations may, in a measure, stabilize the price of a product if the production is constant, but only under such conditions, and the instant any industry shows an attractive profit there will be overproduction. Our acreage is so enormous that marketing associations can not control the price where there is overproduction. If the parties who own and control the means of production are unable to control it, how can the Government assist in any material way unless it goes the full length, confiscates, owns, and manages all the farm lands of the country, and allots to every man the number of acres which he may cultivate?

I do not believe we are ready for that. My impression is that the average American citizen would rather go along under the old régime for a little while yet. Rising and falling prices are natural. A pretty wise man once said that they were the romance of trade. I sometimes think that with the love for variety which is inherent in any active, red-blooded man worthy of the name, he would rather take his chances under the system that has brought us so far on the road to comfortable prosperity, especially in view of the fact that every community and every nation that has tried the paternalistic method of controlling prices has gone to the dogs, never to return.

Mr. President, I do not want to criticize, and I am not going to criticize, the purposes or the motives of the gentlemen who are supporting this legislation. I know that environment has a great deal to do with the convictions of honest men; and if I lived in the Dakotas or in Montana or any one of these States that is situated far distant from markets, that has to contend with the natural disadvantages of that location, I should feel that it was my duty to do everything I could to ameliorate conditions; and it may be that the effect of environment would be so strong after a time that I could become convinced that a proposal such as that embodied in this bill would result in a permanent benefit.

If I know anything about the history of such remedies, however, if the law of supply and demand is to be left operative, it is my firm conviction that this little sop which each farmer can receive, but which in its total amounts to a colossal sum, will be a foundation for the creation of still greater necessities; and, the precedent once being established, we shall go where all our predecessors have gone, and the people who receive these benefits will regret it in the long run.

The distinguished junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. JOHNSON] is in the Chamber. Some time ago I read a purported interview which he had with a reporter of the New York Herald, in which he said that in his opinion the trouble with the farmer was that he had had too much credit, and that what he wanted was a market; and I said to myself: "Newspaper reports to the contrary notwithstanding"—and the Senator had been criticized somewhat in the East—"a Daniel has come to judgment in the Senate of the United States." It is what I have been maintaining for 10 years in my humble and ineffective way.

Why, Mr. President, when we drafted the Federal reserve act and based our currency upon self-liquidating commercial paper I felt that it would be a mistake to make an exception in favor of the farmer and render six months' agricultural paper eligible for rediscount, but I was overruled by the committee. What happened? Take it in 1920, just before prices began to drop.

The bankers were anxious to make money. The farmers were anxious to sell their crops at the highest possible price; and when the price fabric began to tremble they got their paper renewed, held on to their products, and they went down, and the farmer went out. If the banks had not been tempted to make money, and in turn invited the farmers to renew their paper—in other words, if the farmers of the country in 1920 had been compelled to take in sail, reduce their obligations—they would have done so and they would have sold a very large portion of their products at a profit. The farmer should have reasonable and seasonable accommodations for the production of his crop, and I have advocated every measure looking to that end; but if a farmer wants money for one, two, or three years, he should borrow it from a man who has money to lend for one, two, or three years.

Credits have been made easy. I do not object to that; but the Senator from Minnesota is everlastingly right when he says that the farmer has had too much credit and that what he needs is a market. I am willing to go to any length to which Congress can go that will help him to obtain markets; but you can repeal the Sherman Act, you can give the farmers permission to combine and cooperate, you can go to any extent that you please legitimately, and with the enormous total of fertile acres in this country the farmer will find that the only way in which he can control his markets is to go to the foundation and control his production.

Mr. McNARY. Can he do that?

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator from Oregon intimates that he can not do it, and I reply, and repeat, that Congress can do it in only one way, and that is by taking possession of the farms, allotting to each farmer the number of acres he can cultivate. If there is any other way I would like to have some of the Senators who are interested in this bill suggest it, and the Senator from Oregon would oppose that method as strongly as I would.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McLEAN. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. The Senator is well aware of the fact that we farmers have been educated to produce more. We have paid taxes to support agricultural colleges for experimental purposes, and also to tell us to produce more; and we have done so. The Senator knows we have produced so much that we can not sell it. When it came to controlling, we have tried for years to organize, to have orderly marketing, have we not?

Mr. McLEAN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. The Senator agrees to that. But have we had any assistance from the Government of the United States and the different State governments? No; we have had no assistance whatever, until within the last few years they have begun to wake up to the fact that we need a little help, too.

I want to put the Senator right about another thing. He referred to what I said to a newspaper man. I will ask the Senator not to take his seat; I am not going to make a speech.

Mr. McLEAN. I want the Senator to make a speech. I want to hear him.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. I was right when I stated to the newspaper man that we have had too much credit. I stand on that now. But consider the shape we farmers in the Northwest are in to-day, when a good many banks have failed, and those in business to-day are not in a position to loan, for instance, $200 or $300 to a farmer who wants to start diversification. Therefore, I made my talk yesterday along that line, and if the Senator was in the Chamber yesterday he noticed that I explained that we have so much money borrowed now that we can hardly pay the interest on what we have already borrowed. But there is some way to get out of it, if we go in and milk cows and raise hogs and poultry.

It might be, if we go into the market, that prices will fall. I understand the price of eggs is falling now; that you can get them for 36 and 40 cents a dozen in Washington to-day. But if there is a farmer who has three or four cows, and milks those cows and takes care of them, he can go into town and get a cream check in order to support him and his family for a week or two, can he not?

Mr. McLEAN. I agree to that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. That will help. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] stated that there are farms and farms in their States which have not on them a cow or a hen or a hog. That is why we are asking help. We are not asking for anything unreasonable at all. We want a little bit of help.

What is $50,000,000 for this great Government of ours? It is not a drop in the bucket to what we have been giving to many organizations. I want to say to the Senator from Connecticut that the farmers have not been sufficiently represented in this body, but the manufacturers and the bankers and the big interests have been represented in this body. The small banks are broke because we raised wheat in North Dakota and Montana and did not get anything for it so that we could pay our bills, and pay the bankers on top of that. We all know it, and it is about time to get a knife and cut away the cancerous sore on the American public up there in the Northwest to-day, and we want the help of the Senator in doing it.

Mr. McLEAN. I understand the Senator's views. I heard portions of his address. I think I am familiar with the sister bill to this, of which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] is the author, which is intended to stabilize the market for wheat and various other products. If I am wrong about that, the Senator will correct me.

What does it propose to do? I have been a protectionist all my life, upon the theory that if we protect our American producers against ruinous competition it will stimulate domestic competition, and, in the long run, the American consumer will be better off than he would be if we let foreign competition drive the American out of business, in which event the American people would be subjected to any price the foreigner wished to charge. The Senator will follow me, I think.

But here is a proposition which would eliminate domestic competition. It proposes, as I understand it, to take $100,000,000, or perhaps $200,000,000, out of the Treasury. I do not know whether the control is to be given to the Secretary of Agriculture or not, but probably it is. If I were the Secretary of Agriculture, with any such trust impending, I should resign as quickly as I could find a pen, because if he does not he will be investigated and fired before he has been in office six months. It is a colossal undertaking and responsibility which is beyond the capacity of any single individual; but the bill proposes to use machinery to purchase and hold the surplus product of wheat. If I am wrong about that, the Senator will correct me.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FLETCHER in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. McLEAN. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I doubt the desirability of diverting the legislative mind from the Norbeck bill to the bill I introduced, but inasmuch as I have been challenged by the Senator from Connecticut to explain the bill I will say that he is entirely wrong as to every provision of the bill which he has mentioned. It is not to be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture. There are to be two commissions. One commission is to have the active administrative things to handle. There is to be a larger body, of which the Secretary of Agriculture is to be one of eight members, which will define the policy of the corporation to be formed. Little, if any, responsibility is to be thrown upon the Secretary of Agriculture.

As to the other proposition, the bill does not purport to authorize the purchase of any wheat or any other basic agricultural commodity, defined as such in the bill, for the purpose of storing and holding. Anything purchased is to be purchased only for exportable surplus, and it can not be used in the domestic market. It is to be sold in an orderly way in the foreign market. The losses sustained thereby are to be absorbed by the higher prices which the article brings in the domestic market.

That is the difference between this and any other scheme, many of which have been proposed, to buy wheat in the open domestic market and store it and hold it, to increase the price of that which is given to the public for consumption. This would do that, not for the purpose of holding but to provide for the resale in foreign markets, where the wheat is now disposed of. If it were not that my attention has been called to those two propositions, I did not intend to confuse the minds of Senators with a discussion of the export bill.

I think many mistakes have been made in the discussion of this bill when reference is made to the other bills. Those who are opposing this measure have attempted to bring in a discussion regarding other bills than the one before the Senate now for its consideration. I am for the pending bill, if I may say just a word here.

I am not for all the amendments, but I am for the general purpose of the bill, and perhaps I may address myself briefly to that. In some way, at some time, I am for what is known as the Norris bill and for this other bill to which reference has been made, namely, Senate bill 2012, which happens to bear my name, because I introduced it and had something to do with its fashioning and general purposes. I believe that will bring the most immediate relief to agriculture and agriculturists, who produce the basic articles described and defined in the bill. But that is a large and comprehensive matter. Many complexities are found in its provisions. A great effort must be made properly to administer it. At some day, and on an appropriate occasion, when that bill is before the Senate for consideration, I intend to speak upon the subject at length; but as for that matter, we must bide the time, and on this particular occasion I want to remind the Senator from Connecticut that every reference he has made to the bill shows plainly that he is not conversant with its many provisions.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator has touched upon the administrative features of the bill and I am not thoroughly informed as to those features, but the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. JOHNSON] introduced this subject, insisting that something should be done to stabilize the price of the farmers' product, if possible.

I will ask the Senator from Oregon if the purpose of his bill, and the only purpose, is not to stabilize the price of wheat?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that word "stabilize" has been used in so many ways and has so many different meanings that I do not know whether the bill is intended to stabilize or not. But I do know its purpose is this, as expressed in the bill, to give the farmers' products mentioned in the bill a fair exchange value with other commodities in other industries and in other fields, so that the farmer will be restored in his purchasing power to the same position he occupied before the war, namely, to a parity with the manufacturing industries of the New England States. I think that answers the Senator's question.

Mr. McLEAN. I think the Senator has not answered my question. I assume that the purpose of the bill is to raise the price of wheat above what it would be if the law of supply and demand were left in free operation. That being so, I would like to ask the Senator what he is going to do if his bill enables the American farmer to produce wheat at a profit—and we can raise in this country wheat enough to feed a billion people? What kind of a burden does he think he will have on his hands in a few years, when the Government takes money out of the Treasury to fix the price of wheat for the farmer, so that he can raise it at a profit?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, again the Senator from Connecticut shows his want of knowledge of the purpose of the bill. It does not provide for taking any money out of the Treasury of the United States permanently to raise wheat, or to encourage the raising of wheat.

Mr. McLEAN. Permanently?

Mr. McNARY. The Government is to furnish the nucleus to start the processes provided in this bill. The money is all returnable to the Treasury of the United States. All the benefits are to come out of the producers' pockets alone. The Government is simply asked to supply the machinery, or the mechanics, by which the farmer can do that thing for himself which he is unable to do now, and which the manufacturer is able to do, under a high protective tariff system.

Mr. McLEAN. The Government starts the ball with the insignificant sum of $100,000,000, does it not?

Mr. McNARY. I would say the significant sum of $100,000,000; yes.

Mr. McLEAN. As a starter; and if it succeeds, it is going to protect or stabilize the price of wheat, so that the farmers can continue to raise it and sell it at a profit. If it does not do that, what is it good for; and if does do that, what sort of a burden will we have on our hands when the farmers of the country realize that the only thing in which they can make money is wheat? We raised wheat in Connecticut during the war, and as we have nothing now that is paying an attractive price in Connecticut in the agricultural line, when the gentleman fixes the price of wheat so we can make a good profit, I think we shall return to the growing of wheat extensively.

Mr. McNARY. It is difficult to pursue a question with a very charming colleague who knows nothing about the bill.

Mr. McLEAN. I am trying to ascertain. If the bill does not stabilize the price of wheat, what does it do and what is it good for?

Mr. McNARY. If the Senator would studiously devote about two hours to a study of the bill he would not be propounding to me these most puerile questions.

Mr. McLEAN. Since I have been chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency I have annually studied proposals all of them twin sisters or twin brothers to the proposal now submitted by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. That again shows the Senator's lack of familiarity with the pending bill.

Mr. McLEAN. I am pretty familiar, I think, with the bill and its purposes. I am trying to ascertain from the Senator what he and the other friends of the farmers are going to do when the Government has started the machinery that will stabilize and fix the price of any product so that the producer of it can always sell it at a profit.

Mr. McNARY. I thank the Senator from Connecticut for properly classifying me as a friend of the farmer. There has been no bill similar to this one that has ever been brought to the attention of Congress, irrespective of the fact that the Senator from Connecticut has at one time been chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency. If the Senator had read the bill, that statement would not have been made by him. The fact that this would increase the production of wheat to a point where it had passed the power of consumption is easily answered. There is a provision in the bill that provides that the price shall descend as rapidly as the production of wheat ascends until they reach an equitable level, which will operate as a stop to further production.

Mr. McLEAN. And a profitable level.

Mr. McNARY. Of course, the Senator from Connecticut is not familiar with that provision because he has not read the bill. That is self-evident.

Mr. McLEAN. Oh, yes; I have read the bill.

Mr. McNARY. As to the question of overproduction, if we are capable under a fair stimulus to increase the production of wheat sufficiently to meet the demands of the country in time of war, we certainly should be able to control the production at a time like this, with the proper stimulus. The Senator does not know, but I am going to tell him, that the largest production of wheat this country has ever produced was in 1915, when there were 1,172,000,000 bushels produced. Not since that time have we approached that figure, and that was two years before we entered the war. Under all the stimuli, patriotic and congressional, calculated to produce cheaper bread and more wheat this country never produced as much as 900,000,000 bushels, and our average annual production has been around 776,000,000 bushels, showing clearly that any little stimulus to wheat, whereby we put it on a parity with the manufactured products, does not cause the farmer to increase the production.

Beyond that, anyone familiar with the geography of our country and who knows the possibilities of climate and soil would never make the statement that this country is capable of producing very much more wheat than it has produced in 1915. If one would travel west of the Allegheny Mountains and go out to the Pacific country, through the great Prairie States and the Rocky Mountain States, he would observe that all the areas that can be made productive of wheat have been made productive, and those areas that are left suitable for cultivation only by means of irrigation are never utilized in the production of wheat but for crops that have a shorter duration in their growth and development and maturity. So I say to my good friend from Connecticut, let him travel more around the country and study more thoughtfully the purposes of the bill.

Mr. McLEAN. I think if the Senator would go to Pennsylvania and New York and ascertain the number of bushels of wheat that could be raised in those States, if it had to be done, he would find that they could feed the whole American people. But never mind that——

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McLEAN. I will gladly yield to the Senator in a moment. I was inspired to follow up this inquiry by a statement made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING], I think it was, on yesterday that he was opposed to the pending bill but was in favor of the bill offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY]. The Senator from Idaho is not in the Chamber at the moment, and I do not like to make a statement in his absence.

Mr. McNARY. I shall be very glad to send for him.

Mr. McLEAN. I think he said if the two bills could be coupled together he might favor them both. There is a possibility that all the different and learned authors of these projects—I have several in my office—may, before we get through, put their heads together and endeavor to enact them all. I think then the appropriation would be something above $500,000,000. I am wondering whether the Senators who are so anxious to have taxes reduced will be able to vote for any reduction whatever if we meet these demands. But, Mr. President, I am not going to discuss the pending bill any longer at this time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. President——

Mr. McLEAN. Just a moment, and then I shall finish and yield the floor to the Senator.

I have said, and I repeat, that I should be glad to do anything that would result in a permanent benefit to the interests involved, but if I know anything about the history of this sort of legislation, where it has been tried over and over and over again, it will defeat its own purposes, and the very men who are the most anxious to try the experiment will lament its result.

It is inevitable if we follow the principles upon which the industrial and economic liberties of American citizenship have been based from the foundation of this Republic. Whenever Congress undertakes to interfere with the law of supply and demand it makes a mistake which, if not fatal, will be sincerely regretted by the very men who advocate it.

So far as I am concerned if I should vote for the bill my conscience would tell me that I voted for it solely for the purpose of increasing the production of food that would sustain and stimulate the life of that most blessed of all animals, the dear old Republican elephant, and for no other purpose. But I am afraid that even in this hope I would fail because I fancy Senators on the other side of the Chamber who vote for the bill would take the platform and insist that the increased production in the particular kind of food which I have described was suitable only for that historic and patient animal, not as handsome as the elephant, but one which is at the present time much more in need of political sustenance.

Mr. BURSUM obtained the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURSUM. I rose for the purpose of propounding a question to the Senator from Connecticut. I desire to ask the Senator from Connecticut if he thinks that farm production, especially wheat growers, is an essential element necessary to the economic life of this country?

Mr. McLEAN. I do not think the Senator really feels that it is necessary for me to answer that question in the affirmative. I take it for granted that bread is the staff of life, and we must have it.

Mr. BURSUM. Then we ought to continue the farmer, and how can the farmer continue at a loss? The Senator well understands that the farmer, unlike many other elements of industry, is not in a position to obtain the benefits of a competitive basis for the sale of his products; that is, upon the basis on which similar products may be imported from European countries. The net result, so far as the farmer is concerned, is that his surplus going to foreign markets fixes the prices of his commodity here at home, while the market in which he must purchase is realizing the benefits from the competitive basis upon which the commodity may be brought in from foreign countries. Therefore one of two things must happen: Either the value of the commodities which the farmer must of necessity purchase must be reduced down to the level of his purchasing power or his commodity must be brought up to the level of the purchasing power of the things which he must purchase in order to operate his business.

The trouble with the farmer, and I think it is well recognized, is that he has no agency through which he can successfully control the marketing and distribution of his products, while the other industries, who do get the benefit of the tariff and of the competitive basis of similar products being imported from foreign countries, are in a position to finance themselves, to control overproduction and to control the sale and distribution. In other words, the purchasing power of the farmer is much less than that of the other elements of industry. It goes without saying that the farmer, without any capital, can not continue indefinitely losing money. So there has arisen an emergency and some form of relief is necessary which will afford the farmer an agency by which he may sell his products on the basis of the American standard and not on the foreign standard; some method whereby the surplus may be taken care of and separated from the supply which is intended for American consumption. If the Senator from Connecticut knows of any other remedy which will bring about such a situation, well and good; but it seems to me that something is necessary in order to equalize conditions.

Mr. McLEAN. That is the very point I have been discussing. If the Government undertakes in this instance to stabilize the price of wheat, I do not know why it should not undertake to stabilize the price of all products where there may be a surplus. The farmers produce a surplus in this country. If they did not they would have the full advantage of the tariff.

Mr. BURSUM rose.

Mr. McLEAN. Pardon me. If they can reduce their production below the surplus margin, they will get the benefit of the tariff.

Mr. BURSUM. That is not necessarily essential.

Mr. McLEAN. I know, but that would be the result. There is only one way by which the farmers can control prices—organize and control production.

Mr. BURSUM. For instance, if sewing machines are manufactured in greater quantities than are required in this country, the surplus is sold abroad, sometimes for less than the price for which sewing machines are sold in this country. That is necessary in order to protect the industry. The proposition is, if we are to maintain our industries on the American standard, that standard must extend to all elements of industry; otherwise there will be great hardship and suffering and liquidation among certain elements of our industrial life. In some way all those elements must be entitled to the benefit of the same standard.

Mr. McLEAN. It is the same with the wheat grower as with the potato grower. As I have instanced here, nearly two years ago the potato growers lost millions; they did not receive much more than half the cost of production. The Senator would single out one industry, one product, and have the Government come to its aid alone. As soon as we shall do that we shall hear not only from Montana but we shall hear from Maine. There also may be an overproduction of oranges in Florida and California, and we shall hear from those States. So it will go, until finally we shall have the Government engaged in a proceeding which will not only exhaust the Treasury but which will result in a colossal surplus which the Government can not handle.

Mr. BURSUM. It ought not to exhaust the Treasury or take a dollar out of it. The cost of marketing the surplus should be absorbed in the cost of that portion of the production which is sold here at home, and which represents 90 per cent of the total.

Mr. McLEAN. That depends upon the amount of the surplus. When the Government guarantees a profit the surplus of wheat will be mountain high.

Mr. BURSUM. There is no guaranty of profits, as I understand.

Mr. McLEAN. It is proposed that the Government stabilize the price of wheat because the farmers will not continue to raise it unless they can raise it at a profit.

Mr. BURSUM. The proposition is simply to guarantee a market on a competitive basis, and not to guarantee a profit. I have heard nothing of guaranteeing a profit.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. President, I should like to put the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] on record. I should like to ask him if he would be in favor of the farmers of the United States organizing and ascertaining the cost of production and asking a price for their products which would cover that?

Mr. McLEAN. I think we have already amended the law for the benefit of the farmer in that regard.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. I want the Senator to answer my question.

Mr. McLEAN. I voted for that law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. The Senator voted for what?

Mr. McLEAN. I voted to take the farmer out from the operation of the Sherman Act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. That answer is not satisfactory to me. I understand the Senator from Connecticut represents a State where there are many great manufacturing industries. The people of his State set the price. The manufacturer, the wholesaler, the retailer—they all set the price; but the farmer does not do that. Is the Senator from Connecticut, then, in favor of organization so that farmers may ascertain the cost of production, for the farmer is the biggest manufacturer of all the manufacturers?

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Just a moment. The farmer manufactures tobacco, wool, hogs, sheep, and everything, does he not? Yes; and yet he lets somebody else set the price for him. That is all there is to it.

Now, the manufacturer has got his hand in the pocket of the wholesaler; the wholesaler has got his hand in the pocket of the retailer; the retailer has got his hand in the pocket of Mr. Farmer; but where is the pocket into which Mr. Farmer can put his hand? There is none.

I ask the Senator from Connecticut if he is willing for the farmer to go to the manufacturer and say, "Here, I want to get the cost of production"?

Mr. McLEAN. We try to ascertain the cost of production when we fix the tariff rates; but sometimes we succeed and sometimes we do not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. How did the Republicans fix the tariff rate in the last Congress?

Mr. McLEAN. We fixed a tariff of 30 cents a bushel on wheat.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. That is not enough, but that was all right in one way. But look where the farmer buys. While he sells abroad in a wholesale market, he buys in a retail market, which is protected by the people of the manufacturing States. That is all there is to it.

Mr. McLEAN. I will answer the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. I wish to have an answer to that question.

Mr. McLEAN. I wish to say to the Senator from Minnesota that if the farmers of Minnesota want to organize and control the market for wheat, go to it; there is no legal obstacle; I shall not interfere with them, because I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that I, too, am a farmer.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. I am willing——

Mr. McLEAN. Just a moment. I should like to find some way in which I can operate a farm at a sure profit.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Well, has the Senator from Connecticut any suggestion to make? Has he introduced any bills to the effect he has suggested?

Mr. McLEAN. I have been trying to explain to the Senator from Minnesota why I have not introduced any bills for that purpose. It is because I do not believe that Congress, by law, can control natural disadvantages, or wisely interfere with the law of supply and demand.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. No; but I wish to ask another question. I am willing to throw away all of the pending bills if the Senate and the House of Representatives will get behind a proposition to help organize the farmers so that they can ascertain the cost of production and ask a reasonable and fair profit to enable them to keep their families as men in the cities keep their families, because in the city the prices are set. They always fix the prices in the city, do they not? Why, certainly.

Mr. McLEAN. I do not live in the city, in the first place.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. I do not care; the Senator is a lawyer; he is an attorney, and he sets his prices.

Mr. McLEAN. I have not practiced law for a great many years.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Then the Senator does something else and sets the price for his services; there is no question about that.

Mr. McLEAN. No.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Everybody else sets the price except the farmer. He produces, but lets somebody else set the price.

Mr. McLEAN. I will say to the Senator let the farmer go to it and set his own price.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. We would like to do it, not to starve out anybody else. But that is why when they sent me down here they said, "Maybe you can help us out; you can not make things any worse for us than the Republicans have." [Laughter.]

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I don't know about that. The Senator from Minnesota has my sympathy. I was brought up on a farm and operated one; it is the only business I have when I am not here. The farmers now can organize—there is nothing to interfere with them in that regard—just as any other producers can organize, only the farmers are not restricted by legislation as other industries are restricted. In that respect he has every preference.

I do not like to take the time of the Senate to repeat the real cause for the situation in which the farmer finds himself, but he has a case either of overproduction or underconsumption, and he has a very high wage scale; he has to pay a high price for his machinery; and circumstances are such at present that it is very difficult for him to produce anything that he can sell at a profit. He has my full sympathy. I would be very glad to help him in any legitimate way, but my point is that if the Congress undertakes to use the Treasury of the United States to assure him a profit he will immediately have a surplus which will crush him and the Treasury.

I yield the floor, Mr. President. I shall be glad to hear from the Senators from the Northwest.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I am sorry the Senator from Connecticut misunderstood my statement yesterday when I said that this bill, so far as I could see, was intended to benefit farmers who are not able to make loans under present conditions by enabling them to go into the raising of livestock or livestock products, not for the particular reason of providing food products for the farm in the way of meat and milk, and so forth, but to give them something that they could sell, such as milk and eggs and beef and poultry and things of that kind that would help pay their store bills and in that way keep down overhead expenses and put them on a somewhat more successful basis.

The Senator from Connecticut has referred a number of times to the law of supply and demand. He spoke about the free operation of the law of supply and demand, and was afraid that this bill or some other measure which Congress might enact would interfere with the natural law of supply and demand. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut when has the natural law of supply and demand freely operated for the benefit of the farmer; that is, in fixing the price of the products of the farmer?

Mr. McLEAN. I take it it is operating not only freely but too freely at the present time, and that is the reason why wheat can not be raised in the Northwest at a profit.

Mr. FRAZIER. I am not so sure about that.

Mr. McLEAN. Canada produced a surplus of 300,000,000 bushels of wheat last year and we produced a surplus of about 150,000,000 bushels.

Mr. FRAZIER. And untold millions were starving in Europe.

Mr. McLEAN. That may be, but they had not any money with which to buy the wheat.

Mr. FRAZIER. But the demand is there just the same.

Mr. McLEAN. When Russia resumes raising wheat, I will inform the Senator, there will be little opportunity for the wheat growers of the Northwest to sell Dakota wheat in Europe unless they sell it for 50 cents a bushel.

Mr. FRAZIER. I want to say that there is not a surplus in this country of the kind of wheat we raise in North Dakota, and there never will be. We raise a kind of wheat that has got to be mixed with the kind of wheat produced in Connecticut in order to make a good grade of flour. It is No. 1 hard northern wheat, and there is no surplus of it in this country, and none of it is ever shipped abroad. We have to import it from Canada to get enough to mix with other wheat in order to obtain good flour for our own people.

Mr. McLEAN. Then, you get the benefit of the tariff to a certain extent?

Mr. FRAZIER. We would if it were protected, as it ought to be protected.

Mr. McLEAN. Do you not, as a matter of fact, get some benefit from the tariff?

Mr. FRAZIER. But very little under the present situation. I do not want to go into that question at the present time, because it is not part of the discussion of this bill, but the Senator from Connecticut made such rash statements along certain lines that I felt some correction should be made.

It would seem from the Senator's statements that he objects to the farmers selling their wheat or any other products at a profit.

Mr. McLEAN. Oh, no.

Mr. FRAZIER. He asked the Senator from Oregon if his bill was not designed to allow the farmer to sell his grain at a profit.

Mr. McLEAN. Yes; if the money for the profit is furnished out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. FRAZIER. It does not make any difference whether it comes out of the Treasury of the United States or not, the fact is that if the farmer is going to live he has got to get a profit for the commodities which he produces. The Senator will admit that the farmer produces those commodities which he and the people of Connecticut and the people of the rest of the United States have got to have in order to live, and the farmer must, if he is going to continue in business, put the farm on a paying basis, which it has not been on in the past.

The Senator also stated that there was no reason why the farmer should not organize. Perhaps there is not, and yet past experience of the farmers is that every organization that has ever been attempted for the benefit of the farmers themselves has been bucked and opposed by a concerted effort on the part of the financial interests of this Nation which have been thoroughly organized for many years.

You can take the bankers' associations, chambers of commerce, manufacturers' associations, and all of the rest of them right down the line, and the law of supply and demand does not fix the price of farm products—not by any possible stretch of the greatest imagination. It is the grain gamblers of the Chamber of Commerce of Minneapolis and the Board of Trade of Chicago and the rest of the places like that that fix the price of wheat; and the same thing is true of the rest of our products, beef products and the rest.

We pay 15 cents a quart for milk right here in the city of Washington to-day. Is it the law of supply and demand that makes that price? No; it is not, and the farmer out here is not getting any 15 cents a quart for his milk. The reason why we pay 15 cents a quart for milk is because of the organized sellers who sell that milk.

The reason why we are paying 9 cents a pound for bread to-day here in the city of Washington is not the law of supply and demand, and it is not based on the price of wheat that the farmer gets. It is because there is an organization of the bakers, who are organized so that they can control the price of bread.

Mr. McLEAN. They ought to be prosecuted.

Mr. FRAZIER. They should be prosecuted, yes; perhaps that is right, but they are not. What the farmer can not understand is why Congress and why men like the Senator from Connecticut here oppose any measure, apparently, for the benefit of the farmer, while—I do not know what the Senator's record is—but in the past bills have been passed by Congress to benefit other lines of business—the manufacturers, the bankers, the railroads, the coal operators, and the rest of the big interests. Then why can not the farmers have just a little bit of protection, just a little bit of consideration, at the hands of these same gentlemen who have protected big business interests in this Nation in the past?

The little bill that is up before us now is only a drop in the bucket. It makes but very little difference one way or the other in my estimation. It will help some farmers to get on their feet; but a bill like the McNary-Haugen bill or the Norris-Sinclair bill will be a real relief to the farmers. I was glad to hear the Senator from Connecticut say that he would support any measure that would honestly help the farmers. I shall take pleasure in calling that statement to his attention if he takes the same attitude when these other bills come up that he has taken here to-day.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] might have suggested to the Senator from Connecticut that the people have lost, in the lease of the oil reserves, many millions of dollars, in fact hundreds of millions of dollars, and there is a disposition on the part of some to defend the leases which occasioned these losses which amount to hundreds of millions, and I want to say here and now that before many weeks have elapsed I expect to see Senators on the other side openly defending the oil leases, and seeking to bolster up the cause of those who have taken over this vast property of the Government of the United States.

While I am on that subject I want to read a telegram, in order that the committee on investigation may have some suggestions on the subject to-day, because they probably will examine some one or two phases of this question on to-morrow.

When the Senate was discussing the necessity for the resignation of Mr. Denby, and suggestions were being made that Mr. Daugherty should resign, a telegram was sent from Washington to Mr. Ed McLean, at Palm Beach, Fla. It reads as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 29, 1924—1.20 p. m.

Saw principal. Delivered message. He says greatly appreciates, and sends regards to you and Mrs. McLean. There will be no rocking of boat and no resignations. He expects reaction from unwarranted political attacks.

(Signed) BENNETT.

That is Mr. Bennett, of the Washington Post. I think the "principal" referred to here is the President. I think the statement that there would be no resignations is in keeping with the statement the Times had, in an article by Mr. Clark, stating that the President had said that he would not permit Mr. Denby to resign.

I think these two things are intimately related and refer to the same subject matter, that they mean just what this telegram sets out, that the "principal"—or the President—has been seen, and that he thinks favorable reaction in a political way will follow; that there will be no rocking of the boat if the President can prevent it, and no resignations forthcoming because of the terrible disclosures just made.

I quoted the President here as having said that he would not permit Mr. Denby to resign, and that was after this telegram was sent and Mr. Denby was boldly declaring that he would not resign. I should like to have the committee ask Mr. Bennett to-morrow morning—I understand that he is going to appear before the committee—to explain this telegram in detail, and explain exactly what he meant when he said that he had seen the "principal." It may be that he will state that he never saw the principal or the President in person; and I should like to have the committee ask him who did see him, and who brought to him the statement that he had been seen. In other words, I want to suggest, a day in advance, that the committee go very thoroughly and minutely into the details regarding this particular telegram. I make that request.

Mr. President, the bill pending here is a sad disclosure of the awful conditions that we find under a Republican administration. Here are the people in several States hard pressed, and some poverty stricken, when Republican periodicals, for political purposes, are boasting that we have prosperity throughout the country. Here are the people of four or five sovereign States in the Northwest begging the Congress to do something to permit thousands of farmers and their families to have a chance to live, and yet we have had a Republican administration in control of every branch of the Government for three years and a little more.

While there is prosperity in the East, the section that is sapping the substance of the other three sections of the country, we are here debating for two days a measure that seeks to bring relief to a great army of farmers in the great Northwest, mortgaged, debt ridden, and poverty stricken; everything that the farmer has, personal property of every kind, farm lands and all, covered with mortgages, and he says he has reached his row's end, bankrupted and broke; and this is the fruit of a Republican administration!

I want to remind the Senators on the other side who seem to have forgotten that when the Republican deflation panic was on you contributed to the undoing of agriculture, you would not permit the farmer to obtain loans on the very cattle that you caused him to lose and that you are now seeking to buy back for him and take a mortgage on for the Government. You would not permit him to have the same rediscount rates that the gamblers of Wall Street got during that period. Not only that, but you charged him a high progressive interest rate, ranging from 10 to 30 per cent and higher, when your gamblers in New York were obtaining money at from 5 to 6 and 6½ per cent. You had one standard of financial accommodations for the East and quite another and harder standard for the people of the South and West, and finally you became so cold and cruel that you would not permit the people of the South to borrow money on cotton at all. Our farmers were helpless and could not obtain a dollar on cotton. We could not obtain a dollar on Liberty bonds finally for the agricultural section of the South; neither could they obtain such loans in the West. They could not get loans upon their cattle; they could not get loans on their lands. You had a high interest rate for the South and West, a progressive interest rate. The more money the farmer needed by reason of the organized efforts to rob him the higher you placed the rediscount rate. You finally reached the point where you would not let him have a dollar. Now everyone can clearly see that you have sown the wind and you are reaping the whirlwind, and "as ye sow, so shall ye reap." You mistreated the farmer; you withdrew from him the aid of governmental instrumentalities established for his benefit; you permitted those who wanted to pillage and plunder him to do so. Now you have him in a despondent and impoverished state and you are calling on the Government to loan him some money to temporarily get him out of the mire into which you have thrown him, and all this just before a presidential election.

Mr. President, I have in my desk here a cartoon. It is the most appropriate and timely thing that I have seen. It is a picture of the G. O. P. elephant. Some friend was kind enough to send it to me. It has this big, old G. O. P. elephant on the side of a lagoon, and President "Cautious Cal" Coolidge is sitting upon his head, and the farmer is down in the mud and mire and slush of the lagoon, and the old elephant has come up to the edge of it and is reaching his trunk—or snout, as the boys call it down home—taking the farmer by the arm to pull him out just before the presidential election, to get him on his feet and feed him up and fatten him so that they can get his vote, and the predatory interests can slaughter him again after election if the Republicans should win in the national election. That is what goes on under Republican rule. Will certain people never learn the wisdom and necessity for abandoning for good the boss-ridden and time-serving Republican Party of to-day? Can the people be fooled again by the leaders of the old standpat party as we know them here to-day?

Mr. President, these farmers were not always in this dreadful condition. Under a Democratic adminstration prosperity reigned in the West. We had taken the control of the money supply and credits out of the hands of Wall Street. The farmer in the West was prosperous. He was getting a good price for his products. He had money in his pocket and money in the bank; but when these mighty money lords of New York told these new Republican leaders, "We are going to contribute funds to help put you in power, and when we do you will have to turn over to us the money instrumentalities of the country, the control of the money supply and credits; we have got to have our feast if we furnish the money to put you in," and, Mr. President, we have seen the contract fulfilled to the hurt and injury of millions of American people, and now the Teapot Dome scandal looms up to blacken and cap the climax of it all. They not only robbed the South and West, but they robbed that which was intrusted to their care, the Government itself; and fortunate it is that all this is being brought to the attention of the people, whose Government this is, prior to another presidential election.

I have never seen—and I have been in Congress for some time—the instrumentalities of the Government used in a single instance in a way to benefit the common masses of the common people when the Republican Party was in power—not once.

I have in mind now an instance where the instrumentalities of Government are used to hurt the farmers of my section, the cotton farmers of the South. They tell us, Mr. President, that when you make a big cotton crop that we must expect a low price, because we have too much cotton; the law of supply and demand they tell us regulates that, and when you have a greater supply than is needed, the price is bound to come down. Then we say, "If that is true, when we have a small crop, a supply too small to meet the consumptive demand, then the law of supply and demand would, if permitted to operate, compel a higher price for cotton, and we would be entitled to get a high price to offset the low price we received when the crop is said to be too large." But not so.

What do we find to-day regarding the attitude of the Government toward raw cotton in the United States? We have a cotton crop that is three and a half to four million bales short of the world's consumptive demand. We find the governmental instrumentalities padding the Washington report, adding cotton bales to make up cotton that has not been produced and is not in existence.

There are from 579,000 to 610,000 bales reported in this bogus Census Bureau Government report that can not be found anywhere in the United States. We find the Bureau of the Census, in Mr. Hoover's department, adding cotton bales—hundreds of thousands of them—to the hurt and injury of the cotton producer, simply to balance with distribution. We said, "How is that? Here is the ginners' report covering gins scattered through the 820 counties of the Cotton Belt. They tell exactly how many bales have been ginned. That is the supply that is coming into sight in the United States. Cotton imported is accounted for by Government agents at the port of entry. We can tell how much has come in from the outside and from these two sources we know what the supply is."

"Well," they say, I suppose, "but we add what some of the New England spinners said they had left over and on hand."

But we said, "They have not got it. They are mistaken. The ginners' report shows so many million bales. They imported so many thousand bales; we added them together, and that gives us the correct total, but the figures that you give us show that you have added without rhyme or reason about 610,000 more bales than the figures justify." We said, "How do you get this balance?" They said, "We guessed at or just added these hundreds of thousands of bales to make our report on the cotton supply balance with distribution."

We said, "Why, you have not given the cotton farmer credit for what the ginners' report shows he actually made, but you have added to what he actually made out of your imagination to help the spinners and speculators bear the market about 610,000 bales."

It is a corrupt and scandalous performance. I know of no other way to characterize it. We had one of the agents up here, a Mr. Zimmerman—and I am going to remember him, too, as soon as the Democrats get into power.

We said, "Where do you get this 50,000?"

"I added that for cotton ginned in Texas."

"Have you the ginners' report? We see here where you have 100,000, when only 50,000 had been ginned in Texas."

"That is right," he said, "I added that." He had counted the 50,000 bales twice. So he had the producer charged with 100,000 bales in that one instance when he admitted that there were only 50,000 bales that should have been in the report.

We said, "The other; how did you get that?"

He said, "We estimated it."

"Estimated it—why?"

"To balance with distribution." I raised this point when we had him before the conference of Senators from the cotton-growing States. I said, "Here you have on hand at the cotton mills in the South 531,000 bales, and in the northern mills 687,000 bales, when the fact is the southern mills consume twice as much cotton as they do in the northern mills, and you have somehow got about 150,000 bales more in the northern mills than you have in the southern mills." He was embarrassed; he could not explain that.

Mr. President, I am mentioning this to show that the Republican Party in power never uses it imagination or indulges in guesses to favor the average man, the plain citizen, in the common walks of life. It is always found showing favors to some big concern, and when they do guesswork and put up a smooth job, it is always on that side.

How long will it take for the old-time, self-respecting Republicans of other days to wake up and know the present-day Republican Party as it is and repudiate it as the subservient tool of the predatory interests of the Nation?

Mr. President, I believe that is all I have to say this afternoon. I will probably have some more remarks to make on this bill to-morrow, after I have had the opportunity of examining certain hearings on the bill.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Chief Executive has issued an important statement, an address to members of the Philippine Commission now visiting Washington in connection with the independence of the people of the Philippine Islands. The statement discusses relationship between the people of the United States and of the Philippines, and the President expresses the opinion that the time has not yet arrived when independence should be granted.

The evidence set forth in the statement upon which this opinion is based is that the natives of the islands have been unable to appreciate the ability and services of the present Governor General. The President says plainly that is one reason upon which he justifies his conclusion that the present relationship between the Government of the United States and the Philippines should be continued. The statement also incorporates the following:

> If the time comes when it is apparent that independence would be better for the people of the Philippines, from the point of view of both their domestic concerns and their status in the world, and if, when that time comes the Filipino people desire complete independence, it is not possible to doubt that the American Government and people will gladly accord it.

The statement admits, apparently, that the best interests of the United States justify granting independence to the Filipinos. The policy of continuing the exercise of authority of this Government over the islands is justified by the President solely upon the ground that the Philippine people require protection against themselves and supervision against a probably improvident government if independence be granted them.

Mr. President, the sentiment among the people of the Philippines appears to be almost unanimous in favor of independence. It is undoubtedly true that great advancement has been made since the American occupation of the islands began in 1898. This advancement is evidenced by improved sanitary conditions, better facilities for education, and the existence of a highway system which is constantly being extended and improved. But, sir, the hearings before the Senate committee which has been considering this subject show that resolutions have been unanimously adopted by the Philippine Assembly urging that this Government now permit the citizens of the islands to take over and control their own affairs, and that these resolutions have been supported not only by the members of the assembly who have been elected by the people of the Philippines but also with equal enthusiasm by those members of the assembly who have been appointed by the Governor General, which indicates that so powerful is the sentiment in favor of independence that even the influence of the Governor General has not been sufficient to prevent his own appointees from supporting and advocating that policy.

It is clear to everyone who has studied the subject that the recognition of Philippine independence would relieve the United States Government of a very grave responsibility. It has been said, Mr. President, that the treaties negotiated by the Washington conference last year have so adjusted international problems in the Orient that there is not the slightest probability of our possessions in the East being questioned or disturbed by any foreign power. Yet it is unquestionably true that by our agreement in the naval arms-limitation treaties, in which the United States promised not to further fortify our possessions in the Pacific, we have left those possessions at the mercy of any power which might choose to attack them.

This would seem to be a peculiarly opportune time for granting independence to the people of the Philippines. While they have expressed appreciation for the splendid services our Government has rendered them in the past, there is in the breasts of the enlightened natives a desire for liberty. They believe that independence ought to be granted them. They are well-nigh unanimous in insisting that the pledge made by the United States Government in the act of 1916 to accord them full liberty should be redeemed, and that this should be done now or in the early future.

The difficulties in the way of granting independence will increase in number and grow stronger with the passing of time. The hearings show that American business interests and American influences are gathering volume day by day.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEORGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. While the Senator is speaking of the difficulties, I was wondering whether he had pursued the subject far enough to cause him to desire to make a statement about the financial side of the question. As the Senator knows, he being a member of the committee and one of the most useful members of it, here are about $70,000,000 of bonds issued by the Philippine government, for the maintenance of the value of which the credit of the Government of the United States is pledged. What is the Senator's thought as to how that matter should be cared for in the event we grant them independence?

Mr. ROBINSON. I was just about to say that not only is American influence in the Philippines growing stronger, and that therefore the difficulty of granting independence will increase with the passing of time, but American financial ties and obligations are expected to increase rather than diminish in the future, so that it would be easier now to solve the financial problems which appear to be inseparably connected with the question of independence than it probably again will be during the lifetime of the present generation.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I will yield in just a moment. The outstanding bonds are probably less in amount now than they will be again during the present generation so long as the United States Government retains supervision over the Philippines, so that the problem in that particular is easier now than it will ever be again. Now the representatives of the Philippine Government have themselves suggested that no objection will be interposed to pledging a portion of the revenues of the islands as security for the redemption of the payment of those bonds. Whether that is the most practicable and feasible plan that could be devised I am not prepared to say, but certainly the problem is easier now than it will be hereafter, easier now than it will be 25 years in the future.

I now yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I take it for granted that the Senator is not desiring the Senate to proceed to any immediate consideration of the Philippine question, and I only say that I was about to make an inquiry similar to that which the Senator from Ohio has done. Since the Senator has asked the question, I wish to say that there are further obligations than the bonds referred to, and conditions that I presume have been looked up or will be before the subject comes regularly before the Senate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] indicated that he felt that our Government had pledged itself to the payment of the $70,000,000 referred to.

Mr. WILLIS. It is a moral responsibility, at least.

Mr. KING. There is absolutely no guaranty and no pledge. The city of Manila has borrowed something like $4,000,000, and the Philippine government has borrowed a considerable amount, largely, if not entirely, in the United States, but there is absolutely no guaranty by the United States for the payment of a single dollar of the Philippine debt. The Senator will remember that in the hearings the only reference to that question was that perhaps there was a moral obligation merely because the United States was exercising sovereignty over the islands, and the Governor of the Philippine Islands had been named by the President of the United States.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. If the Senator will permit me very briefly, I recall very well the statement made as suggested by the Senator from Utah. It is, of course, a moral obligation, yet it is well known that those bonds were sold with the tacit understanding, of course, that the Philippine Islands were a part of the United States. While there was no direct guaranty by the Government of the United States, the bonds were sold with the understanding that the Government of the United States was back of them.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; Mr. President, I am not willing to recognize that principle. The language of a written obligation, a public bond, is such that one can not read into the obligation secret or private understandings with governments or individuals who are not parties to the contract, assuming responsibility for their payment. Such a suggestion is to me unreasonable. Whatever may be the responsibility of the United States for those bonds, the United States must and will assume to discharge. I would not attempt to say that the Philippine bonds are a moral obligation of our Government, but if they are the United States must and will discharge that moral obligation.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield just a moment?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. The reason why I suggest that at this time is because the Senator very accurately and properly referred to the fact that it was proposed that the revenue should be pledged to the payment of the bonds. Now, if our Government has no obligation, of course, we ought not to have anything in the world to do with the revenues of the Philippine Islands, and there is no reason why they should be pledged to us for any purpose.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BAYARD. May I state to the Senator from Ohio that at the hearing the other day, I think he was a little bit late. Secretary of War Weeks was there and this same question came up. He stated at that time that doubtless if the United States Government gave the Filipinos their freedom, in the course of a few years the bonds would go down in value, but so far as his opinion was concerned the United States had no obligation of any kind to assume responsibility of payment, that if engagements were made with the Filipinos that if their freedom was given to them they should underwrite some portion of their governmental income to liquidate the bonds, that would be merely because the Filipinos felt that the floating of the bonds at par in the first place was a moral obligation which the Filipinos had undertaken and not the United States.

Mr. WILLIS. I want to ask a question of the Senator. I do not desire to trespass unduly on the time of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. Is it the opinion of the Senator from Delaware that there is, then, no moral obligation at all on the part of the Government of the United States touching the bonds?

Mr. BAYARD. I am of the opinion very frankly that the Government has not a moral obligation under the circumstances.

Mr. WILLIS. I disagree with the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wonder why the Senator from Ohio thinks there is any moral obligation upon the part of the United States. When the Philippine Islands were annexed President McKinley issued a proclamation declaring that there was no purpose whatever upon the part of the United States permanently to annex the Philippine Islands; that it was intended merely to hold them until the people of the islands should familiarize themselves with the principles of self-government and exhibit a capacity for governing themselves. That declaration has been repeatedly asseverated by our public men since and took the form of a formal enactment of the Congress in the year 1916, as stated by the Senator from Arkansas.

Any man who bought the Philippine bonds bought them with the full realization that some time or other the Philippines would have their independence unless we were to repudiate the solemn proclamation of President McKinley at the time the islands were acquired.

That proclamation, I might say, was at that time promulgated in order to still apprehension entertained by some foreign governments concerning aggressive purposes upon the part of this Government of ours. Those bonds, therefore, were taken with the complete information upon the part of the purchasers that at some time or other the Philippines were to be given their independence.

Of course, in modern times a government never discharges its obligations. It merely refunds them; that is, sometimes it reduces them. We hope in time to reduce our great obligations, but the great bulk of our national debt will be refunded. It will not be paid off. So if there is anything to the argument at all that we ought to postpone the redemption of our promise to give the Philippines their independence until the bonds of the Philippine Islands are discharged, we might just as well say that we repudiate our obligations.

I would like to inquire of the Senator whether he thinks the moral obligation of the United States to sustain the bonds is greater than the moral obligation of the United States to redeem its promise made at the time the Philippines were acquired?

Mr. WILLIS. Will the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Ohio for a brief statement.

Mr. WILLIS. It will be very brief. The Senator from Montana misapprehends entirely my purpose. I am not now canvassing the question at all as to whether independence should now be granted. I simply spoke of the financial side of the question. While I agree with the historic facts that he has recited, it being understood that it was the purpose of this Government ab initio eventually to make the Philippine Islands free, I can not overcome the feeling that the obligations that are incurred meanwhile before they become independent are to some extent resting upon us—not a legal obligation, of course I recognize that, but I think they become a moral obligation. But I am not citing that at all as an argument to postpone the granting of independence. If that can be done, it would rest upon other considerations than what I have stated.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have already said that when a contract, correctly denominated as a bond, is executed there are written into its provisions all the obligations which can be asserted in connection with it. It is unheard of to say that there is a moral obligation on the part of the United States to pay the bonds of another government or another people when the United States did not issue and did not sign the bonds and did not assume any liability in connection with them. But, I repeat, whatever may be the obligation of the United States, if it has any obligation to discharge in connection with the bonds of the Philippines, that obligation is lighter now and more easily discharged now than it will ever be again during the present generation. The hearings show that instead of diminishing in amount, the bonds are likely to increase in amount and all the while the ties that bind us to the Philippines and that tend to keep us in the exercise of authority over them are growing stronger and more numerous, and it will be easier now than it will ever be again to redeem the pledge made when we uplifted above the islands the flag of this Republic that we would give them independence as soon as conditions justify it.

But, sir, reverting to the topic discussed by the Senator from Ohio, there is a suggestion that independence should not be granted until some financial arrangement is made satisfactory to the holders of bonds issued by the Philippine people so that the United States would in effect guarantee the obligations of the Philippines now in existence against a decline on the market. Is it the purpose of the Senator from Ohio to place financial obligations above the pledge made by this Government to grant liberty to a people over whom we have exercised authority? Considerations of liberty, the right of people to govern themselves, are the very highest known to civilized people. These considerations must not be subordinated to mercenary interests and they will not be.

I ask to have printed in the RECORD the statement of the President, recently issued, which prompted the remarks which I have made upon the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission will be granted.

The President's letter is as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, February 21, 1924.

MY DEAR MR. ROXAS: The resolutions adopted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Philippines, touching upon the relations between the Filipino people and the Government of the United States, have been received. I have noted carefully all that you have said regarding the history of these relations. I have sought to inform myself so thoroughly as might be as to the occasions of current irritation between the legislature of the Philippines and the executive authority of the islands.

In your presentment you have set forth more or less definitely a series of grievances, the gravamen of which is that the present executive authority of the islands, designated by the United States Government, is in your opinion out of sympathy with the reasonable national aspirations of the Filipino people. If I do not misinterpret your protest, you are disposed to doubt whether your people may reasonably expect, if the present executive policy shall continue, that the Government of the United States will in reasonable time justify the hopes which your people entertain of ultimate independence.

The declaration of the commission of independence charges the Governor General with illegal, arbitrary, and undemocratic policies, in consequence of which the leaders of Filipino participation in the government have resigned and their resignations have been accepted by the Governor General.

The commission of independence declares that it is necessary "to take all needful steps and to make use of all lawful means within our power to obtain the complete vindication of the liberties of the country now violated and invaded." It proceeds: "And we declare, finally, that this event, grave and serious as it is, once more demonstrates that the immediate and absolute independence of the Philippines, which the whole country demands, is the only complete and satisfactory settlement of the Philippine problem."

It is occasion for satisfaction to all concerned that this declaration is couched in terms of moderation, and that it goes no further than to invoke "all lawful means within our power." So long as such discussions as this shall be confined to the consideration of lawful means there will be reason to anticipate mutually beneficent conclusions. It is therefore a matter of congratulation, which I herewith extend, that you have chosen to carry on this discussion within the bounds of lawful claims and means. That you have thus declared the purpose to restrict your modes of appeal and methods of enforcing it is gratifying evidence of the progress which the Filipino people, under American auspices, have made toward a demonstrated capacity for self-government.

The extent to which the grievances which you suggest are shared by the Filipino people has been a subject of some disagreement. The American Government has information which justifies it in the confidence that a very large proportion, at any rate, and possibly a majority of the substantial citizenry of the islands does not support the claim that there are grounds for serious grievance. A considerable section of the Filipino people is further of the opinion that at this time any change which would weaken the tie between the Filipinos and the American Nation would be a misfortune to the islands. The world is in a state of high tension and unsettlement. The possibility of either economic or political disorders, calculated to bring misfortune, if not disaster, to the Filipino people, unless they are strongly supported, is not to be ignored. It should not be overlooked that within the past two years, as a result of international arrangements negotiated by the Washington Conference on Limitation of Armament and Problems of the Far East, the position of the Filipino people has been greatly improved and assured. For the stabilizing advantages which accrue to them in virtue of the assurance of peace in the Pacific they are directly indebted to the initiative and efforts of the American Government.

They can ill afford in a time of so much uncertainty in the world to underrate the value of these contributions to their security. By reason of their assurance against attack by any power; by reason, also, of that financial and economic strength which inevitably accrues to them; by reason of the expanded and still expanding opportunities for industrial and economic development. Because of all these considerations, the Filipino people would do well to consider most carefully the value of their intimate association with the American Nation. Although they have made wonderful advances in the last quarter century, the Filipino people are by no means equipped, either in wealth or experience, to undertake the heavy burden which would be imposed upon them with political independence. Their position in the world is such that without American protection there would be the unrestricted temptation to maintain an extensive and costly diplomatic service, and an ineffective but costly military and naval service. It is to be doubted whether with the utmost exertion, the most complete solidarity among themselves, the most unqualified and devoted patriotism, it would be possible for the people of the islands to maintain an independent place in the world for an indefinite future.

In presenting these considerations, it is perhaps worth while to draw your attention to the conditions in which some other peoples find themselves by reason of lacking such guaranties and assurances as the Filipino people enjoy. The burdens of armament and of governmental expenses which many small nations are compelled to bear in these times, are so great that we see everywhere the evidence of national prosperity and community progress hindered, if not destroyed, because of them. During the World War, the Filipino people were comparatively undisturbed in their ordinary pursuits, left free to continue their fine progress. But it may well be doubted whether, if they had been shorn of the protection afforded by the United States, they could have enjoyed so fortunate an experience. Much more probably they would have become involved in the great conflict and their independence and nationality would have become, as did those of many other peoples, pawns in the great world reorganization. There could be no more unfortunate posture in which to place a people such as your own. You have set your feet firmly in the path of advancement and improvement. But you need, above all else, assured opportunity of continuing in that course without interference from the outside or turmoil within. Working out the highest destiny of even the most talented and advanced of peoples is a matter of many generations.

A fair appraisal of all these considerations, and of others which suggest themselves without requiring enumeration, will, I am sure, justify the frank statement that the Government of the United States would not feel that it had performed its full duty by the Filipino people or discharged all of its obligations to civilization if it should yield at this time to your aspiration for national independence. The present relationship between the American Nation and the Filipino people arose out of a strange, an almost unparalleled, turn of international affairs. A great responsibility came unsought to the American people. It was not imposed upon them because they had yielded to any designs of imperialism or of colonial expansion. The fortunes of war brought American power to your islands, playing the part of an unexpected and a welcome deliverer. You may be very sure that the American people have never entertained purpose of exploiting the Filipino people or their country. There have, indeed, been different opinions among our own people as to the precisely proper relationship with the Filipinos. There are some among us, as there are some among your people, who believe that immediate independence of the Philippines would be best for both. I should be less than candid with you, however, if I did not say that, in my judgment, the strongest argument that has been used in the United States in support of immediate independence of the Philippines is not the argument that it would benefit the Filipinos but that it would advantage the United States. Feeling as I do, and as I am convinced the great majority of Americans do regarding our obligations to the Filipino people, I have to say that I regard such arguments as unworthy. The American people will not evade or repudiate the responsibility they have assumed in this matter. The American Government is convinced that it has the overwhelming support of the American Nation in its conviction that present independence would be a misfortune and might easily become a disaster to the Filipino people. Upon that conviction the policy of this Government is based.

Thus far I have suggested only some of the reasons related to international concerns, which seem to me to urge strongly against independence at this time. I wish now to review for a moment some domestic concerns of the Philippine Islands, which seem also to argue against present independence. The American Government has been most liberal in opening to the Filipino people the opportunities of the largest practicable participation in and control of their own administration. It has been a matter of pride and satisfaction to us, as I am sure it must also have been to your people, that this attitude has met with so fine a response. In education, in cultural advancement, in political conceptions, and institutional development, the Filipino people have demonstrated a capacity which can not but justify high hopes for their future. But it would be idle and insincere to suggest that they have yet proved their possession of the completely developed political capacity which is necessary to a minor nation assuming the full responsibility of maintaining itself in the family of nations. I am frankly convinced that the very mission upon which you have addressed me is itself an evidence that something is yet lacking in development of political consciousness and capability.

One who examines the grounds on which are based the protests against the present situation is forced to conclude that there has not been, thus far, a full realization of the fundamental ideals of democratic-republican government. There have been evidences of a certain inability, or unwillingness, to recognize that this type of governmental organization rests upon the theory of complete separation of the legislative, executive, and judicial functions. There have been many evidences of disposition to extend the functions of the legislature, and thereby to curtail the proper authority of the executive. It has been charged that the present Governor General has in some matters exceeded his proper authority; but an examination of the facts seems rather to support the charge that the legislative branch of the insular government has been the real offender through seeking to extend its own authority into some areas of what should properly be the executive realm.

The Government of the United States has full confidence in the ability, good intentions, fairness, and sincerity of the present Governor General. It is convinced that he has intended to act and has acted within the scope of his proper and constitutional authority. Thus convinced, it is determined to sustain him; and its purpose will be to encourage the broadest and most intelligent cooperation of the Filipino people in this policy. Looking at the whole situation fairly and impartially, one can not but feel that if the Filipino people can not cooperate in the support and encouragement of as good an administration as has been afforded under Governor General Wood, their failure will be rather a testimony of unpreparedness for the full obligations of citizenship than an evidence of patriotic eagerness to advance their country. I am convinced that Governor General Wood has at no time been other than a hard-working, painstaking, and conscientious administrator. I have found no evidence that he had exceeded his proper authority, or that he has acted with any other than the purpose of best serving the real interest of the Filipino people. Thus believing, I feel that I am serving those same interests by saying frankly that it is not possible to consider the extension of a larger measure of autonomy to the Filipino people until they shall have demonstrated a readiness and capacity to cooperate fully and effectively with the American Government and authorities. For such cooperation I earnestly appeal to every friend of the islands and their people. I feel all confidence that, in the measure in which it shall be extended, the American Government will be disposed to grant in increasing degree the aspirations of your people. Nothing could more regretably affect the relations of the two peoples than that the Filipinos should commit themselves to a program calculated to inspire the fear that possibly the governmental concessions already made have been in any measure premature.

In conclusion let me say that I have given careful and somewhat extended consideration to the representations you have laid before me. I have sought counsel of a large number of men whom I believed able to give the best advice. Particularly I have had in mind always that the American Nation could not entertain the purpose of holding any other people in a position of vassalage. In accepting the obligations which came to them with the sovereignty of the Philippine Islands the American people had only the wish to serve, advance, and improve the condition of the Filipino people. That thought has been uppermost in every American determination concerning the islands. You may be sure that it will continue the dominating factor in the American consideration of the many problems which must inevitably grow out of such relationship as exists.

In any survey of the history of the islands in the last quarter century I think the conclusion inescapable that the Filipino people, not the people of the United States, have been the gainers. It is not possible to believe that the American people would wish otherwise to continue their responsibility in regard to the sovereignty and administration of the islands. It is not conceivable that they would desire, merely because they possessed the power, to continue exercising any measure of authority over a people who could better govern themselves on a basis of complete independence. If the time comes when it is apparent that independence would be better for the people of the Philippines from the point of view of both their domestic concerns and their status in the world, and if when that time comes the Filipino people desire complete independence, it is not possible to doubt that the American Government and people will gladly accord it.

Frankly, it is not felt that that time has come. It is felt that in the present state of world relationship the American Government owes an obligation to continue extending a protecting arm to the people of these islands. It is felt also that, quite aside from this consideration, there remain to be achieved by the Filipino people many greater advances on the road of education, culture, economic and political capacity before they should undertake the full responsibility for their administration. The American Government will assuredly cooperate in every way to encourage and inspire the full measure of progress which still seems a necessary preliminary to independence.

Yours very truly,

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

Hon. MANUEL ROXAS,
Chairman the Philippine Mission,
2033 Twentieth Street, Washington, D. C.

NATIONS OR TRIBES OF INDIANS IN MONTANA, IDAHO, AND WASHINGTON.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, on the 3d day of March the Senate passed the bill (S. 321) for the relief of certain nations or tribes of Indians in Montana, Idaho, and Washington. To-day there came to us from the House of Representatives House bill 3444, identical with the bill to which I have referred. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent is asked by the Senator from Montana to proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him. Is there objection?

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Montana what is the nature of the bill?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is a bill proposing to authorize certain nations or tribes of Indians to begin suit in the Court of Claims against the United States to establish claims which they assert they have against the Government.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3444) for the relief of certain nations or tribes of Indians in Montana, Idaho, and Washington, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims, with right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, to consider and determine all legal and equitable claims against the United States of the Blackfeet, Blood, Piegan, and Gros Ventre Nations or Tribes of Indians, residing upon the Blackfeet and Fort Belknap Indian Reservations, in the State of Montana; and the Flathead, Kootenais, and Upper Pend d'Oreilles Nations or Tribes of Indians, residing upon the Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana; and the Nez Perce Nation or Tribe of Indians, residing upon the Lapwai Indian Reservation, in the State of Idaho, and upon the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, for lands or hunting rights claimed to be existing in all said nations or tribes of Indians by virtue of the treaty of October 17, 1855 (11 Stat. L., p. 657, and the following), and in said Flathead, Kootenais, and Upper Pend d'Oreilles Nations or Tribes of Indians by virtue of the treaty of July 16, 1855 (12 Stat. L., p. 975, and the following), with said Indians, and all claims arising directly therefrom which lands and hunting rights are alleged to have been taken from the said Indians by the United States, and also any legal or equitable defenses, set-offs, or counterclaims, including gratuities, which the United States may have against the said nations or tribes, and to enter judgment thereon, all claims and defenses to be considered without regard to lapse of time; and the final judgment and satisfaction thereof shall be in full settlement of all said claims.

That suits under this act shall be begun by the filing of a petition within two years of the date of the approval of this act, to be verified by the attorney or attorneys selected by the claimant Indians, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, employed under contracts executed and approved in accordance with existing law. The claimant Indians shall be parties plaintiff and the United States shall be the party defendant, and such suits shall on motion of either party be advanced on the docket of the Court of Claims and of the Supreme Court of the United States. The compensation to be paid the attorneys for the claimant Indians shall be determined by the Court of Claims in accordance with terms of the said approved contracts and shall be paid out of any sum or sums found and adjudged to be due said Indians: But in no event shall said compensation exceed 10 per cent of the amount of the respective judgments, nor exceed $25,000 for the Indians residing on each respective reservation: Provided, however, That said compensation shall not exceed $25,000 for the Nez Perce Nation or Tribe of Indians residing upon both the Lapwai and Colville Indian Reservations, nor exceed 10 per cent of the amount of any judgments rendered in favor of said Nez Perce Nation or Tribe, said compensation to be exclusive of all actual and necessary expenses in prosecuting said suits. The balance of any such judgments shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians entitled thereto and draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FIVE-CENT STREET CAR FARES.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a few days ago an article appeared in the New York Times under the following headlines:

Five-cent trolleys to stay in Jersey. Company says higher traffic under lower fare is reducing deficit. Light rates will be cut. Request of State commission for lower gas and electricity is granted.

The article reads:

New Jersey will keep its present 5-cent trolley fare indefinitely and, if it wishes, can have gas and electric rates reduced an estimated 5 per cent.

Thomas N. McCarter, president of the Public Service Corporation, made this announcement at a conference with the State Public Utilities Commission at Newark yesterday. Formal decision by the latter was reserved pending presentation of detailed schedules. The commission had requested a reduction.

About 147 municipalities, from Camden to the northern boundary of the State, will be benefited by the retention of the 5-cent street car fare, which has been on trial since the settlement of the New Jersey trolley strike last September. The fare previously had been 8 cents.

President McCarter indicated that the Public Service Railway Co., operator of the trolley system, had not only found a 5-cent return profitable thus far, but that after a long run of deficits this revenue might even enable the corporation to "turn the corner."

I shall not read the remainder of the article, but I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The remainder of the article is as follows:

The trolleys have reached their lowest point in deficits in the belief of his corporation, Mr. McCarter told the State commissioners. He said that the expected increase in traffic justified belief that the company would "rapidly reduce the loss sustained in operation of its cars under the 5-cent rate." Repeating that this tariff would be continued for an indefinite period, he expressed hope that "continued cooperation of the people of New Jersey" would finally eliminate all loss in operation.

JITNEY OWNERS WORRIED.

The "expected increase in traffic" was taken by some of the jitney owners in the larger New Jersey travel centers last night as meaning further steps against them by the trolley corporation. These operators have already instituted a "recall" movement against Thomas L. Raymond, Newark director of streets and public improvements, alleging that he has discriminated against them in favor of the street railway company.

The jitney men also complained that they could no longer safely sell a jitney, for the trolley company, they asserted, was picking up vehicles on the more lucrative routes through agents. They renewed a standing charge that the company sought to gain a monopoly on busses on competing routes in order to put them out of business. This was denied by the company spokesmen.

The cut in gas and electric rates would bring a corresponding cut in gas receipts of $1,000,000, and in electric receipts of $1,500,000, Mr. McCarter told the State commission. He was unable as yet to announce what the exact rates would be. Such a reduction has been asked in a letter sent to the Public Service Corporation last week by Harry V. Osborne, chairman of the State board. The State urged that the cut was warranted by the good business done in 1923. Profit on electricity last year was 10 per cent, the board asserted, and on gas 12 per cent. The profit allowed by law is 8 per cent.

AFFECTS MOST THE POPULATION.

President McCarter and his associates concurred yesterday in the view held by the State officials, although holding that in accordance with present-day property values the existing rates of $1.25 a thousand feet for gas and 9 cents per kilowatt hour for electricity were justified. Nevertheless, they had decided to meet the requests, they said.

The Public Service Electric Co. serves 202 New Jersey municipalities, with a population of 2,500,000, and the Public Service Gas Co. pipes gas into homes in 168 municipalities having a population of 2,300,000. It was estimated that the companies served about five-sixths of the population of the entire State.

The Public Service Corporation was represented at the conference by President McCarter, Vice President Edmund W. Wakelee, Vice President Percy Young, and General Solicitor Harry S. Blake. Commissioners Osborne, Autenrieth, and Gnichtel represented the State.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to say in connection with the article that it is very pertinent in connection with the present hearings on the 5-cent street car fare bill for the city of Washington. In the New Jersey cases, where all the New Jersey companies returned to a 5-cent fare, after a trial of some six months, I am told the trolley companies believe that it will permit them to make more money, and they say from their experience that the return to the 5-cent fare for the past six months shows that they will make more money, as the article which I have read well illustrates.

I merely wish to say in addition in that connection that if a return from an 8-cent fare, which has been tried all over New Jersey, to a 5-cent fare will enable those companies that have had trouble in making ordinary expenses, without declaring a dividend, to make money, surely the people of Washington ought not to be inflicted with an 8-cent car fare, when the companies here are making money. It was testified just a day or two ago that in 1919, the year in which the car fares in this city were raised by the Public Utilities Commission from 5 cents to 8 cents, that one street railway corporation paid a 6 per cent dividend and made over $1,000,000 besides, which was credited to other accounts. It not only made a 6 per cent return upon capital, but made over $1,000,000 in excess; and yet the people of Washington are being inflicted by the street car companies here with an 8-cent fare.

AGRICULTURAL DIVERSIFICATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2250) to promote a permanent system of self-supporting agriculture in regions adversely affected by the stimulation of wheat production during the war, and aggravated by many years of small yields and high production costs of wheat.

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, I wish to renew my request for unanimous consent that the Senate vote on the pending bill, being Senate bill 2250, and all amendments on Friday, March 7, at 3 o'clock. I hope that such an unanimous-consent agreement may be entered into.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I had understood that we might have a vote on the bill to-morrow.

Mr. LADD. I am perfectly willing that to-morrow be fixed, but I was told that it would be impossible, and so I changed it to Friday. Of course, I should be glad to have the vote taken to-morrow.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think the Senate is anxious that some final action be taken regarding the bill. I make no objection to the request.

Mr. LADD. In conformity with the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas, I will change the day to Thursday at 3 o'clock.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator had better adhere to his first request and make it Friday. In that event there will be no objection so far as I am concerned.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not desire to object, but I hope the Senator will not fix the time for a vote on Friday because I am compelled to be absent for a time on that day and I wish to vote for the Senator's bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator that while I think I shall vote for his bill, I will not consent to any unanimous-consent agreement to fix a definite time for a vote on the bill and all amendments at a particular hour. I often have seen it happen under an agreement of that kind that when the time came to vote and there were a good many amendments pending, some of them of very great importance, we had to vote on them without any consideration. So I gave notice some time ago that I would not give my consent to any such agreement as that in the future. I did so on that ground. Now, if the Senator will ask that debate be closed on the bill at a certain time and that after that time debate on amendments shall be limited to 5 minutes or 10 minutes—I do not care which—and that no Senator shall speak more than once on an amendment and more than once on the bill, I shall make no objection.

Mr. LADD. I will accept that suggestion, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota for unanimous consent?

Mr. COUZENS. Let the request be read.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I suggest there be a general limitation, that debate on the bill shall close at a certain time, and that thereafter Senators shall be permitted to speak only upon amendments to be offered, not to exceed 10 minutes on any one amendment. I think such provision ought always be put in a unanimous-consent agreement to bring the discussion of a measure to a close. My observation in the Senate has been, and my experience as well, that if we limit debate to six hours, for instance, and then provide that a vote shall be taken without further debate a few Senators occupy all the time, and the Senators who wish to present their views in a short speech occupying 10 or 20 minutes never have an opportunity to express themselves on the measure at all; but the speeches that consume hours occupy all the time. I hope the agreement will be modified to that extent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the proposed agreement.

The reading clerk read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 3 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of March 7, 1924, the Senate will proceed to vote without further debate upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill (S. 2250) to promote a permanent system of self-supporting agriculture in regions adversely affected by the stimulation of wheat production during the war, and aggravated by many years of small yields and high production costs of wheat through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that after the hour of 3 o'clock p. m. on said calendar day no Senator shall speak more than once or more than 10 minutes upon the bill or more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is all right, Mr. President, except that the first part of the proposed agreement requires a vote at 3 o'clock.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest that the proposed agreement be modified so as to cover the bill and leave out reference to amendments. Then the proviso as to the limitation of debate will take care of the debate on the amendments.

Mr. KING. The proposed agreement should provide that all general debate shall cease at 3 o'clock on that day, and thereafter all debate shall be limited to debate upon amendments, and no Senator shall speak oftener than once or longer than 10 minutes upon any amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Inasmuch as debate is going to be allowed to proceed both upon the bill and upon amendments after 3 o'clock, I do not see any necessity of saying anything except that after 3 o'clock on Friday no speech either on the bill or any amendment shall be longer than 10 minutes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. And that no Senator shall speak more than once on any amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That will accomplish the purpose and bring a vote within an hour or two, I am quite certain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota accept the suggestion?

Mr. LADD. I accept the suggestion.

Mr. WILLIS. Let the agreement be read.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let me suggest that I do not think under the rule a roll call is required in a case of this kind, because this agreement does not fix a definite time to vote on the bill.

Mr. LODGE. No; it does not.

Mr. JONES of Washington. So a roll call is not necessary in order to enter into this agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the Senator from Washington is correct.

Mr. WILLIS. I shall not object, Mr. President; but, if it could be arranged, I should like to have it so planned that the limitation on debate leading to a vote could be fixed for some day other than Friday. Could it be on Thursday? Is there any objection to striking out "Friday" and inserting "Thursday"? I can not be here on Friday, and I should like to be present when a vote is taken on the bill.

Mr. KING. Some Senators can not be here on Thursday, and others can not be here on Saturday.

Mr. WILLIS. How about Monday? Everyone can be here on Monday.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator from North Dakota would like to have the bill disposed of before that time. I have no objection to any time that suits the Senator after and including Friday.

Mr. WILLIS. I am not going to object, but I wonder if the Senator from North Dakota will accept the suggestion for Monday instead of Friday?

Mr. LADD. So far as I am personally concerned, I have no objection to the vote being taken on Monday, if it will accommodate Senators better to devote the time between now and then to other subjects.

Mr. CURTIS. If we could go ahead with the appropriation bill in the meantime, that would be perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. LADD. I have no objection to laying this bill aside temporarily and having other matters taken up from time to time until Monday.

Mr. CURTIS. Let us make it Monday, then.

Mr. LADD. I will ask, then, that the day be changed to "Monday."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota agrees that "Friday" shall be stricken from the proposed unanimous-consent agreement, and that "Monday" shall be inserted in lieu thereof. Is there objection to the agreement as thus modified? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARRISON. Let the unanimous-consent agreement be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the unanimous-consent agreement.

The reading clerk read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that after 3 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Monday, March 10, general debate on the bill shall cease, and thereafter debate shall be limited to 10 minutes on the bill and each amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Ten minutes by each Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. Each Senator is limited to one speech.

Mr. LODGE. Each Senator shall speak once and not longer than 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from North Dakota now lays aside his bill temporarily.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has the unanimous-consent agreement been entered into?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has.

Mr. COUZENS. No; it has not.

Mr. WILLIS. Yes; the Chair announced that there was no objection to it.

Mr. SWANSON. I understand that it has not yet been reduced to writing.

Mr. CURTIS. Let it be read, so that we can agree to it.

The reading clerk read as follows:

It is agreed, by unanimous consent, that after 3 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Monday, March 10, general debate on the bill shall cease, being Senate bill 2250, and thereafter no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, that is not as I understood the request. I did not understand that debate was to cease at 3 o'clock, because, as the Senator from Washington said, that is perfectly inconsistent with the privilege of speaking 10 minutes more on the bill after 3 o'clock. I thought we had agreed to the proposition that it was sufficient if we said that beginning at 3 o'clock no Senator shall speak more than 10 minutes either on the bill or on any amendment pending or to be offered.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is all that is necessary, and that effectuates the purpose of the Senator in offering the agreement. There is no such thing as general debate in the Senate under the rules of the Senate, and there is nothing else under the practice of the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. Is the Chair waiting for the agreement to be read again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair ruled that unanimous consent was given, but there was some confusion about the terms of the agreement. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to call up House bill 6349, the appropriation bill for the Treasury and Post Office Departments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of H. R. 6349.

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, has the agreement been entered into by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, let the agreement be read from the desk.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. What is the situation of the bill of the Senator from North Dakota? It was before the Senate a minute ago.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asked unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6349, and, without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think that would displace the unfinished business. If it is temporarily laid aside, however, that is all right.

Mr. CURTIS. I understood that the Senator from North Dakota asked unanimous consent to lay aside the bill temporarily. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. Now, Mr. President, so that we may know just what was done, may we not have the unanimous-consent agreement read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unanimous-consent agreement will be read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that after the hour of 3 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Monday, March 10, 1924, no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon the bill (S. 2250) to promote a permanent system of self-supporting agriculture, etc., or upon any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to ask a question about the agreement, because the same point came up in connection with other unanimous-consent agreements. Under the agreement can a Senator talk 10 minutes upon an amendment and then 10 minutes upon the bill, or does it mean that a Senator has only 10 minutes upon the bill and all amendments that may be offered?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senate decided that the last time the question came up. The Chair ruled that a Senator had a right to speak 20 minutes—10 minutes on an amendment and 10 minutes on the bill—and the Senate overruled him.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; but let us change the language so as to cover what we want. That is what I wanted to be sure of.

The READING CLERK. Striking out the word "or" and inserting the word "and" would make it read "10 minutes upon the bill and 10 minutes upon any amendment offered to S. 2250."

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is all right. That makes it perfectly plain.

Mr. KING. Let it go that way.

The agreement as entered into is as follows:

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT.

It is agreed by unanimous consent that after the hour of 3 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Monday, March 10, 1924, no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon the bill (S. 2250) to promote a permanent system of self-supporting agriculture in regions adversely affected by the stimulation of wheat production during the war, and aggravated by many years of small yields and high production costs of wheat, and upon any amendment offered thereto.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6349) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the bill be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator desire to proceed with the bill this evening?

Mr. WARREN. I expect to lay it aside, because it is desired to have an executive session.

Mr. KING. And resume its consideration to-morrow?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming asks that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WARREN. I understand that an executive session is desired. I therefore ask to have the bill laid aside. I give notice that in the morning I shall ask the Senate to take it up immediately after the close of the routine morning business.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 6, 1924, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 5, 1924.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

In our minds and hearts, O Lord, be Thou exalted above the heavens and the earth. Continue to speak to us in wisdom, truth, and holiness. Thou alone art able to satisfy the longing soul and lead the step aright. Teach us the way of Thy statutes and give us understanding that we may keep Thy law. Holy, holy, holy is Thy name. Let Thy light go out through all the world and Thy words to the ends of the earth. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE CHARGE OF THE LIGHT BEER BRIGADE.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it was a very interesting occurrence yesterday when 58 bills to bring back beer and wine were introduced by 58 gentlemen of the House. There were the "57 varieties" in addition to my friend the gentleman from Maryland, Hon. JOHN PHILIP HILL. There were 57 generals and my friend HILL as generalissimo.

I simply want to suggest certain facts to be faced by this highly generaled beer bloc. They ought to face the facts as to what Charles Edward Russell has said of conditions in England under the widespread use of beer; what A. B. MacDonald, special writer of the Ladies' Home Journal, has said about the use of beer and wine in Quebec; and what the attitude of labor is as demonstrated in the referendum on beer and wine in Michigan several years ago when, after a year of state-wide prohibition, only two cities in the whole State gave any majority for beer and wine.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman support a referendum to the people of the United States on the question of beer and wine?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will not support a referendum to declare unconstitutional a part of the Constitution.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman is begging the question.

Mr. CRAMTON. I want to call attention to the further fact that out of the 435 Members of the House, with the appeal that was made, there were only 58 who have been willing to sponsor this proposition.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Unless I can get more time I can not yield. I will ask, Mr. Speaker, unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and then I will yield to questions.

[By unanimous consent, Mr. CRAMTON was given consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. BARKLEY. The gentleman understands the reason this bill was introduced by 58 Members, does he not? The newspapers no longer take note of the activities of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL], and it took 58 to get 2 inches of space in the papers.

LOW EBB OF THE "BUNGSTARTING" PROGRAM.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the organization and public announcement of this beer bloc of 58 gives proof to the country of the low ebb of the "bungstarting" program in Congress. Though by introducing 58 separate but identical bills in concert, the cost to the Government in printing, and so forth, is increased fifty-eight fold, it will be worth while if the country will realize the true significance of the incident—that after several years of propaganda, heartily promoted by most of the metropolitan press, after organizing 40 or more "beer and wine" associations ranging from Harley to Stayton, after active campaigning for months before the last congressional election, after noisily proclaiming for a year after the election what a great "wet" victory had been won, after getting a fearless 40 faithful together to appeal to all and sundry "bungstarters" to come up and sign on the dotted line, legislation made easy—after all this only 58 have "gone over the top," such a meager handful as to make it plain that not one of the 58 identical 2.75 per cent beer bills will ever be heard of again. The fearless, faithful 58 have introduced their bills and made their 58 separate and identical records in concert, and said records, as to this subject, end there separately but identically. Any Member can introduce any kind of a bill, but it takes votes to pass them.

The beer bloc are long on introductions, have broken the record for waste of printer's ink, but are demonstrated to be woefully short on votes. Reading over the record of bills introduced, H. R. 7563, H. R. 7564, H. R. 7565, and so forth, down to H. R. 7620, from BRITTEN to MOONEY, one might think it was the Hell Raisers Brigade, but not so. It is rather the "Here Rest" roll call. In deference to my friend BRITTEN, of the Navy, and my friend HILL, of the Army, we might term the dash of the futilely fearless, faithful, frenzied 58 "the charge of the Light-Beer Brigade."

THE ANXIOUS APPEAL.

Note the anxious appeal sent out by the fearless forty, sent to all the 435 Members of the House:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., February 28, 1924.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: On Tuesday, March 4, the undersigned individually, but at the same time, propose to introduce the following bill:

"That Title II, section 1 of the national prohibition act is hereby amended by the addition after the words 'beverage purposes,' on line 8 of said section, of the following:

"'Provided, That from and after the passage of this act any beverage obtained by the alcoholic fermentation of an infusion or decoction of barley malt, cereals, and hops in drinkable water, or by the natural fermentation of apple or other fruit, vegetable, or herb juices containing not more than 2.75 per cent of alcohol by volume may be manufactured, sold, or transported for sale in original packages for consumption in homes and places other than the place of sale.'"

This bill proposes to modify the Volstead Act by the substitution of a percentage which has been declared legal by Mr. Volstead himself. If you desire to join us in this movement, please sign and return the inclosed bill to Room 532, House Office Building, in order that we may introduce it with ours on March 4.

Very truly yours,

BRITTEN, of Illinois; BROWNE, of New Jersey; BERGER, of Wisconsin; BRUMM, of Pennsylvania; CELLER, of New York; CLANCY, of Michigan; CONNERY, of Massachusetts; CONNOLLY, of Pennsylvania; CORNING, of New York; DOYLE, of Illinois; DYER, of Missouri; EDMONDS, of Pennsylvania; HILL, of Maryland; KAHN, of California; KINDRED, of New York; KUNZ, of Illinois; LAGUARDIA, of New York; LAMPERT, of Wisconsin; LEHLBACH, of New Jersey; LINTHICUM, of Maryland; MACGREGOR, of New York; MCNULTY, of New Jersey; MEAD, of New York; MINAHAN, of New Jersey; MORIN, of Pennsylvania; NEWTON, of Missouri; O'BRIEN, of New Jersey; O'CONNOR, of Louisiana; O'SULLIVAN, of Connecticut; PERLMAN, of New York; RANSLEY, of Pennsylvania; ROSENBLOOM, of West Virginia; SABATH, of Illinois; SCHAFER, of Wisconsin; SHERWOOD, of Ohio; STEPHENS, of Ohio; TAGUE, of Massachusetts; TYDINGS, of Maryland; VOIGT, of Wisconsin; WOLFF, of Missouri.

The italics are mine.

Eighteen recruits responded, nearly half a recruit for each of the fearless 40.

Less than 15 per cent of the membership of the House in all enrolled in the light-beer brigade, far short of the 51 per cent required to pass a bill. And "the most unkindest cut of all" was when the Chicago Tribune of yesterday, exuding sympathy in every line of an editorial lauding their program as one to "make a happy land," referred to our distinguished colleagues, the fearless 58, as the "congressional bungstarters."

THE WIDESPREAD (?) DEMAND FOR BEER.

Seriously, this tangible showdown is of importance. Realizing there are not enough votes in Congress to get the light wine and beer question before this Congress, not even the necessary number to petition under the new rule for discharge of the Judiciary Committee, this concerted introduction stunt was the only way of getting a real count of noses. It has been done, on a bill for 2.75 beer, with no provision in it for light wines; and there they are—58; count them.

A press dispatch from Washington dated March 3, probably by Associated Press, published in the Detroit Free Press, credits the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL] with being the organizer of the bloc. It says: "No claims are being made of victory in the present Congress" but the bloc "expects to get a 2.75 per cent beer law through the next Congress." The press notice says:

> Only Congressmen from districts where sentiment is distinctly wet dare to put themselves on record.

Just so, and there are now proven to be only 58 districts out of 435 that are "distinctly wet." And as to the "next Congress," remember what the Washington Evening Star said last October:

> There is plenty of talk of what will be done, but when the wet politicians are called upon to toe the line they get cold feet.

Not only is the number only a small fraction of the House but the representation comes from only a few States and almost entirely from large cities, principally from New York City.

Realizing that we have here presented the real beer and wine support in the House, a little study of it is interesting.

The proposition in the 58 identical bills is for 2.75 per cent beer or "apple or other fruit, vegetable, or herb juices" to be manufactured, sold, or transported for sale in original packages for consumption in homes and places other than the place of sale.

Per cent of entire population of United States, 1920, foreign born, 13.2.

CITIES THAT ARE FOREIGN IN BIRTH, LANGUAGE, AND IDEALS.

Of course, New York City leads in this great movement for a happy land through 2.75 per cent beer; New York City, with 35.4 per cent of its population born in some other land, coming here because of better opportunities for happiness, enjoying prosperity and privileges undreamed of across the seas, but too often determined to break down our American standards by insistence upon their Old World customs. And of that foreign-born population 479,800 came from Russia—more than from any other land. It is but idle to say that if satisfaction of their thirst for alcohol is their prime requisite for a happy land, Russia still has its vodka. In the country as a whole, according to the 1920 census, of the 1,400,489 persons of Russian birth only 40.2 per cent were naturalized—had taken upon themselves any obligation to support this country or its Constitution in war or in peace. In New York State only 43 per cent of the total foreign-born population had in 1920 become naturalized, but many are in the silk-shirt class and able to make as much noise as anybody for "light beer and wine" and their "personal liberties." In New York City the percentage of naturalized citizens among the foreign born was only 39.9 in 1920. In Chicago it was 52.7; Philadelphia, 47.5; Detroit, 36.1; Cleveland, 42.4; St. Louis, 56.6; Boston, 44.1.

The total foreign white stock in New York City, including foreign-born whites, native whites of foreign parentage, and native whites having one foreign-born parent, in 1920 was 4,294,629, or over three-fourths of the total population of the city. While "English and Celtic" was the mother tongue of only 20.9 per cent of its population, "Yiddish and Hebrew" led all with 22 per cent, and nearly one-fifth of the city was of Russian stock.

I have no attack to make upon the foreign born who has since coming to this country shown his appreciation of the opportunities here afforded him by taking up the responsibilities of citizenship and yielding respect and obedience to our laws. But I do not want them to run the country and nullify the Constitution before they can speak our language or will promise support to our laws and institutions. If we did not have this great foreign-born and still alien population in our largest cities, disrespect for our laws would not be the problem it now is.

THE RADICAL WING OF THE WET BLOC.

I should not overlook the fact that 2.75 beer has not enough "kick" for all of the 58, and so they dropped in their bills for beer—with their left hands 22 dropped in bills for 4 per cent beer and 10 per cent wine, and in this were joined by 2 others. This radical wing of the wet bloc calls for 4 per cent beer and 10 per cent wine or cider—which such liquids are manufactured, possessed, offered for sale, sold, purchased, or transported solely within the territorial limits of any State which shall first by appropriate legislative action authorize such manufacture, possession, sale, purchase, and transportation of such liquids and shall fix the alcoholic content thereof within the above limitations, it being the intent and purpose of this act that each State may by appropriate legislation authorize the manufacture, possession, sale, purchase, and transportation solely within the limits of its own territory of the above-mentioned liquids, containing alcohol not exceeding by volume the above limitations of percentages and under such and further limitations, restrictions, and regulations as to places of sale and consumption, licenses, permits, bonds, penalties, and nature and marking of containers as such State shall enact."

The radical or 10 per cent wing analyzes as follows:

Connecticut (out of five Representatives): O'SULLIVAN—1.

Massachusetts (out of 16 Representatives): CONNERY, GALLIVAN, and TAGUE—3.

New Jersey (out of 12 Representatives): MINAHAN and O'BRIEN—2.

New York (out of 43 Representatives): BLACK, BLOOM, BOYLAN, CAREW, CELLER, CLEARY, CORNING, CULLEN (not on the 2.75 per cent list), DICKSTEIN, GRIFFIN, LINDSAY, MEAD, O'CONNELL, O'CONNOR, OLIVER (not on the 2.75 per cent list), PRALL, QUAYLE, SULLIVAN—18.

Total, 24.

Total number of States represented, 4.

Total number of States not represented, 44.

Largest percentage of delegation, 44 per cent.

From cities of 300,000 population or over, 19; or 79 per cent of the wine and cider bloc.

It is to be noted especially that the program of the 10 per centers includes authority for a State to bring back the saloon in any form desired.

The mere detail that both the 2.75 and the 10 per cent programs are unconstitutional should not prevent introducing bills to cheer the thirsty, bills truly that are guaranteed to "cheer but not inebriate."

THE ENTERING WEDGE.

In a copyrighted article by former Vice President Marshall, he pays his respects to nullification doctrines and programs:

I was not for the prohibition amendment when it was pending, for reasons that have nothing to do with the case now that it is a part of the Constitution, but I am for the amendment now, for the laws enacted under it, and for strict observance and strict enforcement of prohibition.

* * * * * * *

It annoys me to hear it suggested that we ought to loosen up the Volstead Act so as to permit the use of beers and light wines when the loosenors are habitual users of Scotch whisky and never tasted either beer or light wine in their lives. Their kick against prohibition is to get a kick in their stomachs. Undoubtedly they are seeking an entering wedge.

Really, I do not understand some of the arguments that are being advanced. I am told, for instance, that there is more drinking now than there ever was before prohibition. This I strongly doubt. If it is so, the sale of cloves, spices, and other breath sweeteners must have kept pace with the sale of liquor.

* * * * * * *

I move from one part of the country to another, making what I hope is an honest living. I used to see hundreds of men partly or wholly intoxicated. The odor of the smoking room in the Pullman cars reeked with liquor. Drunken brawls everywhere I went were not unusual.

All this has changed, according to my observation. In 50,000 miles traveled the last three years I have seen but one man that I believed was intoxicated. I have seen no fight; I have rarely detected the odor of intoxicating liquor.

Some few persons may be drinking more than they did before the amendment, but most people are drinking less. My view is that most persons are not drinking at all.

I am told in other quarters that there should be a loosening up of the law because everyone is getting all to drink that they want, anyway. This argument is unique, but it does not appeal to me—in fact, it runs counter to my own experiences in life.

Whenever I can get all I want of what I want I do not waste my time in trying to find out whether the other fellow desires what I desire and in engaging in a crusade to provide him with it if he does.

The law of my life has been to let the fellow who does not have and can not get what he wants make known the fact that he desires it and is unable to secure it, and to make his own fight to obtain it.

BEER, WINE, AND BOOTLEGGING.

Winking one eye, your beer and wine proponent is apt to justify his program as one to eliminate bootlegging and use of strong liquors. But they know, and we know, that in real purpose it is the entering wedge, the wooden horse, admission of which endangers the whole citadel of prohibition and would be ineffective so far as illicit sale of distilled liquors is concerned. In fact, in a moment of frankness, Dr. John H. Slevin, president of the Michigan division of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, said in an article on "The light wine and beer program," in the Detroit Saturday Night of September 22, 1923, speaking of this proposed beer and wine law:

There is one thing the law can not stop. That is the manufacture and consumption of "moonshine hootch" and "white mule." The appetite for these beverages has been created.

This beer program in the United States is copied directly from Canada. When prohibition was seemingly inevitable in Quebec, in 1918, the brewers brought such pressure upon the government that a prohibitory law announced to become effective the following spring was withdrawn. The following referendum was submitted to the people: "Is it your opinion that the sale of light beer, cider, and wines, as defined by law, should be allowed?" The beer was to contain not more than 2.51 per cent of alcohol and the wine 6.94 per cent by weight.

The same arguments now used in the United States were put forth by the brewery publicity agencies and the measure carried. Beer with the 2.51 limit was too light, however. The people would not drink it. The alcoholic content was increased until there is no limit. The greater part of the beer contains from 6 to 8 per cent and much of it from 10 to 12 per cent alcohol. With this higher alcoholic content, the consumption was multiplied four-fold in the first year following this increase. Brewery stock which sold at $15 a share when the 2.51 beer was being made jumped to $185 under the profitable impulse of the higher alcoholic content. Drink cost the province of Quebec $28,000,000 in 1922.

British Columbia, with a government-control system adapted from the Quebec plan, has been forced to keep its liquor shops open during hours when they would otherwise have been closed because of the competition of bootleggers. Sale of wine, beer, and stronger liquors do not materially decrease illicit competition.

In its second annual report, the liquor control board of the province of British Columbia, says on page B7:

> In the stores conducted by three or more employees arrangements were made for keeping such stores open throughout the week, it being felt that service to this extent was necessary to offset the activities of the bootlegger.

And again, in the same report, "'the bootlegger'—now a recognized 'international pest' on the American Continent—has proved his ability to provide increasing embarrassment to all classes of officials directly or indirectly concerned with the administration of liquor laws. Whether it occurs in a 'wet' or 'dry' territory, the illicit sale of liquor is a continuous source of trouble."

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC WILL OBEY NO LAW.

The evil effect of even so slight a wedge as permitted operation of breweries and distilleries for export only is working havoc in law enforcement in Ontario. Note the following, from the Christian Science Monitor:

> TORONTO, ONTARIO, February 25 (special correspondence).—That the police of Toronto have a hopeless task in enforcing the Ontario temperance act as long as the distilleries and breweries are allowed to make and ship liquor through the Province, is emphasized by the chief of police in his annual report for 1923. From the report the figures show that the police are rigidly enforcing the Ontario temperance act. There were 904 prosecutions as against 712 in 1922.
> "The act is being energetically enforced," states the chief, "but it would seem that the police have a hopeless task as long as distilleries and breweries are making and sending out large quantities of liquor, presumably for export, but which often never get beyond the boundary of the Province. I offer the suggestion that if the immigration act could be so amended that aliens could be deported for breach of the statute this would to a large extent reduce breaches of the Ontario temperance act, as most of the illicit liquor business is being conducted by foreigners."

CHARLES EDWARD RUSSELL ON BEER IN ENGLAND.

Now, speaking about beer making a land happy, we might well hear from Charles Edward Russell on that issue. A world-famous journalist, evidently not an advocate of prohibition, he startled many by his article "Is the world going dry?" in the January Century Magazine. Of England, the land of beer and ale, he says in part:

> But the wisdom of one generation is the blithesome jest of the next. Ten years ago wisdom was equally sure of the United States and on grounds as good. These confident deductions that Europe is all walled and moated against prohibition may be all wrong; ominously, European faith in them has been waning of late. Slowly, thoughtful men abroad are coming to see that forces are at work stronger than brewery trusts, stronger even than the ancient habits of races. As such men reflect upon certain manifest conditions now developing in this world the advertised failure of prohibition in America begins to lose its point. In the way alone important to economic Europe prohibition has not failed in America but has eminently succeeded. The only test of prohibition that counts is economic, and Europe is getting ready to own, in ways to cause some astonishment, that under such proving American prohibition stands up well.

> The bitter crisis that came upon Great Britain and menaced her life when the World War was 6 months old was born chiefly of her lack of all things with which nations fight on land. Continental countries had ample stores of munitions and ample machinery to make more. Great Britain had neither. In the appalling emergency that followed, while commanders on the front begged and implored for shells, and there were no shells, the labor of every man that produced anything, and every minute of that labor, became of vital importance.
> Not only of the men that produced shells or rifles, but of every man that produced food, clothes, shoes, coal, or what else; if he were not making shells he might be making food to feed the shell makers. Efficiency in production suddenly loomed upon statesmen as the substance of the whole situation. Upon it hung the nation's life. Newspapers and Parliament discussed the conditions that blocked the way to this efficiency, the time of miners between pit mouth and vein, for instance, the regulations of unions, the need of machinery, but above everything else and at all times stood out the national drink habit as chief enemy to topmost output. Whether statesmanship believed or disbelieved in prohibition as a principle mattered nothing; there were the facts with which the Government had to deal. Workingmen whose brains were dulled with beer were inefficient producers. At a time when every second was precious to the national welfare beer was causing the loss of time that mounted into the equivalent of months. It was largely because of beer that commanders were clamoring in vain for shells, and the western front was often silent for their lack.
> Records kept at munition and other factories showed that week after week normal production was never attained before Wednesday. Everywhere the figures for Monday and Tuesday were below the mark; often 22 per cent or even more on Monday, 10 per cent on Tuesday. The reason was that on Monday many workers came to their work still unsettled from their exploits of Saturday night and Sunday with the clinking cannikin; came unsettled, or did not come at all, for the absences on that day were pestilential. Even by Tuesday many had not rebounded to their natural tension. It would be monstrous, of course, to affirm or to suggest that drunkenness was the rule or even common among British workers; but drink was common, and it was drink that worked this havoc.
> The noon hour, with its pot of beer and bit of cheese, time out of mind the poor worker's luncheon, was another disaster. Everywhere the first two hours after luncheon were hours of slackened production at a time when moments were like diamonds and there were no shells for the western front. "Drink in England is Germany's most powerful ally," said the prohibitionists, and there was no gainsaying their indictment. Experiment showed that where men could be induced to pass up the beer at noon there was no complaint about slackened production for the rest of that day.
> In this crisis the skill that steered the affairs of the nation was great. Any attempt to abolish beer would be full of peril. In 1915 the working population as a whole had no great zest for the war, anyway; the loss of its beer it would have regarded as an intolerable addition to the troubles it was already bearing. Thus the Government would be raising one of those domestic issues it most wished to avoid. Without tempting this besom of destruction it met the requirements of the case not by taking beer away from workingmen but taking alcohol away from beer.
> Under all these innovations drunkenness almost disappeared from the nation, as may be seen from this table covering six years in England and Wales:

Convictions for drunkenness.

Year.	Male.	Female.
1913	153,112	35,765
1914	145,517	37,311
1915	102,600	33,211
1916	62,946	21,245
1917	34,103	12,307
1918	21,853	7,222

Deaths from alcoholism.

Year.	Male.	Female.
1913	1,112	719
1914	1,135	680
1915	867	584
1916	629	333
1917	358	222
1918	222	74

In all the United Kingdom the total proceedings for drunkenness were 374,749 in 1913 and only 71,306 in 1918.

Something, though not much, is to be allowed from these figures because in 1918 a million men or more were out of the country. We are to note, also, that in 1919, with the extending of the hours of sale and with the Bacchic joys of post-war reunions, the convictions for drunkenness rose to 46,765 for men and 11,183 for women. Yet remains the pregnant fact that for the population at home 1918 was the year of greatest sobriety the country had ever known, and the foregoing recital shows why it was sober.

It was also the year of the greatest production efficiency. Production kept even pace with sobriety.

The lesson of this demonstration was not lost. In the present stage of our industrial civilization no such lesson could possibly be lost. Production means too much to the world, and what affects production is too profoundly important. The truth is a force has come upon human society more potent than guns, armies, governments, press, or public opinion. It is this indeterminate and almost incalculable power of production needs. Certain basic products mankind must have; as population increases and distribution becomes more complicated, so the more imperative become these demands; and on the supplying of them rests, not without peril, the whole business superstructure.

THE SNEER AT AMERICA'S REMEDY FADES.

"The land of the free—where a man can't get a drink." was at first a favorite sneer of the complacent Briton as he read of America's draconic remedy for the inefficiency bred by drink. It is a sneer that in these days is fading from British lips. Efficiency is promoted by the taking away of part of the alcohol. Does not that indicate surely the taking away of the rest? And to that question no one has been able so far to frame a really apt negative.

* * * * * * *

On December 1, 1917, eight months after we entered the war, President Wilson gave the last-needed touch to the argument by suspending by proclamation the brewing of beer and establishing about coal mines and munition plants a state of absolute prohibition of all liquor.

When war-time prohibition succeeded, it merely confirmed all this. Every condition of industrial production notably improved wherever the saloon was abolished. Without expense the yield of mine or factory was enlarged. Employers had the equivalent of an increased force of workers without an increase in the pay roll. For years augmented production efficiency had been much in the thought of every wise manufacturer. How many "speeding-up" systems, how many well-devised plans of premiums and rewards had been proposed, how many strikes they had caused or threatened, memory flags to recall. Now, all these ends were achieved by the simple and inexpensive means of throwing out the beer can. Under such conditions the beer can was out to stay out.

The theory of prohibition may be good or bad; it is to the physical fact of prohibition that we chiefly owe the strangely placid economic waters in which we now navigate. At a time of profound agricultural depression all other industry should suffer. Other industry does not suffer now, but does more than usually well because increased production efficiency enables production to stand the strain of raised wage levels.

Foreigners are beginning to note these facts, even if we ignore them. After two years of American prohibition Mr. G. C. Vyle, a British business man and antiprohibitionist, came to this country to observe the workings of the new reform. On his return he was quoted as declaring in a speech at Birmingham that 7 American workingmen with the same plant, same materials, same facilities; would produce more than 10 British workingmen.

Mr. C. A. McCurdy, member of the British Parliament from Northampton, was lately quoted as saying to the business men of Leeds, England, that the American worker was producing, man for man, three times as much as the British worker, and he gave figures from the shoe industry to enforce his statement. He added that while in Great Britain the average output of coal had declined from 312 tons a year for each miner to 259 tons, the average output in the United States had increased from 400 tons for each miner to 681 tons.

* * * * * * *

But the next link in the progression is still more interesting, still more suggestive. In our industrial civilization the international struggle for markets grows every day more intense. Production efficiency is production economy. By exactly how much American prohibition has increased American productive efficiency is still to be put into figures, but we know enough about it to know that it is an increase of momentous importance in the world-wide market arena. Even those that have estimated the gain at 30 per cent may not be extravagant. One thing that is clear is that it has put America into a position she never before occupied in these contests.

* * * * * * *

That being the case, we should note next the advance prohibition sentiment seems to be making in Europe. When the British Parliament is in session hardly a day passes without discussion or mention of the subject, and from hour to hour across the debates grows the shadow of an obvious uneasiness. Like a graveyard whistle sounds now the once confident assurance that Britons never, never will suffer life without beer, while 207 societies in England alone are working for prohibition. * * *

It is also notable that Lloyd George, so recently a visitor here, said in a speech yesterday in an English city, "America got more out of the war than any other nation—it got prohibition."

And recently the Lancet, a leading British medical journal, in a review of The Action of Alcohol on Man, a book promoted by liquor interests, says: "Nowhere in the book is there any attempt to balance the cheerfulness and sociability engendered by the week's beer against the desirability of, say, the repair of a child's boot."

QUEBEC—A LAND MADE HAPPY BY BEER AND WINE.

And something about the blessings being experienced in Quebec under beer and wine is worth while. In November, A. B. MacDonald, special writer for the Ladies' Home Journal, wrote a terrific indictment of conditions as he found them in that supposedly idyllic Province. Robert Lipsett, city editor of the Montreal Star, had the temerity to challenge MacDonald's statements, and has brought out a supplementary statement from MacDonald, published in the Detroit Saturday Night of March 1, 1924. It is to be presumed Lipsett has had enough and his lips will be truly set hereafter, and his brewery pen as well. MacDonald says in part:

In fact, I made two visits to Quebec and spent five weeks there in all, two weeks of which was spent in the city of Montreal. I was in hundreds of the saloons and night clubs and bootlegging clubs of Montreal, in the slums, and in the best districts of the city, for those night clubs are everywhere, some of them undisguised dives, and some silken-lined dens in the heart of the city. I was in nearly every town in Quebec that has a government liquor store and I was in towns and rural districts where the people had fought to keep them out.

Mr. Lipsett says he does not believe my statement that "I saw hundreds of women drinking; many of them were mere girls, and fully one-third of them were drunk."

Well, if Mr. Lipsett won't believe me, maybe he will believe one of the editors associated with him on the Montreal Star, Mr. R. L. Werry, who wrote a book last year—The Liquor Traffic in the Province of Quebec. On page 27 of that book Mr. Werry, writing about the shady restaurants in Montreal, where groups of young boys and girls gather to drink and carouse, says:

> "Five times in the last 10 days one restaurant had been raided. Each time the raiding squad found from eight to a dozen youths and girls of ages ranging from 14 to 19, piled into a private room designed for four people, and in this restaurant there are seven of such rooms. A list of 27 cafés of this character was sent recently to the Government in Quebec."

* * * * * * *

I have a letter from R. L. Werry, one of the editors of the Montreal Star, in which he says:

> "I wish to stress, above all, the correctness and good judgment in which you presented the facts to your readers in your article 'Whirlpools of beer,' notwithstanding the statements of interested parties to the contrary. The people of this city and Province are under a great obligation to you for the service you have rendered the home, the child, and the cause of morality. Everywhere in Quebec your article is quoted as authority in meetings and in private conversations; and I know, from my own personal observations, that your article about the workings of Government control of liquor here is true in every particular."

I have another letter from John Gardiner, associate editor of the Montreal Standard, stating that my article was true and that it underestimated the evil rather than overestimated it.

The Montreal Witness reprinted my article in full and made editorial comment upon it in several different issues, always commending it for its truthfulness.

I have a letter from the Rev. E. I. Hart, D. D., who conducts an editorial page in the Montreal Witness, in which he says that everything I wrote about the liquor evil in Quebec was true and that he has seen everything I described, the drunken men and all the other evils.

* * * * * * *

Since I wrote my article Cardinal Begin, head of the Roman Catholic Church in the Province of Quebec, has issued a letter to the faithful of the Province warning them of the growing evil of drink and admonishing them to sobriety. What has Mr. Lipsett to say to that?

A commission of Scottish churchmen toured Canada and the United States last summer investigating the workings of prohibition and the liquor-control system in parts of Canada. Its report about Quebec, made since I wrote my article, says:

> "The commission was deeply impressed with the results of the liquor-control system as reflected in the unsatisfactory social conditions of Montreal. The commission saw little difference between conditions there and conditions prevailing in cities where the open bar is in existence. The 'taverns' in Montreal are chiefly crowded into the poorer districts and business sections of the city, where intoxicated men are to be seen in the streets. Montreal, it may be stated, is the only city on the North American Continent where legalized vice is permitted."

Just recently R. L. Calder, K. C., crown prosecutor, of Montreal, speaking before the Canadian Club in that city, said that the loot from crime and criminal actions in Montreal, the profits of bootleggers, political graft, and all the by-products of crime were a heavy tax on honest industry, heavier in Montreal than in any other city in America. Mr. Calder compared the safety and certainty of punishment in England with the lack of both in Montreal, and remarked that he would be safer in the neighborhood of the docks in London at midnight than he would be at noon in some of the downtown sections of Montreal.

I clipped that item from the Montreal Star of February 4. Does Mr. Lipsett say that their own honored crown prosecutor has slandered Montreal?

The facts are that in Montreal there are 300 beer saloons licensed to sell strong ale at 5 cents a glass, and that it is a very intoxicating beverage. In addition there are 500 grocery stores that sell this strong ale by the bottle to families, as potatoes and bread are sold. Then there are a great many cafés where this strong beer is sold with meals, and I have it on good authority that there are 200 unlicensed bootlegging joints, that stay open all night, besides a dozen or more Government stores, where hard liquor is sold by the bottle, and two of those liquor stores are "women's stores," where the women of Montreal can go and buy their booze without being stared at by men.

Now, I submit these facts to any fair-minded person, and say that where there are so many drinking places there must be much drinking. It costs money to run a beer saloon. There is the license and the rent and the wages to pay; the competition is keen, and they have got to sell a whale of a lot of beer to make both ends meet; and I contend that where there is so much drinking there must of a surety be a lot of drunkenness and poverty and misery and want and neglect of children and cruelty to women and hardships of all kinds that always follow the open saloon.

Whether a man had been there and seen it or not, he knows from the very fact that there are so many drinking places that there must be all the evils of drunkenness in its train. That is self-evident.

But I have been there and seen it.

A BEER-SOAKED GOVERNMENT WITH BEER SUPREME.

There is one place in the very heart of Montreal, a very large hall, up one flight of stairs, all hung with silken curtains and oriental lanterns and Japanese parasols, where the lights burn low, and there are far corners deep in shadows, with tables where men and women sit and drink, and in the center a dance floor that is flooded with lights from above, and there women who are almost naked twist and wriggle in sensuous dances. I was there two nights until long after midnight, and I saw many women drunk. I saw two women so drunk that they leaned over the tables and vomited on the floor. I saw a girl so drunk there that she collapsed on the dance floor and was carried off.

John Gardiner, Mr. Lipsett's fellow editor, told me it was this place he had in mind when he wrote in the Montreal Standard April 7 last:

> "Daughters of prominent men, led away by the attractive glare of the bright lights, flutter into the web; sweet young girls, the pink flush of childhood still on their cheeks, are bought and paid for by pusillanimous male beasts. While Montreal slumbers the all-night clubs and dance halls trade in souls."

I have seen the night life in the cabarets of New York City, but I never saw anything anywhere that, as a deliberately contrived and set trap for the enticement and ruin of girlhood, equals this oriental hootchie-cootchie joint in the heart of Montreal.

I have seen Cripple Creek and Deadwood and other gold camps of the West in their wildest days. I have seen the vice and drunkenness of the new oil camps of Oklahoma and Texas in their wildest days. I knew the New York Bowery when there was a saloon in almost every building for blocks. I have seen drunkenness and vice and squalor and degeneracy, but I never saw anything that was as bad as the legalized red-light district of Montreal, with its 3,000 lost women, nine-tenths of whom filtered down to that abyss from the drinking places, the all-night clubs of Montreal.

I was told by a woman newspaper reporter of Montreal that she had seen in the night clubs of Montreal fully 1,000 women drunk, altogether. Mr. Lipsett says of that:

> "The person is not alive who has seen 1,000 women drunk in Montreal."

In one night I saw 100 women drunk in Montreal, and I will venture to say that there is never a night when there are not 1,000 women drunk in that red-light district of Montreal that covers whole miles of territory. I believe there are hundreds of persons living who have seen 1,000 women drunk in Montreal.

* * * * * * * *

The Star conducted a symposium for weeks afterwards, in which it quoted practically all the leading men and women of Montreal in their demands that the city must be cleansed and the red-light district must go.

But it has not gone. The reason is that the abandoned men and women of that district drink so much beer. They are the source of a great revenue to the brewers of Montreal, and the brewers control the government of Montreal and of the Province of Quebec.

It is a beer-soaked government, and in Montreal beer is more powerful than even the Montreal Star.

Happiness for our land does not lie in that direction.

PROHIBITION IS MAKING THIS A HAPPY LAND.

One of the greatest local charitable organizations in America is McGregor Institute, in Detroit. Its last annual report, for 1923, says in a review of "some results of prohibition":

When the open saloon was a part of the life of Detroit, over 90 per cent of the homeless men who sought shelter at McGregor Institute and other charitable agencies were victims of its influence.

Since the Michigan State prohibition law went into force, May 1, 1918, a gradual change has been effected in the personal appearance and habits of these men, but because it has been gradual, rather than sudden, the extent of the revolution has not been fully realized. To aid in understanding what has taken place a comparison is here given of the work at McGregor Institute for the five years before prohibition, 1913 to 1917, inclusive, and of the five years since 1919 to 1923, inclusive.

The number of different men averaged 20,923 per year for the 5-year period before prohibition, and 12,733 for the five years following prohibition. Daily arrivals averaged 37,406 before and 20,941 after prohibition, while the figures for repeaters from former years were 3,881 as against 1,577. Although the number of different men dropped so decidedly, total guests increased from 167,927 per year before, to 192,954 after prohibition. From the foregoing it is apparent that the number of men who frequent McGregor Institute has been reduced since prohibition came into existence, while their length of stay has been increased from an average of four days per man to eight days.

A substantial increase in individual prosperity is evidenced by—

(1) The falling off of destitute lodgers from 45,286 annually before prohibition to 33,042 after.

(2) The increase in money left for safekeeping overnight from $7 to $25 per depositor.

(3) The decrease in requests for cast-off clothing from 2,757 per year to 1,065.

(4) The increase in payment for lodgings from 5 per cent to 12 per cent of those trusted.

A decided improvement in the health of men at McGregor Institute is shown since prohibition. From 1913 to 1917, inclusive, the average number of men per year applying to the institute physician for special medical treatment was 5,247, and from 1919 to 1923, inclusive, 1,706.

Records of separate illnesses are not available for the entire period covered, but a comparison of December, 1917, the last month of the preprohibition period, with December, 1923, the last month of the post-prohibition period, reveals a decrease in venereal cases from 18 to 6, a decrease in gastrointestinal cases from 46 to 12, a decrease in skin troubles from 199 to 56, and a decrease in minor surgery from 280 to 24.

The shift of ages since prohibition has been toward younger men. For the five-year period before 1918, 50 per cent of institute lodgers were under 30 years and 1.8 per cent over 60, while for the five years after 1918, 55 per cent were under 30 and 1.2 per cent over 60.

The most striking immediate effect of prohibition on the work at McGregor Institute has been in its religious department. Total chapel attendance for 1919, the first calendar year after prohibition, was 10,000 less than for the year 1918, although there were 71,000 more men in the building.

It is institute experience that most men seek religious aid only when shattered in body and purse—hungry, poorly clad, nervously weak, penniless—and this condition was intensified and widespread previous to prohibition. Accustomed to think of religion as something for material relief only, it was natural that the transient man at first should avoid it as his acute need for physical aid lessened.

With the removal of the saloon, gradually the deadening effect of alcohol on the minds and hearts of men has been lifted, and religion now appeals as a broader and more spiritual aid. There is evident a more alert and less spoiled outlook on life, and sober men with clear minds make more intelligent and more permanent decisions than those under the influence of alcohol.

The steadily increasing chapel attendance from 14,439 in 1919 to 29,793 in 1923; the increase in the number of men who sought the religious-work director for instruction in Christian living from 397 to 1,330; and the increase in the percentage of these seekers from 2.7 per cent in 1919 to 4.4 per cent in 1923, together with a more cordial attitude toward all religious services, confirm the belief that a higher type of manhood is in process of development since prohibition came into effect.

That more reliable and efficient workers and more intelligent and useful citizens are developing, McGregor Institute believes it is reasonable to conclude from its experience—

(1) A decrease of 39 per cent in the number of different men.
(2) A decrease of 44 per cent in daily arrivals.
(3) A decrease of 59 per cent in repeaters.
(4) A decrease of 27 per cent in destitute lodgers.
(5) A decrease of 61 per cent in requests for clothing.
(6) A decrease of 67 per cent in men requiring medical treatment in the five-year period since prohibition as compared with the same time before.
(7) A steady increase of 106 per cent in chapel attendance from 1919 to 1923.

In drawing its conclusion, McGregor Institute realizes that other factors are at work, but even after allowing for such causes, as the increase in general prosperity and the growth of knowledge, the results are in such striking contrast to open saloon days that prohibition justly deserves a very large share of credit in bringing about this improved condition, and better men should be a natural and lasting result.

The wet stronghold of Rhode Island, where the eighteenth amendment has not yet been ratified, contributes testimony to the efficiency of prohibition by abolishing its State workhouse.

Since prohibition came committals to the workhouse have decreased 72.5 per cent. With the completion of the new wing at the State prison and the establishment in it of the reformatory for men, the few committals from the courts to the workhouse will be received there, but a separate institution will no longer be continued.

In the 52 years of its existence the State workhouse has received 31,385 prisoners. In the four years of prohibition the average occupancy of the workhouse was 58.2. For the 10 years previous to the prohibition period the average was 211.4.

This disclosure is made in the report to the State Welfare Commission of Warden Charles E. Linscott, in charge of the penal institutions. That the condition is due entirely to prohibition, he states, is shown by the fact that the State workhouse was the place to which were committed men convicted of being common drunkards, of vagrancy, of being "idle persons without visible means of support," of nonsupport and of being sturdy beggars, or offenses directly traceable to drink.

To remove any question of the cause of the falling off in committals Mr. Linscott goes into the history of the workhouse from its establishment in 1872. In the first year the committals numbered over 100 and increased gradually until in 1914 they totaled their highest, 240. For the first time thereafter, in 1918, the year's total dropped to less than 200 and was recorded as 156. With the advent of prohibition, effective wartime prohibition, the committals in 1918 fell to 18. The greatest number of committals in any one year since has been 77, which is a total less than two-thirds of the smallest preprohibition year.

In the House of Correction, to which women are committed for offenses similar to those for which men were sent to the workhouse, the report adds, the decrease in occupancy has been so great with prohibition that it has been necessary to discontinue the work of shirt making by power-driven machines because the inmates number now only enough to do the ordinary household work with the laundry and greenhouse work to be done. The decrease of women prisoners has amounted to 60 per cent, the average for four years of prohibition being 23.7, as compared with an average of 60.7 during the preceding 10 years.

This record obtains in a State which had no concurrent prohibition law until 14 months ago.

Prohibition has not caused any decided increase in drug addiction. Ninety per cent of our addicts have a habit dating back to the days before prohibition.

This is a finding of Dr. Charles E. Sceleth and Dr. Sydney Kuh, of Chicago, writing in the current issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association on Drug Addiction. Their article, they note—is based on the experience of the last 20 years, during which time more than 5,000 patients addicted to morphinism were treated.

In the same issue Dr. Carleton Simon, of New York, says:

In the city of New York narcotism has decidedly decreased during the last three years. This is evidenced by the fact that a beginner is now rarely found among the addicts recently apprehended.

Doctor Simon is special deputy police commissioner in charge of the narcotic division of the New York City police department.

The Associated Press carried this from Philadelphia, dated February 19, 1924:

PHILADELPHIA, February 19.—Deaths from alcoholism in Philadelphia decreased more than 85 per cent in the first six weeks of 1924, in comparison with a similar period last year, Frank Paul, chief investigator of the coroner's office said to-day. Mr. Paul attributed the reduction to Director of Public Safety Butler's campaign against lawbreakers.

Reports showed 150 deaths due to alcohol during the first six weeks of 1923, Mr. Paul said. This year but 27 have been reported, and 11 of these were due to accidents resulting from intoxication.

"The police battle against lawbreakers," declared Mr. Paul, "is putting out of business the places and persons dealing in liquor, and it is frightening the public through fear of arrest. The fact that the majority of liquor deaths this year occurred early, while their frequency is steadily becoming less, shows the effect of General Butler's drive."

There is no doubt about the effectiveness of prohibition in making our land happy. It is only enforcement that is sometimes not effective.

Eloquently and succinctly did Lloyd-George sum up America's progress toward national happiness in a recent speech in Parliament in connection with the proposal for local option for Wales. The report in Law Times summarizes his speech:

He thought no one could deny the magnitude of the drink evil. It was true that during the last few years there had been a considerable reduction in the drink bill—not in cash but in quantity. But that improvement had been effected very largely by the action of the House in increasing taxation, restricting facilities, diminishing the alcoholic strength. The drink bill amounted to £400,000,000, or, if taxation was deducted, £200,000,000. He took a serious view of the industrial position of the country. He did not like the remedy suggested by the Prime Minister, but he agreed with the right honorable gentleman that the situation was serious and required to be grappled with. In such a situation we could not afford to carry a drink bill of £200,000,000 a year. (Hear, hear.) What had struck him more than anything else in the United States was that the practical business community were behind drastic temperance legislation. It was not brought about by parties, but by the business community, who were convinced that something had to be done; and now, he was told, 75 per cent of the business community would oppose the rescinding of that law. Its effect had been very great in the diminution of crime, an increase of building, and an enormous increase of trade, because the people had more money to spend. He was told that the children in America had never had such a good time since the creation of the world.

And it is to be noted that the liquor interests, international as they are in their organization and affiliations, and who now propose "local option" and all kinds of referendums to the people, in England fight just as bitterly against anything of that kind as they used to do in this country when they were in control, and were able to defeat Lloyd George and Lady Astor, for a time further, in their desire to free communities in Wales.

The industrial prosperity of the United States, which was said by Charles Edward Russel, in his article which I have quoted, to be chiefly due "to the fact of prohibition," is emphasized by the Federal Reserve Board in the January Federal Reserve Bulletin. It is said:

In the business and banking developments of the year 1923, the outstanding fact has been the high level of industrial and agricultural output and the demand for bank credit to finance a volume of production and trade never previously equaled. Throughout the year the buying power of consumers, arising out of practically full industrial employment and increased income of farmers, has been reflected in a growth of retail trade and in a more active distribution of merchandise than in any other year. * * * The year, taken as a whole, has been one of unparalleled industrial and trade activity.

In the Saturday Evening Post for March 1, 1924, is an interesting article by Felix Isman, "The effect of prohibition on realty values." It is really a story of happiness and prosperity brought to a nation through sobriety, thrift, and industry under national prohibition. How every line of lawful industry has been made more prosperous is sketched, the help to healthful recreations, the greater comforts, the more happiness. Of home owning, fundamentally important for a happy land, he says:

Many elements enter into the ever-increasing demand for better and more housing. Let no one say it is absurd that prohibition had a dominant part. John Workingman has more money to-day than he has ever had in the history of the country and probably in the history of the world, and the elimination of John Barleycorn for John Workingman probably means an additional room at least to his living quarters. My opinion of the housing situation is that prohibition has created, through its success as a money saver, a tremendous impetus in the mind of the latent home seeker, the desirability of investing his savings in some place where he knows he can find shelter, without the drag of the payment of rent, as quickly as possible, and he has become luxurious in his demands; not luxurious to the point of wastefulness, but he wants more elbowroom. He now has the money to pay for it and he is getting it.

He concludes:

From the time the Volstead Act went into effect, it has been a prime factor in the real-estate business. The corpse of Demon Rum has been handled almost as successfully as that of the porker—but no pig ever had so many unexpected by-products as prohibition. It will be interesting to see how many more are yet to turn up.

Years ago the first Armour said one used everything about the pig but his squeal; the realty expert did more than that with the realty used for liquor purposes—he utilized the squeal.

The noted surgeon, Dr. Howard A. Kelley, of Johns Hopkins University, says in the February issue of Health:

The invocation of the vanished intoxicating beverages by a handful of men who are fanatics about drink is doomed to a dismal failure, for no little group of liquor dealers or addicts can rule this vast Nation. In clearest terms, the majority has spoken in terms of law. That majority has borne in patience the persistent lawless attempts to nullify its will. To-day, in tones heard in every State of the Union, that majority voice is speaking ever more loudly for enforcement and yet more enforcement, for prohibition means health, wealth, morality, and happiness to an entire Nation of over a hundred million souls.

State after State has repudiated the beer-and-wine entering wedge for John Barleycorn, and our Nation will let the 58 bills for 2.75 beer lie in capacious pigeonholes while the eighteenth amendment goes on in the great experiment to make this a sober, happy Nation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

S. 365. An act for the relief of Ellen B. Walker.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM, from the Committee on Enrolled bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 4121. An act to extend the provisions of certain laws to the Territory of Hawaii.

S. 2014. An act to authorize the Park-Wood Lumber Co. to construct two bridges across the United States Canal which connects Apalachicola River and St. Andrews Bay, Fla.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 365. An act for the relief of Ellen B. Walker; to the Committee on Claims.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 4807. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State highway commission of Louisiana to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across West Pearl River in the State of Louisiana.

H. R. 4808. An act granting the consent of Congress to the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Pearl River between St. Tammany Parish in Louisiana and Hancock County in Mississippi.

H. R. 3681. An act to authorize the building of a bridge across the Waccamaw River in South Carolina.

H. R. 3265. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge between the Boroughs of Brooklyn and Queens in the city and State of New York.

H. R. 584. An act to authorize the county of Multnomah, Oreg., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Willamette River, in the city of Portland, Oreg., in the vicinity of the present site of Sellwood Ferry.

REFERENCE OF BILLS TO COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency Senate bill 2209. The chairmen of both the Banking and Currency Committee and the Judiciary Committee agree that this bill should have gone to the Committee on the Judiciary, and the Chair agrees with them. Therefore, without objection, the Chair will rerefer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will withhold that.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. I withhold the point of order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with Calendar Wednesday, and before the Speaker puts the motion I desire to renew my request for unanimous consent that in the event of the passage of this motion the business in order to-day be in order the next day after the conclusion of the consideration of the Muscle Shoals proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that in case his motion to dispense with Calendar Wednesday to-day prevails, the Calendar Wednesday business of to-day shall be in order the day after the conclusion of the consideration of the Muscle Shoals bill. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, suppose that all of this week is consumed by the Muscle Shoals proposition, then we would lose the Calendar Wednesday for this week, would we not, if we agree to this motion, or would we have two Calendar Wednesdays next week?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The business would be in order, under my motion, on Monday.

Mr. DYER. Then we would have Monday for Calendar Wednesday and also the following Wednesday?

Mr. LONGWORTH. It would be a question of what the House desired to do. This motion would have nothing to do with that.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield? As I understand, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has the call; and does the gentleman understand that the Coast Guard extension bill is to be brought up by them on the next Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. WINSLOW. I am not prepared to say when the next Calendar Wednesday comes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I ask if it would be called up on the next Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. WINSLOW. That would now seem likely, but I would not want to commit myself entirely.

Mr. CRAMTON. In view of that fact, I think the request of the gentleman from Ohio is very desirable.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, of course I do not want to get in the way of whatever the plans may be, but I do want to call the attention of the House to the situation. We have a very important urgent deficiency bill pending. It is on the calendar. It carries a large amount of money for refunds, judgments, and things of that sort, much of which is drawing interest at the rate of 6 per cent. We ought not to put anything in the way of that bill after the disposition of the pending bill, if we can avoid it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman that it seemed to me the importance of Calendar Wednesday this week, from what the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce told me, would have justified our not dispensing with Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not want to get in the way, of course.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And I think we will probably finish up this week on the Muscle Shoals matter and the business of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

Mr. MADDEN. In the meantime we are paying interest on a very large amount of money.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am in favor of the gentleman having the floor with any appropriation bill he desires immediately after the conclusion of those matters.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I am interested in this question. When does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] say they will bring in a deficiency bill?

Mr. MADDEN. It is on the calendar now.

Mr. WINGO. I think it ought to be passed as quickly as possible. The Government has unpaid claims 13 or 14 months old that I know of. There is no contest about them and they simply say that the Congress has not appropriated the money.

Mr. DYER. But the gentleman from Illinois, no doubt, if his bill was up next week, would ask to suspend the Calendar Wednesday of next week.

Mr. MADDEN. No; I would not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, I want to enter a protest against this constant interference in Calendar Wednesday in the future because of the mass of legislation that comes from the Judiciary Committee which can not be heard except on Calendar Wednesday. The rule of the House that Calendar Wednesday shall be reserved for certain business, it seems to me, ought to be followed strictly on all occasions, unless there is a national emergency or something like a calamity. Therefore, I object.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the doors were closed, the Sergeant at Arms was directed to bring in absent Members, and the Clerk called the roll.

The following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson	Darrow	Johnson, Ky.	Perlman
Anthony	Davey	Johnson, S. Dak.	Phillips
Berger	Dempsey	Kahn	Porter
Black, Tex.	Dickinson, Iowa	Kvale	Quayle
Boies	Dickstein	Langley	Reed, W. Va.
Brand, Ohio	Drewry	Lindsay	Rouse
Britten	Eagan	Linthicum	Sears, Fla.
Browne, N. J.	Edmonds	McClintic	Taylor, Colo.
Buchanan	Free	McFadden	Thomas, Ky.
Buckley	Fuller	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Tydings
Byrnes, S. C.	Fulmer	Mooney	Underhill
Canfield	Funk	Nelson, Me.	Upshaw
Carter	Gifford	Newton, Mo.	Vare
Connolly, Pa.	Goldsborough	Newton, Minn.	Ward, N. Y.
Crisp	Greene, Mass.	Nolan	Welsh
Crowther	Griffin	O'Brien	Wertz
Cullen	Hooker	Oliver, N. Y.	Zihlman
Curry	Jacobstein	Patterson
Dallinger	Johnson, Wash.	Perkins

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and fifty-six Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio moves to dispense with business on Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that in the event that my motion is agreed to I shall renew my request for unanimous consent that business in order to-day may be in order on the day following the passage of the Muscle Shoals bill. In other words, on some day this week there will be a Calendar Wednesday, provided we finish Muscle Shoals.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I rise with regret to oppose the motion made by the floor leader upon this side of the House. I would rather be in accord with him than in opposition, but I do feel that it is necessary that we should keep some of the rules of procedure intact. If Calendar Wednesday is to be suspended every time some bill is brought up in which a large number of Members are interested, we will never have a Calendar Wednesday for any committee or for the Judiciary Committee, with a score or more of most important measures pending, including matters relating to the Constitution of the country. I do hope that the Members will not accord this motion their support but that we will stand for regularity in the maintenance of the rules in this respect.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Ohio to dispense with the business on Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands the yeas and nays. All those in favor of taking the question by yeas and nays will rise. [After counting.] Sixteen Members have arisen, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The question was taken; and there were 223 ayes and 26 noes.

So the motion to dispense with the business on Calendar Wednesday was agreed to.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request for unanimous consent that business in order to-day be in order the day following the disposition of the Muscle Shoals bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the business of Calendar Wednesday be taken up on the first day after the Muscle Shoals bill is disposed of. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask the gentleman from Ohio if that means, supposing this business consumes the entire week, that we will have two days for Calendar Wednesday business in the coming week.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Business would be in order under my request on Monday or on Tuesday, and it lies with the House whether it will dispense with the Calendar Wednesday business next week, and so far as I know there will be no disposition to do that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I shall not object.

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

MUSCLE SHOALS.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 518) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to sell to Henry Ford nitrate plant No. 1, at Sheffield, Ala.; nitrate plant No. 2, at Muscle Shoals, Ala.; Waco Quarry, near Russellville, Ala.; and to lease to the corporation to be incorporated by him Dam No. 2 and Dam No. 3 (as designated in H. Doc. No. 1262, 64th Cong., 1st sess.), including power stations when constructed as provided herein, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 518, with Mr. MAPES in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. JAMES].

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan 25 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 40 minutes.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, the minority report is supposed to be written by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL]. However, I must absolve him from all blame for this report. I insist upon coming to the defense of our colleague from Iowa [Mr. HULL], and I am going to prove that he has been duped by some of his so-called "friends."

The gentleman from Iowa is, I know, too shrewd to write a report that contradicts his utterances of two years ago in every particular and would make it appear that he has no fixed opinions on anything, at least for any particular length of time. I realize that even a gentleman with an "open mind" is not going to write a report that criticizes his previous utterances and remarks in every particular or that would show that he had forgotten his previous questions and his previous answers.

The gentleman from Iowa was formerly the strongest advocate of the Ford offer. The same as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN], he was about ready to vote to accept the Ford offer before the rest of the committee had read the offer, and, like the gentleman from Mississippi, he was ready, apparently, to turn over to Mr. Ford the United States Treasury to help him run the plants. If this seems exaggerated, you will see I am right when Mr. QUIN makes his speech.

If I had three guesses as to who wrote this report, I would guess the following:

First guess: Tom Martin.

Second guess: Thomas W. Martin, Birmingham, Ala.

Third guess: The president of the Alabama Power Co., Thomas W. Martin.

The report that is wrongly charged to the gentleman from Iowa states that Mr. Ford is to get a "subsidy." Let me read you the language written by Mr. Martin and credited to Mr. HULL:

> We believe, moreover, that this can and should be done without favor, subsidy, or Government grant of special privilege to any individuals or groups of individuals, corporations, or parties whatsoever.

On page 18, we find a paragraph entitled, "Not necessary to subsidize Mr. Ford." Then comes the following language:

> Under these circumstances we see no reason, even if higher consideration of public policy did not prohibit it, for inducing Mr. Ford with heavy subsidy in the form of power and property to engage in that profitable enterprise.

Then later, we read:

> It follows that Mr. Ford ought not to be accorded special privilege and subsidy for any purpose whatsoever. * * *

Now let us see what Mr. HULL said two years ago.

Mr. HULL. You spoke of a subsidy this morning.

WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULL. I do not know what the rest of the committee has, but I have gone into the matter far enough to say that, in my opinion, the use of the word "subsidy" is wrong. It is not subsidy at all.

Mr. MADDEN. Who said that?

Mr. JAMES. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL seems to be peeved—excuse me, I mean that Mr. Martin, of the Alabama Power Co., tries to make it appear that our colleague is peeved—because he has not had a chance to talk to Mr. Ford about the offer. Other members of the committee might be "peeved" because they had no opportunity to talk to Mr. Ford and to ask him questions, but the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] has no complaint on that score. When Mr. Ford was here two years ago I understand that our colleague went down to see Mr. Ford and was with him for several hours.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAMES. Not now. Mr. HULL, our colleague, spent several hours with Mr. Ford, and if he only talked with him for two minutes, and if he did not ask Mr. Ford then about the 100-year and fertilizer guaranty and the water power act and everything else, it must have been because our colleague was either tongue-tied or too modest, or else he was satisfied with the provisions of the Ford offer at that time.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. JAMES. I will not.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. But you are making a misstatement.

Mr. JAMES. So far as I can make out, about all our colleague said to Mr. Ford at that time was: "Mr. Ford, you do not need to worry about your offer not passing the House. Remember that I am with you; there is no doubt about its going through." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAMES. I will not.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. But you are making a misstatement of facts.

Mr. JAMES. Then we will put it down to sarcasm.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. You have no right to quote me wrongly.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the Chair ought to protect the witness, and the gentlemen of the House ought to observe the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Michigan suspend? The Chair suggests that it would be better for specific members of the committee to address the Chair when they desire to interrupt. That will also tend to better order in the committee.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. JAMES. I will not.

If I am correctly informed, our colleague from Iowa was very well satisfied with his interview with Mr. Ford, because I am informed that he stated upon his return that everything was all right.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. JAMES. I do not.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I want to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MADDEN. But the gentleman can not interrupt a gentleman for the purpose of making a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. JAMES. This report makes it appear that Mr. HULL uses the following language:

He must have this reversal of established governmental policy in respect to tenure of water-power right—a grant of the people's heritage—for a term of 100 years with preferential rights. * * *

Mr. HULL, two years ago in examining a witness, did not condemn this section but praised it and thought that it was fair and reasonable. Let me read the exact language used by our friend:

Mr. HULL. That means that having the property there and having developed it, if two companies offered the same thing, the Ford Co. should be given the preference. Why is that unfair? I understand that some gentlemen say it is unfair, but I can not see it is unfair.

Gentlemen, think of the unfairness of Mr. Martin in writing a report to make it appear that our colleague was against the Ford offer two years ago and against it now. Our colleague from Iowa can well say that he wishes he was delivered of his friends.

In another part of the report, Mr. Martin again misrepresenting our colleague, would make it appear that the gentleman from Iowa uses the following language:

It is in the record of the former hearings that Mr. Ford stated to the Secretary of War that if he could not make fertilizer profitably he intended to "quit."

If our colleague had been consulted on writing this part of the report, he would have begged Mr. Martin not to use this language and state that the above did not correctly state the testimony of the Secretary of War, and also that—to use the exact words of the Secretary of War—"that interview took place on the 11th of January," or about two weeks before Mr. Ford made offer No. 2.

The chairman of the committee, Mr. KAHN, then said:

That interview took place, as I take it from what you said, about two weeks before he signed the second agreement, which is now before us.

Secretary WEEKS. Yes.

If you will examine the evidence, you will find that the Secretary of War and Mr. Ford had no conversation about the matter of fertilizer afterwards.

If Mr. HULL had had anything to do with the writing of this report, I am sure that he would have been fair with the House by quoting all that Mr. Weeks said, which is as follows:

In my conversation with Mr. Ford I said to him, "Will you guarantee to continue the manufacture of fertilizer during the life of this contract?" He replied that he would not. I said, "Will you agree to invest a certain amount of money in the manufacture of fertilizer?" And he said he would not. Now, of course, he does in effect.

A little later Mr. Martin makes it appear that our colleague uses the following language in his report:

FORD'S FERTILIZER GUARANTY NOT BINDING.

We are not convinced that if given the special privileges he demands Mr. Ford could be compelled continuously to produce fertilizer at Muscle Shoals. The language of section 14 of the committee bill is, to say the least, peculiar, and it has a peculiar history. It is certain that the original offer contained no binding language regarding fertilizer production. This was the opinion of the Military Affairs Committee of the last preceding Congress, and its members sought energetically to strengthen the commitment. They were apparently successful, but with the new wording of the section qualifying language not in the original proposal appeared. * * *

I want to be fair to our colleague, and state that he would not if he could and could not if he would make any such statements.

Every member of the committee, with the exception of myself, voted for the present fertilizer-guaranty section of the Ford offer.

The present language in the McKenzie bill was drawn up one afternoon by men on our committee against the Ford offer, men on the committee in favor of the Ford offer, and by representatives of Mr. Ford. They unanimously agreed on the language.

The signed report is as follows:

15. Since the manufacture, sale, and distribution of commercial fertilizers to farmers and other users thereof constitutes one of the principal considerations of this offer, the company expressly agrees that, continuously throughout the lease period, except as it may be prevented by reconstruction of the plant itself or by war, strikes, accidents, fires, or other causes beyond its control, it will manufacture nitrogen and other commercial fertilizers, mixed or unmixed, and with or without filler, according to demand, at nitrate plant No. 2 or its equivalent or at such other plant or plants adjacent or near thereto as it may construct, using the most economical source of power available. The annual production of these fertilizers shall have a nitrogen content of at least 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen, which is the present annual capacity of nitrate plant No. 2. If during the lease period said nitrate plant No. 2 is destroyed or damaged from any cause, the company agrees to restore such plant within a reasonable time to its former capacity.

Mr. HULL is an honorable man, and would not, of course, vote for any language that had a "joker" in it, or did not in every way provide that the farmers were to get an absolute guaranty for fertilizer. We know our colleague too well to think that he would allow the farmers to be tricked if he had anything to say.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. JAMES. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. JAMES. The committee was very liberal in the matter of hearings. We gave our colleague and the Alabama Power Co. and their friends all the time they asked for. Several times we had to stop hearings because their witnesses were not on hand, but we reopened the hearings again two or three times.

We had one young man who thought a "hearing" was not a serious proposition, and immediately he began to play the only part of which he was capable of playing—that of a clown. I think his name was Frazier. Frazier said he had formerly been for the Ford offer but that this was when he "was in the wilderness." Frazier changed his mind when a Moses came by. This Moses not only led him out of the wilderness but also led him from Alabama to Washington, and from the Union Depot at Washington to the Washington Hotel, and from the lobby of the Washington Hotel to his own room. There Moses told the young man what he was to tell the committee, and then Moses led the young man to our committee room. Upon investigation by Mr. HILL of Alabama, we found that the name of Moses was Mr. Thomas W. Martin, president of the Alabama Power Co. I hope that Moses provided our friend who had been in the wilderness the "manna" necessary for use on the way here and also "manna" enough to take him home.

Other gentlemen were also led out of the wilderness, apparently, in the same way, if we may judge from their testimony.

There is still another reason for my assertion that our colleague [Mr. HULL] did not write the minority report.

In the minority report we read this language:

His offer still contemplates the making of fertilizer by the operation of nitrate plant No. 2.

Mr. Martin could very well make this mistake, but our colleague, with his great familiarity with the Ford offer, knows that section 14 reads in part as follows:

It will manufacture nitrogen and other commercial fertilizers, mixed or unmixed, and with or without filler, according to demand, at nitrate plant No. 2, or its equivalent, or at any such other plant or plants adjacent or near thereto as it may construct, using the most economical source of power available.

Mr. Martin would not, of course, know the history of this language, but our colleague knows that we put this in so that if necessary to use any other building than plant No. 2 it could be done. Our colleague voted to put this language in the bill, so you can readily see that he can not be held responsible for the language used by his false friend, Mr. Martin.

Mr. Martin, in the minority report, would make it appear that our colleague [Mr. HULL] uses the following language:

Nobody denies that Mr. Ford demands the divesture by the Government of its ownership of the nitrate plants. It is inconceivable that this necessity of national defense, vital to the Nation's safety, should pass into private hands.

If Mr. Martin read this report to our colleague from Iowa [Mr. HULL] before it was presented to us, I am sure that our colleague would have told Mr. Martin, his false friend, that he could not allow anyone to charge him with that language. You can readily understand why when I read you the way our colleague [Mr. HULL] felt when he last expressed himself on the matter.

Mr. HULL. Colonel, I think we are sometimes liable to lose sight of the fundamental idea of the whole matter, and that this is a national-defense proposition.

Our colleague was absolutely right, and here comes Mr. Martin, pretending to be a friend of Mr. HULL, and wants to make an electric-lighting-company proposition out of it.

Then our colleague goes on to say:

We have down there at the present time nitrate plant No. 2, built and in working shape, ready to turn out practically at a minute's notice nitrates for high explosives. Now, by this contract we agree to sell it to Henry Ford. Yet we have a string attached to the sale to the effect that at any time we can take that plant over and operate it for the production of nitrates for the production of high explosives.

A little later we find our colleague stating:

The question has come to my mind—and I think it is of vital importance—is there anything in this contract to assure the Government that this plant will be maintained under all circumstances as a plant for the manufacture of explosives or nitrates for high explosives in case of war? In other words, could Henry Ford assign this plant, as Mr. GREENE has suggested, to some other method of manufacturing nitrate for fertilizer and change the method? In other words, I mean we would have a formula for the manufacture of nitrate for high explosives which is another method. Is that fully protected?

Colonel HULL, Acting Judge Advocate General. In section 14 you will find this provision:

"To maintain nitrate plant No. 2 in its present state of readiness or its equivalent for immediate operation, in the manufacture of materials necessary in time of war for the production of high explosives."

This is his obligation.

Mr. HULL. He could not destroy it in any way without our stopping him; we would have the right to stop him if he tried to assign it to somebody else, or sell it for some other process? We would still have the right to go in?

Colonel HULL. I think so, without the shadow of a doubt.

A little later on in the hearings we find our colleague stating:

I am more concerned about this whole matter from a national defense standpoint and I want to keep something so that we may have an independent source of nitrates. If we accepted the Ford offer, there would be no question but what we would always have there an independent source of nitrogen.

And yet, Mr. Martin would have us think that Mr. HULL had always been against the Ford offer. Mr. Martin had better read the testimony.

A little later we find our colleague telling Mr. Mayo, the representative of Mr. Ford, that Mr. Ford "would not have the absolute ownership" of nitrate plant No. 2.

Listen to the words of our colleague at that time:

You would not have the right, although, apparently, under the contract you have bought the property—although I might say you have simply bought the land of it because you would not have the absolute right of ownership there because you could not change that plant and destroy what we now have in plant No. 2, and that is an independent source for the production of ammonium nitrate?

Mr. MAYO. Not unless we replace it with something equally as good or better.

Then a little later, we find our colleague telling the representative of Mr. Ford, Mr. Mayo, that national defense is the "big, compelling thing," in the whole contract from his way of thinking.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Mayo, as I stated to you before, the big, compelling thing in this contract is in section 14:

(b) To maintain nitrate plant No. 2 in its present state of readiness, or its equivalent, for immediate operation in the manufacture of materials necessary in time of war for the production of explosives.

And to think that Mr. Martin would send out statements to the press of the country to make it appear that our colleague "had always been against the Ford offer." Our colleague ought to sue him for libel.

A little later we find that our colleague is still interested in plant No. 2, because we find him stating, in part:

Mr. HULL. In the first place, as I have stated before, it seems to me that plant No. 2 is the one important thing in this whole proposition, in keeping plant No. 2 in such condition so that we can use it in time of war. That, to my mind, is the greatest object we have in making this contract, if we make it.

Our colleague did everything that he could at that time to make the contract with Mr. Ford. As I have said, Mr. McKENZIE and he "talked the same language at that time," and Mr. HULL had no use at all for the views of the enemies of the Ford offer, like Mr. MORIN, Mr. RANSLEY, Mr. HILL of Maryland, and Mr. FROTHINGHAM, and voted with the friends of the Ford offer to kill all amendments made with the idea of killing the Ford offer.

On page 3 of the report written by Mr. Martin for Mr. HULL, we find the following comparison of pending bills:

HULL BILL (H. R. 6781) BASED ON POWER COMPANIES' OFFER.	McKENZIE BILL (H. R. 518) BASED ON THE FORD OFFER.
1. (a) $15,000,000 of capital (one company). Owned by Americans.	1. (b) $10,000,000 of capital (one company); personal liability of Mr. Ford limited to formation of corporation with above capital. Owned by Americans.

Mr. HULL, of course, had nothing to do with the writing of the above.

Our colleague knows from his experience, especially during the war, that a company controlled by another company which in turn is controlled by a foreign country was not considered an American company or "owned by Americans."

Our colleague also knows that a company, controlled by another company, organized under the laws of Alabama, but which in turn is controlled by a Canadian corporation, is not in reality or fact an American company controlled by Americans.

Our colleague believes that any company operating any part of Muscle Shoals should be a company owned by Americans and owing no allegiance, directly or indirectly, to any foreign company, because he voted with all the rest of the committee to put the following language in the McKenzie bill:

SEC. 22. The stock of the company to be formed by Henry Ford, referred to in section 1 of this act, to be controlled after his death by his heirs or by American citizens, and no stock or bonds issued by any company or subsidiary company in connection with the lease of the dams referred to herein or in connection with nitrate plant No. 2, or any substitute therefor or addition supplementary thereto, shall be owned or controlled by any foreign corporation, citizen, or subject.

I am positive that our colleague would not want to put anything into the contract with Mr. Ford that he would not put into a contract that we proposed with any other bidder.

Mr. Martin, as an interested bidder, might misstate the facts, but our colleague would not do so, because, of course, he has no interest in this matter except to protect his own Government.

Mr. HULL, the gentleman from Iowa, knows that the company to be formed by the power companies will be controlled by the Alabama Power Co. I believe that our colleague knows that the Alabama Power Co. is a subsidiary of a Canadian company called the Alabama Traction, Light & Power Co.

In case our colleague has forgotten, let me remind him of the following:

Mr. JAMES. The Alabama Traction, Light & Power Co. (Ltd.) is a Canadian corporation?

Mr. MARTIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. JAMES. What is the capital stock of the company?

Mr. MARTIN. I think it is $17,000,000 in common stock.

Mr. JAMES. The Alabama Power Co. is a subsidiary concern of the Alabama Traction, Light & Power Co. (Ltd.), is it not?

Mr. MARTIN. Limited in that relation.

A little earlier Mr. GARRETT of Texas asked a few questions of Mr. Martin:

Mr. GARRETT. What company is that which controls the Alabama Power Co.?

Mr. MARTIN. That is the Alabama Traction, Light & Power Co.

Mr. GARRETT. Where is that company located?

Mr. MARTIN. That company is domiciled in the Dominion of Canada.

A little later Mr. GARRETT of Texas said:

What did you say is the name of the Canadian corporation that owns this stock of the Alabama Power Co.?

Mr. MARTIN. The Alabama Traction, Light & Power Co. (Ltd.).

Mr. GARRETT. Does it still own a majority of the stock?

Mr. MARTIN. It owns all the common stock of the Alabama Power Co.

Mr. GARRETT. And the common stock is the majority of all the stock, common and preferred?

Mr. MARTIN. Oh, yes.

On page 23 of the minority report we find that Mr. WAINWRIGHT, of New York, states he concurs—in the conclusions of my colleagues that the Muscle Shoals should not be transferred to Mr. Ford on the terms proposed—

And so forth, and then concludes—

Also I question whether Congress can ever arrive at a wise or satisfactory conclusion until the whole subject and all offers that have been or still can be adduced have been analyzed, considered, and reported on by a select commission, as proposed by the President in his message at the opening of this session of Congress.

Mr. HULL was very severe with a witness two years ago, as the following language indicates:

You make no pretense yet to making us an offer; that you want it turned over to somebody else that you can do business with across the table. I might say that, in my opinion, there has been too much of that kind of business done across the table and not enough of it here in the open where people can see what is being done.

By the shades of Fall, Doheny, and Sinclair, our colleague at that time talked like a statesman. [Applause.]

The WITNESS. I hope, Mr. HULL, I have not made a suggestion that a reference of this matter to a member of the President's Cabinet would have the effect of initiating a kind of negotiation that could not stand the light of day * * *.

But our colleague from Iowa would have none of that way of dealing.

Our colleague from Iowa, two years ago, was very strong to "maintain plant No. 2, in condition to produce nitrates" and for that reason, our colleague did not like the offer of the Alabama Power Co.

Mr. HULL. If we accepted your proposition there would be no positive assurance that in the future we would have nitrates for war purposes, because you do not propose to maintain plant No. 2 in condition to produce nitrates.

Mr. MARTIN. No; we do not undertake any obligations with respect to plant No. 2; but we undertake to give the Government power and money.

Mr. Martin is the president of the Alabama Power Co. and then, as now, was doing everything that he could to see that it did not go to Mr. Ford. At that time, however, our colleague was not in alliance with him.

There was no "positive assurance that in the future we would have nitrates for war purposes" in the offer of the Alabama Power Co. made two years ago, and neither is there any "positive assurance that in the future we would have nitrates for war purposes" under their present offer, and neither is there any "positive assurance that in the future we will have nitrates for war purposes" in the bill that Mr. Martin has inveigled Mr. HULL to introduce. I take it for granted that Mr. HULL has not read the bill very carefully but that when he does he will withdraw it because I am sure that our colleague in his great zeal for "nitrates for war purposes" can not be used for a tool—when he knows it.

If anyone believes that our colleague thought two years ago that Mr. Ford could not manufacture fertilizer and sell it below the prices sold by others, let me quote you the following:

Mr. HULL. Mr. Swann, following the line of the questions asked by Mr. GREENE, then it is your opinion that if we make this contract with Mr. Ford, or something similar to it, he could develop this process which you speak of for making concentrated fertilizers?

Mr. SWANN. He would not have to develop it; it is already developed. It could be utilized.

Mr. HULL. He could utilize it, then?

Mr. SWANN. Yes.

Mr. HULL. It might be developed further.

Mr. SWANN. Oh, it will be developed further as the development goes on, of course.

Mr. HULL. That is what I had in mind.

Mr. SWANN. But it is developed to the point now that makes it available.

Mr. HULL. Then, does it not conclusively follow that he will be able to cheapen fertilizer to the farmer very materially?

Mr. SWANN. With the price of power suggested there is no question but what fertilizer could be produced cheaper.

And yet Mr. MARTIN says Mr. HULL has "always been against the Ford offer."

Mr. Swann is one of the men interested in the fertilizer proposition with the Alabama Power Co.; so when he says that the price of fertilizer can be cut he ought to know.

A little later we find Mr. Swann stating in reply to Mr. QUIN's question:

Mr. QUIN. Then it is not any dream that concentrated fertilizer can be produced and turned over to the farmer?

Mr. SWANN. No, sir.

Mr. HULL, the gentleman from Iowa, did not like the testimony of Mr. C. H. McDowell, president of the National Fertilizer Association.

Mr. HULL. Perhaps I do not catch the point, but it seems to me as though the fertilizer people were worrying for fear Henry Ford would break up on this proposition; is that the point?

Mr. MCDOWELL. Will break up?

Mr. HULL. Yes; that he will go broke in this proposition.

At that time the gentleman from Iowa had the same opinion as the rest of us, and that was that it was not only possible but that there was no doubt in our minds but that he could not only make fertilizer but that he could make it so cheaply that he could bring about a material reduction in the price of every pound of fertilizer to the farmer.

From a question he asked two years ago, our colleague from Iowa seemed to think that 100 years was not too long, provided one had an investment of $15,000,000 or more.

Here is what the gentleman from Iowa said two years ago:

As a business man would you spend fifteen or twenty million dollars without having a lease of 100 years?

A little while before that, in talking to Mr. Ford's representative, Mr. Mayo, we find him using the following language, in part:

You realize we are making a contract for 100 years; and, at the least, it will be three years before you start and probably from 15 to 18 years, as you suggest, and in that time many things may change.

And so forth.

Our colleague seemed to think that 100 years would not be too long, seeing it might take "from 15 to 18 years" to get fully under way.

To show that our colleague was not opposed to the Ford offer at that time I might also quote the following conversation that took place between Mr. Mayo and Mr. HULL immediately after the above:

Mr. MAYO. We hope to start within a year.

Mr. HULL. Producing fertilizer?

Mr. MAYO. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULL. I am glad to hear that. I did not know you figured you could do that. You would have to start, then, with your steam power.

Mr. MAYO. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULL. You hope to start right away, with steam power, manufacturing the fertilizer and sell it to the farmer?

Mr. MAYO. Yes, sir.

That does not sound very much as if our colleague had "always been against the Ford offer." Neither was he. As I have said, he was the most enthusiastic man on the committee in favor of the Ford offer.

Mr. Martin would have us believe that Mr. HULL is not only against Mr. Ford's getting Muscle Shoals at the present time but that he always was against it. In fact, I remember that in the last publicity statement given out by the president of the Alabama Power Co. he recklessly declared that our colleague from Iowa [Mr. HULL] had prepared a minority report, and also that our colleague had always been against the Ford offer.

Why does the president of the Alabama Power Co. insist upon slandering or misrepresenting the views of the gentleman from Iowa? Mr. HULL is capable of speaking for himself. We all know that our colleague was in favor of the Ford offer at the time he voted to report out the McKenzie bill in the last session of Congress. There was no difference of opinion then between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL]. Others of us had the same opinion as the gentleman from Iowa, and still have it, except that we thought that Mr. Ford ought to get the Gorgas plant. Mr. HULL thought at that time that because of a "moral right" we should sell the Gorgas plant to the Alabama Power Co.

Let the words of the gentleman from Iowa speak for themselves. Mr. HULL was then expressing his views in the presence of our committee to the representative of Mr. Ford, Mr. Mayo. Here are the exact words:

So far I quite agree with the idea of turning over the Muscle Shoals plant to Henry Ford. I think I can defend that position, if necessary, before my people, and I know that I can before myself, which is far more important than anything else; but when you come to the Gorgas plant, that is coming to another proposition.

The statement of our colleague [Mr. HULL] that I have quoted—

I agree with the idea of turning the Muscle Shoals plant over to Henry Ford. I think I can defend that position, if necessary, before my people, and I know that I can before myself, which is far more important than anything else—was not made in the early days of our hearings but made on the day of our last hearing, June 3, 1922. It was the day after Mr. MORIN, Mr. PARKER, and Mr. CRAGO, against the Ford offer, Mr. WRIGHT and Mr. MILLER, for the Ford offer, and Mr. Mayo and Mr. Worthington, representing Mr. Ford, had agreed on a compromise to take the place of section 14, the fertilizer section. It was on the same day that Mr. HULL, Mr. HILL of Maryland, and Mr. MORIN had all voted for the present section 14.

This statement of our colleague was made after our committee had discussed time and time again the water power act, the 100 years, the personal guaranty, and every other feature.

The day after Mr. HULL said he was for the Ford offer, our committee voted to report out the McKenzie bill by a vote of 11 to 10. The 11 comprised the 6 Democratic members of our committee, in addition to Mr. MCKENZIE, Mr. HULL, Mr. WURZBACH, Mr. MILLER of Washington, and myself.

If Mr. HULL had been against the Ford offer, he would have voted with his present allies, Mr. MORIN, Mr. HILL of Maryland, and Mr. FROTHINGHAM and the bill would have died in the committee.

Messrs. MORIN, HILL, and others prepared a minority report, but you did not see the name of our colleague Mr. HULL on it, because, as I have said before, Mr. MCKENZIE and he "talked the same language" at that time.

If Mr. HULL had offered a motion at that time to put Mr. Ford under the water power act, it would have carried, because the 10 opponents would have voted with him.

If Mr. HULL had offered any other motion to cripple the Ford offer, it would have carried, because he could have relied on the votes of the 10 opponents.

Mr. HULL made no such motion because he was then as strongly in favor of the Ford offer as Mr. MCKENZIE, and any statements given out by Mr. Martin or anyone else that our colleague has "always been against the Ford offer" are lies, pure and simple.

The more I think of the way the president of the Alabama Power Co. has betrayed our colleague from Iowa, the more I regret that he ever allowed his false friends to get him to introduce the two bills that he introduced in their behalf.

Gentlemen, Julius Cæsar had his Brutus, and George Washington had his Benedict Arnold, and our colleague from Iowa has his Tom Martin. [Laughter and applause.]

Our colleague from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE], who has the confidence and respect of every man in this House, will not be with us in the next Congress. After 14 years of faithful service, our colleague has decided that the quiet life of the farm is more conducive to health and happiness than the busy whirl here at Washington.

Men are loved many times for the enemies they make, and bills sometimes are assisted in their passage by the tactics of those outside of Congress who oppose them.

Our colleague is the author of this bill and also the author of the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill. Our friend from Illinois has been fortunate in the ones that are opposing his bills, especially the ones that are directing the publicity against both bills.

Bronson Batchelor, No. 50 Madison Avenue, New York, is the publicity manager and the handy go-between of the Alabama Power Co. and its group, and of the Electric Bond & Share Co., which is owned exclusively as a subsidiary by the General Electric Co. Batchelor is at the present time in Washington, I am informed, has frequently been here, and he has been very active—but not very prominently because of the character of the work he has done—against the offer of Henry Ford for Muscle Shoals.

At Batchelor's office, No. 50 Madison Avenue, New York, he poses as representing what is known as the American Institute of Business.

When in Washington Mr. Batchelor makes his office headquarters, I am informed, with J. T. Newcomb, of New York, who is attorney for the Alabama Power Co. and the Electric Bond & Share Co., and whose Washington office is at No. 304, National Savings & Trust Building.

Mr. Batchelor is also the publicity man and propagandist of the Anti-Bonus League. For more information regarding his activities read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 6, on page 3085.

Mr. Newcomb represented the Electric Bond & Share Co. and its allied power group when the Federal power act was being written, and Mr. Newcomb had much to do, I am informed, with the approval of the power act on the part of the power interests.

I understand that Mr. Newcomb was formerly a Republican State senator of the State of New York. Mr. Martin is a Democrat, I am informed. When it comes to hiring men to look after the interests of the Alabama Power Co, Mr. Martin draws no party lines.

Mr. Newcomb is a good lawyer, with experience in State politics. Mr. Martin believes in preparedness—so far as the Alabama Power Co. is concerned—and believes it is to their interests to have men on the pay roll—regardless of politics—who are familiar with State politics, and also he has men on the pay roll—regardless of politics—who are familiar with national politics.

A newcomer here, even one with State legislative experience, is not as valuable to the Alabama Power Co. as an attorney—especially a good attorney—who has had experience in national politics.

Good attorneys—in addition to other duties—are valuable in making reports, also in helping to make any necessary dart or dent or anything else "in the armor" of the critics of any offer of the Alabama Power Co. and their friends.

A little later in the day or on another bill in the near future I may have something further to say about certain activities of Mr. Newcomb, and also other men who have been working with him against the McKenzie bill.

I hope that by the time our colleague is ready to go to his little farm in Illinois that both the McKenzie bills will be laws.

If so, our colleague will be able to point with pride and satisfaction that one of his bills not only provided fertilizer for the farmers but also carried out the intentions of the national defense act, for which he fought so hard several years ago, and also that the other bill paid the debt to our ex-service men that is long past due.

The real opposition of the Alabama Power Co. is not due to any fear that Mr. Ford will not produce fertilizers, and neither is it because they are afraid that he can not reduce the price of fertilizer to the farmers, and neither is it because of the water power act, and neither is it because of the 100-year clause; no, it is none of these things, but it is something that Mr. Ford said on the 11th of October.

Mr. Ford said in part:

> The only thing that I could do at Muscle Shoals which I am not able to do elsewhere would be to make fertilizer for the farmers. * * * They may get other offers for every piece of Muscle Shoals, and the total sales price may compare favorably with the initial payment called for under my offer, but the sales price is the smallest item at Muscle Shoals. * * * It would be well worth while for the water power and fertilizer financiers who control this situation to pay $100,000,000 if thereby they retain the endless millions which they now make through exorbitant prices of power and fertilizer. The demonstration which we could make at Muscle Shoals would be a death blow to all such exploitation.

That would be enough to make the shivers run down the spines of those interested in the Alabama Power Co., but Mr. Ford had still a harder blow to deliver. Here it is:

> *My offer is still before Congress. I shall not withdraw it. * * * But I want to say this: If I get Muscle Shoals we shall run power lines 200 miles in every direction from Muscle Shoals. We have been working and have learned how to send power long distances without loss by leakage. I say this now for the benefit of the international financiers who, with the Alabama Power Co., have Muscle Shoals almost hopelessly in their grasp.*

The statement of Mr. Ford that "We shall run power lines 200 miles in every direction from Muscle Shoals" constitutes the real objection of Mr. Martin and his cohorts to the offer of Mr. Ford. They do not want Mr. Ford as a competitor. They know that the people of Alabama prefer the business methods of Mr. Ford to the business methods of the Alabama Power Co.

Mr. HULL has been so busy changing his mind that he evidently had forgotten the statement of Mr. Ford last October, but not so with Mr. Martin. Mr. Martin is hired to look after the interests of the stockholders of the Alabama Power Co. and is on the job for the people that he represents every minute.

This is not a fight between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

This is a fight between a company that, according to the Department of Justice, "lost no opportunity of turning to its own advantage every possible change of circumstances" and Mr. Ford, a man who has a world-wide reputation for square dealing.

This is a fight between the power companies' trust and the Fertilizer Trust, on the one hand, and those of us who believe in cheap fertilizer to the farmer in time of peace and air nitrates for explosives in time of war, on the other hand.

In conclusion I would remind Members of the House that we can not exaggerate the importance of a sufficient domestic supply of nitrogen for national defense. All explosives require it. Without it our Army and Navy are virtually at the mercy of any inferior enemy country.

According to testimony of Major Burns before our committee, nitrate plant No. 2 will fix enough nitrogen to supply explosives for 12 Army divisions fighting in accordance with the military organization as it existed at the time of the armistice. When our Army was engaged in the Meuse-Argonne offensive the maximum number of divisions available was 30. Nitrate plant No. 2, therefore, would have been capable of fixing more than one-third of the nitrogen required by a force equal to the greatest military effort that America was able to put forth in the World War.

We are the only great Nation which depends wholly upon Chile for military nitrates. During the war, when it seemed that the outcome would depend upon our ability to secure enough ships, and to get them quickly enough, we sought in nearly every port in the world for vessels with which to transport our men and supplies.

After a most desperate effort, by using German, Dutch, Scandinavian, and Japanese tonnage, we managed to build up a fleet of 616 ships, totaling 3,562,000 tons. Then those among us who had scoffed at section 124 of the national defense act, those who had declared that the need for nitrates was enormously exaggerated, learned a lesson, for no less than 128 of these precious carriers had to be diverted to the duty of bringing that one single essential material, nitrate of soda, from Chile. So vital was the necessity and so grave was the danger that a high official in the War Department declared that the loss of a single cargo of nitrate was as serious a disaster as the loss of a battleship.

In such a time of need, gentlemen, would you have this country rely upon an obsolete plant merely held in stand-by condition and which might easily be found to be wholly inadequate in a great emergency, or would you depend upon an operating plant—a going concern, thoroughly equipped with the most efficient and up-to-date processes, manned by a trained and experienced organization, all to be placed instantly at the command of the United States whenever needed in the national defense? There can be but one answer to such a question.

We have heard much argument that assumes that these idle plants constitute a great national asset of enormous value. I deny it. A great nitrogen industry at Muscle Shoals built up and successfully operated as a commercial enterprise would be a national asset, but one small, unsuccessful experimental nitrate plant and one large nitrate plant using a process that is utterly obsolete do not constitute any great national asset. Merely held in idleness they are an ever-increasing liability, costing more and more each year for their maintenance.

To make them of real value they must have the vitalizing influence of money, men, and management. All of these will be provided under the Ford offer for 100 years. Such an obligation to keep nitrate plant No. 2 in modern operating condition protects the public interest in a big, important way. In comparison the empty and unnecessary "regulations" of the Federal Power Commission shrink into insignificance.

Finally, I am for the Ford offer, not because it is made by Henry Ford, but because it is the only offer that provides for navigation on the Tennessee River; I am for the Ford offer because under it the industry will always be owned by Americans; I am for the Ford offer because it is the only offer that guarantees 2,000,000 tons of 2-8-2 commercial fertilizers to the farmers each year; I am for the Ford offer because it means cheap fertilizer to the farmers; and I am for the Ford offer because it is the only offer that guarantees to "maintain plant No. 2 in its present state of readiness or its equivalent for immediate operation in the manufacture of materials necessary in time of war for the production of explosives." [Applause.]

Mr. QUIN. How much time has the gentleman consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back seven minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. MORIN. I yield 40 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]. [Applause.]

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, there are four branches of this inquiry which I desire to submit to you. First, the violation of the settled policy of the Government contemplated by this bill; second, the utter inadequacy of the Ford offer; third, the fact that the system for the manufacture of fertilizers by nitrates is now in a condition of flux; fourth, I shall try to offer some constructive suggestions. The history of the water power act of 1920 and the development of a national policy in that regard is a long and interesting one. The final result was a policy of conservation for the general welfare which shows a more perfect attainment of helpful principles than any other branch of Government activity. That policy and the act referred to are far superior to any laws or regulations pertaining to forests, superior to laws relating to oils or to coal and minerals or any other great national asset which should be preserved for the future. This great act of 1920 stands out prominently as a final expression of the national will. It shows the strictest regard for the rights of the people and, what is quite as important, a broad vision looking to the future. In talking on this subject I shall endeavor to avoid all personal recriminations. I am not interested in any of the offers. I am not intending to advocate any of them, though at this time or another I may point out some of their advantages and some comparisons between them. There are outstanding facts and general principles which should control our action.

The great German poet, Goethe, said, "What a man earnestly desires in his youth that shall he have in its fullness in his old age," and there is no subject that has come before this Congress applicable to myself more than this. I feel comparatively young yet [applause], and I did not begin the consideration of this subject until I was of mature age. But I have been with this proposition 25 years.

Let me state briefly the history of water-power legislation and facts pertaining to it. The river and harbor acts of 1890 and 1899 adopted provisions preventing the location of obstacles in navigable streams and other navigable waters. The second act, or that of 1899, was somewhat stronger than that of 1890. The first required consent of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers; the second the consent of Congress. Somewhat later an act was passed embodying more advanced principles than any other for the construction of a dam at Hales Bar, below Chattanooga. This contained a provision by which the builders of the dam who were granted the license should build a lock and provide for navigation. They were compelled to face considerable difficulties, and to have several postponements, but that plan was accomplished and very substantially aided the navigation of the Tennessee River.

Down to the year 1900 there were 17 statutes passed by the Federal Congress granting the right to develop water power in navigable streams. Most of those rights were granted alongside of rapids and in especially favorable locations. There was at that time no perfect plan for the development of water power. From that time up to 1912, 78 acts were passed, and these showed the gradual growth of the policy of conservation.

Let me state it briefly. In 1903 an act was passed by Congress giving to one Thompson and others the right to build a dam in the Tennessee River. President Roosevelt vetoed that bill, saying that it did not sufficiently safeguard the navigation rights of the Government. The discussion will be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 4, 1903. Later than that, in the year 1906, and in a way prompted by this veto, although it was done somewhat tardily, the first general statute on this subject was passed.

This act provided that whenever authority is granted by Congress to construct a dam for water power crossing any of the navigable waters of the United States, drawings and a map must be submitted to the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers for their approval; and not until such approval shall the construction be commenced. The Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War may impose such conditions and stipulations as they may deem necessary to protect the present and future interests of the United States, which may include the condition that such persons shall construct, maintain, and operate, without expense to the United States in connection with said dam, a lock or locks, and booms, sluices, or any other structures. Also, that if a lock or other structure is constructed by the Government, the owners of the dam shall convey to the United States, free of cost, the title to the necessary land, and furnish the United States the free use of water power for building and operating such structure. The right to construct such locks is reserved, and the United States retains the right to control the level of the pool to the extent necessary to provide proper facilities for navigation. The owners shall be liable for damage inflicted upon private property, by overflow or otherwise, and shall maintain such fishways as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall prescribe. The authority gained shall cease unless construction is commenced within one year and completed within three years.

While that act was in force another bill was passed providing for the erection of a dam in the Rainy River, a boundary stream on the Canadian border. It was intended that it should embody all the provisions of the general act, and practically it did, but President Roosevelt promptly vetoed the bill and set forth four objections, as follows:

First. The grant should be annulled if the work was not begun and plans carried out in accordance with the authority granted.

Second. The proper official should see that in approving the plans the maximum development of navigation and power was assured.

Third. There should be a license fee or charge which, although small and nominal at the outset, could be adjusted in the public interest.

Fourth. There should be provision for the termination of the grant at a definite time, leaving the future to determine its course.

Notwithstanding that veto, another bill was passed providing for a dam in the James River, in Missouri. President Roosevelt promptly vetoed that. The Tennessee River seems to have been the storm center in this controversy. Another bill was passed in 1906 providing that any individual, company or corporation to which the right was granted by the State of Alabama might build a dam at Muscle Shoals. I am telling no secret when I say that President Roosevelt wrote out a veto message for that bill, but later he was prevailed upon to sign it. However, the very persons who promoted it most strongly later opposed it, and in the river and harbor act of 1907 a provision was incorporated that nothing should be done under the bill without further authorization by Congress.

Then in 1910 followed another general dam act, adding provisions to the prior act of 1906. It provided that in acting upon plans presented, the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War should consider the bearing of the structure or dam upon a comprehensive plan for the improvement of the waterway over which it was to be constructed, both as regards navigable quality and the full development of water power. There was another important section, the bearing of which upon the present proposal is important and will be explained later, authorizing the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War to fix and collect just and proper charge or charges for any direct benefits from the construction, operation, and maintenance by the United States of storage reservoirs at the headwaters of any navigable streams or from any forested watershed wherever intended for the development, improvement, or preservation of navigation in such streams in which such dams might be constructed. There was a provision that charges be paid for restoring the streams to navigability in case a project should be abandoned or the structures removed. There was a further clause that Congress might revoke any rights conferred in pursuance of the act whenever necessary for public use, and in the event of such revocation the United States should pay the owners the reasonable value, exclusive of the value of the franchise granted. Then followed an important provision. The authority granted should terminate at the end of a period not to exceed 50 years from the date of the original approval of the project. That was the beginning of the modern idea of a 50-year lease.

In the meantime this subject was elaborately considered by two commissions, one appointed by President Roosevelt and known as the Inland Waterways Commission, and the other created by Congress and known as the National Waterways Commission.

Numerous hearings were held, especially by this latter body, at which electrical and water-power engineers presented their views, and as a result of such hearings the great majority of those interested in the development of water power agreed upon the restrictions imposed by the acts of 1906 and 1910 and still further restrictions. A conservative opposition to these plans, however, was strong in Congress. Then, in the year 1912, occurred a discussion in the Senate upon a bill granting the right to a company to construct a dam in the Connecticut River between Hartford and Springfield. Under the terms of the proposed grant the licensee was to provide for the development of navigation around certain rapids, thereby extending navigation from Hartford to Springfield. The restrictions in the prior bills were incorporated and a further provision recommended by the Secretary of War, Mr. Stimson, to the effect that that official might impose a reasonable annual charge without depriving the company of a reasonable return, the proceeds to be used for the improvement of the Connecticut River. The company was to build locks free of charge and furnish power for their operation and was to pay compensation for lands taken or destroyed. Upon termination, the grant might be renewed or transferred, but in the latter event compensation must be paid. Majority and minority reports were filed upon this bill. The minority maintained that the authority to control water-power development belonged to the States and that the Federal Government could not exercise supervision, impose charges, or even withhold permission for a dam which would not interfere with navigation. There was a lengthy discussion, in the course of which it was maintained that the sole right to the utilization of water power in such streams belonged to the abutting owners. This view was shared also by prominent officials of the Government. It was also maintained that the Government had no right to impose charges or to control the method of development and distribution. This bill was so emasculated by amendments that those who advocated it in its original form voted against it.

In the meantime water-power development had been kept back by grasping, selfish interests, by a lack of thorough understanding of the mechanical phase of the problem, which made it impossible to properly develop power that now would be immensely profitable, by disputes relative to the control of the States and the Federal Government, and by a question as to the rights of the abutting owners as against the Federal Government. The view was maintained and even prevailed in the Senate that the Federal Government had but little to do with hydroelectric power, and that the right of development belonged to the abutting owner, who, it is true, must take that right subject to the paramount claims of navigation, but that he could use all the surplus power. This was contemporaneous with the increased use of electricity. Then came a judicial decision, which I trust the Members will examine if they are interested in this question, that of the United States against the Chandler-Dunbar Water Co., found in Two hundred and twenty-ninth United States, page 53. In this case the Chandler-Dunbar Water Co., had become the owners of a strip of land some 2,500 feet in length on St. Marys River, which connects Lake Superior and Lake Huron. Immediately adjacent to this strip the river has a very large flow and is in rapids. It was the contention of the company that they were entitled to enjoy the flow of this water, subject only to a paramount right of navigation, and as navigation was furnished by a lateral canal or canals, this alleged right assumed under their claim was of very great importance. In view of the obstacles threatened to governmental control, the river and harbor act of 1909 contained sections directing the condemnation of this property and the wiping out of this title. The company alleged that because of potential water power belonging to them very large damages, amounting to $3,500,000 or more, were due.

The court, however, by unanimous decision, rejected this claim, maintaining that the right of navigation was not only paramount, but since under that right the Federal Government had authority to grant or refuse permits to erect structures in the rivers or adjacent thereto necessary for the creation of water power, there was no beneficial ownership or privilege which the company could maintain. Hence it was entitled to a decision merely for the value of the upland bordering on the river, and the damages were reduced to a comparatively small sum. This sweeping decision establishes the principle that the Federal Government has full control of the development of water power in navigable streams, and it should be added that a river or stream is to be taken as an entirety, and the fact that it is not navigable in one portion, while navigable in another, does not take away the quality of navigability for the whole extent of the stream or river. Indeed, this principle might also be extended to tributaries. For a time there was no special interest in the development of water power. Numerous bills were introduced and considered. The pressing need for the development of water power in navigable streams and its great advantage for the conservation of coal was not fully realized until the scarcity of fuel in time of war created a pressing demand for the utilization of this very valuable asset. As the result of consideration by commissions and a recommendation by President Wilson, Secretary Houston and others, the Federal power act of 1920 was passed. The provisions of this statute may be grouped under the following main heads:

First. The organization of a Federal Power Commission—a bill treating this subject was reported by Mr. Esch in the House June 24, 1919. The commission is composed of the Secretaries of War, Interior, and Agriculture, and is authorized to make investigations of power possibilities. It may report whenever it thinks the United States should undertake any project and possesses divers other powers for carrying out the purposes of the act.

It has authority to issue licenses for power projects, including the authority to issue preliminary permits authorizing preliminary work. These licenses pertain to inauguration of power projects on navigable streams, on public lands, and on reservations. Licenses affecting navigable streams shall be approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War. States and municipalities shall have the preference. The licenses shall not extend more than 50 years and shall be conditioned upon prompt inauguration of the construction work. Licenses may not be transferred without the approval of the commission. After the first 20 years of operation, any excess over a reasonable return shall be paid into an amortization fund. The licensee shall pay a fixed fee to defray the cost of administering the act and for use of Government lands and property.

Second. Combinations and agreements to restrain trade or raise prices are prohibited.

Third. There are provisions for navigation.

Fourth. The Government may purchase after the expiration of the license, but must give not less than two years' notice.

Fifth. Miscellaneous provisions. When the public safety requires it, the Government may enter temporarily upon any project and operate it for the making of explosives, and so forth, paying just compensation therefor. The condemnation power of States and of the Federal Government is expressly reserved.

There are several manifest objects in the act which are essential for the public interest. One is that so far as possible there shall be such joining of projects that water power may be developed on a comprehensive plan over the largest possible area. For instance, permits have been granted for projects which may be interlocked from Medford, Oreg., to the southern boundary of California. It is obvious that waterfalls may supply sufficient amount of power in one watershed while there is deficiency in another and the two should be hooked together.

Every provision is made to prevent monopoly or giving any industrial concern an advantage by the possession of an unusual amount of power. This does not mean that plans have not been approved on a colossal scale. For example, the Southern California Edison Co. has obtained permits and has applications pending for developments which involve an expenditure of $375,000,000.

What has the power commission done in something more than three years of its existence? Applications have been presented involving an estimated installation of 21,500,000 horsepower. Permits and licenses have been issued having an aggregate installation of 7,500,000 horsepower and 2,400,000 have been built or are building under license of the commission. In this period the commission has dealt with applications involving six times as much horsepower, issued permits involving three times as much, and twice as much has been built or is building, as the individual departments or Congress, working independently in the preceding 20 years, had authorized. Only 1,400,000 horsepower had been constructed under Federal authority in the years preceding the passage of the act, and at the time of its passage the aggregate installation in all water-power plants in the United States amounted to only 9,000,000 horsepower. Special attention is to be called to the fact that the Federal Power Commission is not a separate bureau or department, but the coordination of three departments in one body. In the development of what is called superpower, the impression has gained ground that the term applies to the adoption of methods not hitherto employed and the use of equipment or stations of a size and efficiency hitherto unknown. This impression is not correct. It means that existing generating stations shall be electrically interconnective, and the gradual extension of existing systems shall be under such conditions that when they meet they may be interconnected and operated as a single system. The number of applications up to date is about 368, of which 117 pertain to locations in the State of California.

It is stated in the majority report that Mr. Ford is entitled to 100 years because he takes upon himself conditions that are not assumed by the general grantee of water power under this act, and it was stated here in discussion yesterday, as I understand it, that Mr. Ford is the only man who has offered to throw open his books to public authorities. Well, now, let me show how absolutely superficial and incorrect those ideas are, and let me show in that same connection the vital difference between the Ford offer and the established policy of this country as embodied in that act. Why, my friends, I would just as soon vote for cracking the Budget act as I would vote for disregarding this act. After years of struggle, during which some of us incurred a great deal of obloquy and had to face opposition, that statute was enacted, and it ought to stand as one of the things not to be shaken but that must remain. [Applause.]

Now, let me point out the differences between this act and the Ford plan, and in doing so it will be necessary to repeat some things mentioned above: First, section 4, subdivision (f). The commission has the right to examine all books and accounts of licensees at any time; to require them to submit statements and reports; and there are severe penalties for deceit. Ah, Mr. Ford was not the first to think of this, because it was carried in the water power act before he ever made his offer.

Section 6, licenses are limited to 50 years. Preference is given to States and municipalities in the granting of permits.

SEC. 10 (a). The project adopted must be such as in the judgment of the commission will be best adapted for a comprehensive scheme of improvement and utilization for the purposes of navigation, water-power development, and other beneficial uses.

Let me say that if there is one thing which is objectionable in the pending bill it is the proposition to give one of the best water powers in the country to a man who can use it in the manufacture of articles in his own industry. If Mr. Ford is intending to extend lines two or three hundred miles away from Muscle Shoals, I ask you gentlemen in charge of the measure to put that in this bill. [Applause.] What he said before the committee investigating the matter did not sound in that way.

The next provision is that reasonable annual charges shall be fixed by the commission, and the Government can appropriate excessive profits. With the greatest care it is provided that either by a State commission or by the Federal Government the charges shall be made reasonable; and again with the greatest care, as I have already stated, this water power must be available, not in one section alone, not to one individual or company, but to the whole people of the United States, and that is the fundamental idea of the act of 1920. [Applause.]

Then, here is an important provision: Whenever any licensee is directly benefited by the construction by another licensee or by the United States of a storage reservoir or other headwater improvement, the commission shall require that the licensee so benefited shall reimburse the owner of such reservoir for such part of the annual charges for interest, maintenance, depreciation, and so forth, as the commission may deem equitable. That is particularly important in the Tennessee River, and I might as well say right here and now that within two days leading engineers of this Government have told me that with the development of water power in the Little Tennessee, the Catawba, and other tributaries of the Tennessee, and in the Tennessee itself in the upper portion, by equalizing the flow, the primary power at Muscle Shoals will be doubled. One engineer said he would not wish to say that this would be accomplished in less than 50 years, while another said—and the first one then agreed with him—it would be done in 25 years. Now, just see how important that is. All of our present computations are based upon the amount of primary power now developed, but this growth—which is inevitable and which is carefully provided for in the water power act and under which there must be compensation—goes to Mr. Ford, almost doubling the value of his rights there without any equivalent. There is a special paragraph relating to reservoirs constructed by the Government.

It is provided in another section that after the expiration of the license the Government may take over any project on making payment in the manner provided.

Then there is this vital provision; that any project licensed under this act may at any time be acquired by the Government by condemnation proceedings on payment of just compensation.

Now, what was the object? Those who framed that bill were farseeing. They knew that water power would develop in the course of time and be a much more important asset than now, and they realized that the time might come when it would be necessary to expropriate, here and there, a section of that which is a natural part of a national system.

Who knows what development will occur in the use of water power in 100 years? Science is making rapid progress, and often there is a revolution in methods and processes in a single year. The very general conviction of chemists is that the problem of the fixation of nitrogen has not yet been satisfactorily solved.

Who knows what will happen in 50 years? It was the conviction that a better utilization of water power might be secured by Government control that caused the framers of the power act of 1920 and those who wrote the bills of 1910 and 1920 to establish a limit of 50 years.

We all know that we may take two watersheds and there may be a scarcity in one when there is a plentitude of water in the other, and vice versa. The whole idea was to create, as far as possible, one complete system, and that no one should have a link in that system which he could withhold for himself to the detriment of the general interest.

Oh, they said so much about another matter. They said that Mr. Ford was entitled to especial credit, because he agreed to turn this over to the Government for the manufacture of explosives in case of war. What a fine offer that is. Why, gentlemen, did you know that is in every license that is issued by the Government, in this language:

> Whenever, in the opinion of the President, the safety of the United States demands it, for the purposes of manufacturing nitrates, explosives, or munitions of war, the United States shall have the right to enter upon and take possession of any project constructed, maintained, or operated under said license.

There is another requirement which should be in the present proposed grant, in order that it may be in line with both the spirit and the letter of the Federal power act, namely, a clause to the effect that in case Mr. Ford fails to manufacture nitrates for fertilizer, the grant is void. The sole object of this proposed bill, aside from having the plant ready for the manufacture of explosives under the control of the Government, is the manufacture of fertilizer, and if that purpose fails, the grant should fail.

Now, is it fair, when these requirements are imposed in every grant, when that policy is so salutary for the future, to say we will give to a man, perhaps the wealthiest man in the world, a special privilege? I do not blame Mr. Ford. It is one of the consolations of our life here below that what helps others incidentally sometimes helps ourselves, and oftentimes the incident is far more prominent than the principal fact. Notwithstanding the glowing promises contained in the bill, its conditions and restrictions in favor of the grantee are such that there is no reliable assurance that fertilizer for the farmer will be manufactured at all.

I have listened here about the altruism of Mr. Ford until I am a little bit tired. As I think I shall show, he would obtain by this an unprecedentedly favorable bargain. It is his right to obtain as good a bargain as he can, but I object to his obtaining it at the expense of the American people and to the detriment of those who have submitted themselves to the law and to a policy thoroughly established, when it is for his sole benefit, whether it be in this or in any other contract. [Applause.] What may we say to the others who have submitted to these conditions, whose permits have been issued with all these conditions in them, and who altogether outclass in quantity of horsepower, what Mr. Ford would develop at this point?

I would like now to go into the question at some length of how much horsepower there is at Muscle Shoals. The primary horsepower at Dam No. 2 is about 100,000, and by primary horsepower we mean the all-year-around horsepower which is there during low water as well as during high water. The installation at that dam provides for 624,000 horsepower. There is a steam plant constructed by the Government which furnishes 80,000 horsepower. The other dam, No. 3, if it is built—and I want to say in this connection I do not think it is pressing to build Dam No. 3 at this time. It is very uncertain what the foundation is. I have been over the Tennessee River from one end to the other. When they built the dam at Hales Bar they thought it would cost $3,000,000. The foundation was treacherous and before they got through with it it cost them $11,000,000, and while the estimate on this dam is the enormous sum of $25,000,000, I am not at all sure that that will be sufficient for its completion. Far and away more power than is required for fertilizer can be obtained from Dam No. 2 and the steam plant with it. The average amount of horsepower for the year at that dam, with the other installations contemplated in this bill, is 480,000. All that Mr. Ford agrees to use is enough to make 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen, which requires 100,000 horsepower.

Mr. ALMON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. I would rather not until I am somewhat further along. I hope to have time later to yield to questions.

Mr. ALMON. I simply thought the gentleman would not want to make a misstatement.

Mr. BURTON. I have a statement here from the secretary of the Water Power Commission. I am not relying on outside sources. I have been going to the officials of the Government in every case and I have not gone outside. [Applause.] I will add a statement from the executive secretary of the Federal Power Commission:

MARCH 4, 1924.

Hon. THEODORE E. BURTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BURTON: With reference to your telephone inquiries about maximum power available at Muscle Shoals, I submit the following:

The ultimate installation now proposed at Dam No. 2 is 624,000 horsepower and at Dam No. 3, 250,000 horsepower, or an aggregate of 874,000 horsepower. There is now in operation as a part of nitrate plant No. 2 a steam plant of 60,000 kilowatts, or 80,000 horsepower capacity. It is proposed, under the provisions of H. R. 518, to supply funds for the construction of a power plant at Dam No. 17, on the Black Warrior River, of a capacity of 40,000 horsepower, making a total of 120,000 horsepower of steam capacity and an aggregate capacity of hydro and steam of 994,000 horsepower. If these plants are operated on a 75 per cent daily load factor, they will be able to turn out, when sufficient water is flowing in the Tennessee River, an average daily output of 645,000 horsepower. Our estimates show that in the average year this installation could turn out an average daily output throughout the year of 480,000 horsepower, of which about 300,000 horsepower would be primary power and the remaining 180,000 horsepower secondary power.

Very truly yours,

O. C. MERRILL,
Executive Secretary.

I emphasize the overwhelming unfairness of making an exception in this case and a departure from a policy adopted after a long contest and struggle. What policy of economy or conservation of public rights or interests can we insist upon if we throw this away, and there are possibilities there, my friends, that make Teapot Dome look like a bagatelle [applause] and Mr. Doheny and Mr. Sinclair as men whose injured innocence should be forever vindicated. [Laughter.]

Among other things, the steam plant at Dam No. 2 is now leased on a basis that furnishes an income of $350,000 a year, $120,000 being the basic price, and additions being made according to quantity. For this there is an outstanding offer of $4,500,000. Computed at even 5 per cent this is paying a return on $7,000,000, $2,000,000 more than the amount of Mr. Ford's offer.

The gross income for water power, including the power for fertilizer and the additional 40,000 horsepower, in accordance with the offer of Mr. Ford, has been estimated by competent engineers as $9,300,000. After deducting operating expenses, including an allowance for depreciation of $3,000,000, there would be left a net profit of $6,300,000.

Yet it is said the farmers of the country are in favor of this. We all have regard for the farmer. I will go as far as anyone in utilizing the power at Muscle Shoals for the manufacture of fertilizer, of which the farmers are in urgent need. We must admit, with some abatement of national pride, that while the yield of wheat in this country averages 14 to 15 bushels per acre, in England, France, and Germany the yield is 25 bushels or even more. One main reason for this disparity is the absence of sufficient fertilizer. But in performing our duty to the Government we should be sure that an adequate price is paid for property which cost approximately $100,000,000, and that there be assurance that the objects desired, namely, the supply of fertilizers in peace and material for explosives in war, may be properly secured. I want to read to you a letter from a member of a leading farm association just received this morning. I would not be surprised if you received copies of it yourselves to-morrow morning. It is from Mr. W. I. Drummond, chairman of the board of governors of the International Farm Congress of America:

Hon. THEODORE E. BURTON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In the opening debate in the House on Muscle Shoals statements were made to the effect that the farmers of the country are practically unanimous in demanding the acceptance of the Ford offer.

It is only fair to the Members who are to shortly cast their votes on this important proposition that they know the facts in this connection, especially if their votes are to be influenced by farm sentiment.

There are five major groups of organized farmers in the United States. Their respective records on this question are as follows—

I ask the special attention of those of you who represent farm constituencies, and I represent one in part. I have not heard a word from them in favor of the Ford offer.

The National Grange has never indorsed the Ford offer. At its last annual meeting a resolution to do so was rejected. The grange reported a paid membership of 601,086 last year.

The National Board of Farm Organizations, which met in Washington only three weeks ago, refused to consider a resolution indorsing the Ford offer. This group includes the Farmers' Union, the strong milk producers' organizations, and some others, with a total membership reported to be in excess of 600,000.

The National Council of Cooperative Marketing Associations, which also met in Washington within the past month, ignored the entire Muscle Shoals proposition. The paid membership of the associations composing this group is officially reported to exceed 500,000.

The Farm Congress has rejected every effort to approve the Ford offer in its present form, holding it to be in violation of sound economic and conservation principles. The Farm Congress, including affiliating bodies and delegate feature, represents a very large number of farmers, possibly larger than any other group.

And if it is not in violation of conservation principles, I do not know what conservation is. [Applause.]

The American Farm Bureau Federation, which alone is urging the acceptance of the Ford offer, had 392,580 paid members last year, according to the official report of its secretary and treasurer. In addition, it is claimed that dues representing nearly 200,000 more local members did not reach the national treasury, which would make a total membership of about 600,000.

These are the facts, as the available records will show. No Member should vote for the Ford offer in the belief that he is thereby carrying out the desire of the farmers.

W. I. DRUMMOND.

I now pass to the question of the adequacy of the Ford offer of $5,000,000 for the nitrate plants and other property. Why, gentlemen, if you should go to a private individual with such an offer—if you should go to a single official of the Government—he would laugh you out of court on the ground that it was ridiculous. Five million dollars! That is probably more than any of us have, but let us see what he is to get. Out of the $5,000,000, $3,400,000 and slightly more is to be expended by the Government for the building of a plant of 40,000 horsepower, equivalent to the Gorgas plant at Muscle Shoals, leaving only about $1,600,000. An able engineer told me—and I think he is perfectly right—that it is absurd to build that plant down there where the Alabama Power Co. built one, because the foundation and the installation and everything necessary for building an additional plant carrying 40,000 horsepower is right there at dam No. 2, and the additional expense would be about half as much as the cost of the proposed plant.

Now, what does Mr. Ford get? Ninety-two million dollars worth of property, with a scrap value of $16,000,000 as computed by one Government official. Two thousand three hundred acres of land at nitrate plant No. 2, and 1,900 or 1,700 at the other.

Why, there is a real-estate speculation down there the like of which was hardly ever known in the country. Here is an extract from one of their circulars: "Henry Ford said, 'I will employ 1,000,000 men. I will build a city 75 miles long at Muscle Shoals.'" They have been advertising lots away outside of the 2,300 and 1,900 acres which are far less valuable and much less desirable than those to be sold to Mr. Ford, and there is a surplus there of nearly 4,000 acres that Mr. Ford, if he buys this property, can sell. In a few years land will be worth $3,000 or $4,000 an acre. There are located on that property houses in a very considerable number, some three or four hundred. Sewers have been built. Let me show you some of the expenses paid by the Government.

In the village at nitrate plant No. 1 $2,526,000 have been expended. Public works, water, and so forth, cost $1,026,000. All this now belongs to the Government. The shops we will not count in. Then at nitrate plant No. 2. On the village they expended $3,120,000; public works, $8,843,000. That property is right there that Mr. Ford is to get for this ostensible offer of $5,000,000, when he really pays but a little over a million and a half dollars.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman agree with the President when he said that in a matter of this magnitude the financial benefit to the Government was not a major consideration.

Mr. BURTON. I do not believe that we should give away this property.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BURTON. I must decline to yield any further.

Now, upon the location of the plant and the advertisement of that real estate many were taking up land anywhere in the neighborhood. They rode over it in automobiles, some on horseback, some had their hats on, and others were in such a hurry that they rushed on after their hats had blown off. They advertised in glowing language that the soil was alluvial and the climate salubrious, and it would only require them to go a little further to say that it was as fair as a resurrection morning. [Laughter.] Four thousand acres of land of this enormous value we are asked to give away. What does Mr. Ford need of 4,200 acres of land? What does anyone in the development of this property need of 4,200 acres of land? What need has he to utilize the houses that have been built there? Such a sacrifice of Government property easily worth more than $20,000,000 I can not contemplate without a feeling that we are recreant in our duty. [Applause.]

My friends, I have twice before on a similar question been in the minority. I do not quite feel that I shall be in the minority this time. In 1906 I opposed with all my might that bill allowing an individual or company or corporation to build dams at Muscle Shoals. My, what a woodpile I brought down on my head! "I will beat it; I will beat it," a Member from the locality, not now a Member, said. But it passed and was approved by President Roosevelt. I told them they could not develop it in that way. It was not worth while. They sent down a couple of engineers, and they came to the same conclusion. What did those who had been attacking me do? They sent telegrams to me at Washington asking me to prevent the operation of that bill, and there was inserted in the river and harbor act of 1907—this is all a matter of record—a provision that nothing should be done under that act granting authority to locate dams there without further authorization by Congress, and Congress never has acted upon the matter since that time and never will. In 1912 it was stated that those who favored conservation were wrong on the law; grave ex-judges said the abutting property owner had the ownership of the water power; yet within six months along came this decision of the Supreme Court in the case of the United States against the Chandler-Dunbar Co., which vindicated the position we had taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. BURTON. Before I come to some constructive suggestions I would like to read the minutes of what I have obtained from officials of the Government in regard to the manufacture of nitrates, but I am afraid of two things—first, it would take too much time, and, second, it is too technical; and so I shall insert the minutes in the RECORD. Generally speaking, the process employed at plant No. 2 is the cyanamide process. That requires for 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen contained within calcium cyanimide, about 100,000 horsepower. The latest developments have been unfavorable to this method. Mr. Ford in his offer evidently contemplates the use of the cyanamide process, because he says he shall not be under obligation to manufacture at nitrate plant No. 1. Nitrate plant No. 1 has been completed and has proved a failure. It was intended for what is called the synthetic ammonia or Haber process. Great improvements have been made in this recently. I wish to give credit to a young man who came to the Capitol and spent a day with me, Mr. Braham, who is in the nitrogen department of the Department of Agriculture. Professor Cottrell, of the same department, has accomplished great results in this regard. Both have so thoroughly studied this subject that I think they ought to be mentioned here. Mr. Braham, with another, was abroad in Germany last year and reports that the synthetic ammonia or Haber process as modified is now coming into great use in Germany. It is used at two places, Oppau and Merseburg, and at the latter place five times as much nitrate is manufactured as is contemplated at Muscle Shoals, and that, too, with the use of brown coal. The Haber process in a general way contemplates throwing steam over incandescent or burning coke and then putting it through a pipe with an immense pressure, going out into a retort to be mixed with what are called catalysts, which aid hydrogen from the steam to combine with nitrogen in the air and with certain chemicals to make sulphate of ammonia or some similar substance. We do not know whether the profitable manufacture of cyanamide will be possible or not. It takes only about 30 to 35 per cent as much power to make an equivalent amount of fertilizer by the modified Haber process as does the cyanamide method, and we might find if this process were perfected that we had an obsolete process on our hands, and Mr. Ford might find the same also. The following is a statement relating to the two processes:

For the purpose of manufacturing fixed nitrogen by the cyanamide process, nitrate plant No. 2 is as good a plant as any in the world.

Cyanamide is one form of fixed nitrogen. It has a weight of 45 to 50 pounds per cubic foot. It is of a dark grayish color, somewhat resembling powdered coal, but with a grayish tint. It contains from 20 to 23 per cent nitrogen. Cyanamide for the most part is not used direct for fertilizing purposes, though it is used quite extensively in Germany.

Nitrogen constitutes about 80 per cent in volume of the atmosphere. When in the air it is called free nitrogen, but when separated from the air and combined with other elements it is called fixed nitrogen. Calcium carbide is the substance which is combined with nitrogen. The main use of power is in the production of this calcium carbide. The elements in its manufacture are limestone and coke or coal. The limestone is taken and burned. The product is mixed in a proportion of one part lime and five-tenths to six-tenths part of coal or coke. The limestone and the coal or coke are placed in an electric furnace which is heated to a high temperature of about 2,000° centigrade. Here is where the power is required.

The detachment of nitrogen from the air is a much easier process. The nitrogen is separated from the oxygen in the air and the carbide is treated with the nitrogen at a high temperature of 1,000° centigrade. The product is called calcium cyanamide. In Germany and other European countries various kinds of oil are sprayed upon the calcium cyanamide, which is in the form of a very fine powder and difficult to handle. It is then scattered upon the land as a fertilizer. The value of the calcium cyanamide is about $55 per ton.

In this country fertilizers are usually made up of mixtures. One of the principal constituents of fertilizers used in this country is acid phosphate. Only relatively small quantities of calcium cyanamide can safely be used in connection with acid phosphate. Phosphate rock is worth $4 to $5 per ton. When treated with acid it is worth $8 to $10 per ton. Only 50 to 60 pounds of calcium cyanamide could be used in making a ton of fertilizer in combination with acid phosphate. The above-named mixture is sometimes further used with potash salts, which can be used in any quantity.

The demand in the country would not exceed more than forty to fifty thousand tons of calcium cyanamide. This creates a limitation on the use of the plant. Fifty thousand tons of calcium cyanamide would not be more than about 20 per cent of the possible output of the plant as it now is; that is, 250,000 tons or more could be produced there.

Calcium cyanamide, when treated with steam under pressure, yields ammonia gas. From this gas a large number of nitrogen fertilizer salts can be produced. Taking this gas produced from the calcium cyanamide and passing it into sulphuric acid produces ammonium sulphate, which can be used directly on the land, but is usually employed in combination with other fertilizer materials—acid phosphate, for example.

Some addition would have to be made to nitrate plant No. 2 to make this sulphate of ammonia. There is a certain amount of equipment brought there from the Old Hickory Powder Plant which has not been set up; but, when set up, this would not be sufficient to utilize the total possible output of calcium cyanamide.

Another important fertilizer is sodium nitrate, imported from Chile, the value of which when landed in American ports is about $50 per ton. The British control about 25 per cent of the capital engaged in the mining and shipment of Chilean nitrates. Chilean nitrate and sulphate of ammonia made from the production of coke ovens have been the principal sources of fertilizer. It should be said that in addition to artificial fertilizers use is made of barnyard manure, cottonseed meal, tankage, dried blood, and so forth, from meat-packing plants, fish scraps, and other similar substances.

The present value of sulphate of ammonia is about $58 per ton. Twenty pounds of fixed nitrogen would be somewhat above the average used per acre. This would mean 100 pounds of sulphate of ammonia. Twenty per cent is the usual content of fixed nitrogen in ammonium sulphate. The manufacture of sodium nitrate is to be ruled out because it can not be made by artificial processes to compete with the natural product coming from Chile.

Plant No. 2 is equipped to make ammonium nitrate. This is made by the same process as the ammonium sulphate, except that nitric acid is used instead of sulphuric acid. The nitrogen content of ammonium nitrate is 35 per cent. Ammonium nitrate is an ingredient in the manufacture of powder, and it was for making this that the plant was built. Ammonium nitrate would cost more than ammonium sulphate about in the proportion of the amount of nitrogen content; that is, 35 to 20. Ammonium nitrate can be used for fertilizer, but it is inconvenient because it absorbs moisture from the atmosphere, thus becoming a gummy mass, hard to scatter. Experiments are being made in mixing chemical elements with which to obviate this difficulty.

The amount of water power that would be required to manufacture 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen would be approximately 100,000 horsepower.

The Haber or synthetic ammonia process used at nitrate plant No. 1 is capable of developments which it is believed will result in lower costs for fixed atmospheric nitrogen. There are two plants in Germany, one at Oppau, another at Merseburg. The latter produces five times the amount which could be produced at Muscle Shoals. Brown coal is the source of power. Nitrate plant No. 2 does not seem to offer much chance of price reduction, because to use it for the Haber process would necessitate rebuilding.

There are plants in Germany similar to that at Muscle Shoals, where more power is used than at the plants mentioned. The process used in these two German plants is the direct combination of hydrogen and nitrogen to form ammonia. The principal cost of producing fixed nitrogen by this process is that of hydrogen production. At the German plants hydrogen is produced by passing steam through incandescent coke and requires only approximately 35 per cent of the electric power that is required by the cyanamide process. If the hydrogen is produced by the electrolytic decomposition of water, the electric-power requirement is somewhat in excess of that required by the cyanamide process per ton of nitrogen fixed. These are the two principal methods for the production of hydrogen for use in the synthetic ammonia or Haber process for fixing atmospheric nitrogen.

For the fixation of nitrogen by this process nitrogen obtained from the air and hydrogen obtained either by electrolytic decomposition of water or by treatment of coal and steam are mixed and passed through an apparatus at a pressure of 1,500 pounds per square inch or higher at a temperature of 500° centigrade. This apparatus contains material known as a catalytic agent, which promotes the reaction between nitrogen and hydrogen to form ammonia. The product is a gas at a certain pressure and a liquid at a higher pressure and can be converted into several different nitrogen materials suitable for fertilizer and other uses. By combination with sulphuric acid it yields ammonium sulphate, by combination with nitric acid it yields ammonium nitrate, with phosphoric acid it yields ammonium phosphate, and with carbon dioxide it yields urea.

A new type of catalyst has been discovered by the fixed nitrogen research laboratory of the Department of Agriculture which will unquestionably lead to important improvements in the Haber process, resulting in lower operating costs.

The upshot of all this is that improved methods and more economic production are more likely to come from a modification of the Haber process at plant No. 1 than from the use of plant No. 2. About $2,000,000 would be required for the remodeling of plant No. 1 in order to use the latest improved discoveries. It has one-fifth the capacity of plant No. 2.

The Alabama Power Co.'s offer is to begin with a production of 5,000 tons per annum and gradually increase to 50,000 tons if demands increase. To repeat, there is not a present demand for 40,000 tons of nitrogen in the form of cyanamide, and sulphate of ammonia now sells at so high a price as not to be attractive to the farmer. If the 40,000 tons of nitrogen content appeared in 200,000 tons of ammonium sulphate there would not be a demand for it at the present market prices. In fact, about one-third of the ammonium sulphate now produced is exported to Japan.

Because of transportation and distribution costs it has been figured that even at the maximum production at Muscle Shoals the farmer would gain little benefit from its operations. The natural course to pursue would be to operate plant No. 2 with the cyanamide process while No. 1 is being developed and enlarged for the Haber process, and in time No. 2 would probably be abandoned. Plant No. 1 would require new apparatus in large part, to be worked even under the original Haber process, and for the improved Haber process would require very substantial apparatus. The design for remodeling has already been prepared under the supervision of the nitrate division of the War Department.

The tendency will be toward the requirement of smaller and smaller amounts of power in the fixation of nitrogen. On the basis of an experimental trial, after the plant was completed in 1919 it was computed that the cost of producing fixed nitrogen was somewhat less than the market prices. This estimate made no allowance for interest on capital cost, but did make an allowance of $15 to $18 as the cost of each horsepower.

I hasten to make some constructive suggestions. Bitterly opposed as I am to Government ownership and operation, I would a great deal rather see the plant completed and even operated by the Government of the United States than to give it to Ford under any such terms as are proposed. [Applause.] Our engineers are at work upon Dam No. 2. This bill contemplates the disbandment of the Government forces, and let me call your attention to the chaos that would be created by that. There is a force there, with the necessary superintendents, of 4,000 men, that have been at work upon it for months. They are under the control of the engineers, whose work has been faithfully and well done. The moment you pass this bill these men must be discharged. You will discharge those who are familiar with the work, unless Mr. Ford chooses to engage them again. The superintendents must go, and you would create a wrench that would be very disastrous.

Mention has been made of what the President said. Just what did he say in regard to Muscle Shoals? I read:

> Such a solution will involve complicated negotiations, and there is no authority for that purpose. I therefore recommend that the Congress appoint a small joint committee to consider offers, conduct negotiations, and report definite recommendations.

I do not want to see this matter delayed. The reason that some of you may vote for this bill is that you think there has been some sinister influence against the work and that it has been delayed. The Federal Power Commission might seek the best possible offers. Mr. Hoover might be added. The engineers promise that they can have the Dam No. 2 finished by the 1st of July, 1925. A commission, made up of Members of Congress, might be chosen. Let them go to it, let the engineers finish the work just as soon as they can; but in the meantime, I say, some attention should be given to the relative merits of the cyanamide and the Haber processes and this new process which has been greatly facilitated by the discovery in our own nitrogen division of the Department of Agriculture.

I tell you, gentlemen, that we have some fine men in our respective departments, as scientific as any in the world [applause], and they are working for the Government. They are working for you; they are working for me. Credit, I believe, has been given outside, but the real credit belongs, I believe, to that nitrogen laboratory down there for discovering that new catalyst which makes results so much easier. I am not here to advocate the Alabama Power Co., or the offer that I consider the best of the three—the so-called Hooker-Atterbury offer, which contemplates giving the profits to the Government, and which would be undertaken by men who are highly skilled in the chemical business. But I do not want to see this Congress do something that is ridiculous. I have never been one of those who cared very much whether he had vindication by a majority vote or not. I am satisfied with the position that I have taken upon this. We must appeal, all of us, to the future, that great judge of human action. I am ready to stand by the warning that I have given to this House to-day, confident that if you carry out this plan, if you pass this bill, in the future condemnation will rest on Congress for having done an unwise, yes, a foolish and a wasteful thing, one in which the rights of the country which we represent were utterly disregarded. [Applause.]

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. FISHER].

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Chairman, I hesitate even to suggest an inaccuracy in the remarks made by the very distinguished Member from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], but when there is before this body so serious a matter as the decision as to whether or not we are to accept this great offer for our Nation, I must call attention to the remarks of the distinguished Member on yesterday as to the amount of power to be used in the fertilizer program set forth in this offer. The figures given were grossly inadequate. The suggestion that only eight or nine thousand horsepower would be used in the manufacture of 40,000 tons of nitrogen is not the amount given in the hearings. The proof there develops that the minimum power to be used in the operation of the large nitrate plant No. 2 would be 100,000 horsepower, which is quite different from the smaller amount suggested.

The proposition we have here to-day is not one controlled by the Federal water power act, for when the Congress passed the national defense act in 1916 authorizing and providing for a nitrate program the water power at Muscle Shoals, when that place was designated, became a part of the nitrate program. The use of coal was too expensive, except for a war proposition, and during the time of peace the water power would be produced cheap enough to make nitrates for fertilizer.

The construction of the Wilson Dam was begun and it was to be an essential part of the nitrate program. When the armistice came and the activities in the huge nitrate plants were stopped, the great project was a tremendous burden on the Government. Work was stopped on the dam, and the upkeep of the whole project was a heavy expense. The Government has spent several hundred thousand dollars in upkeep of the buildings since the armistice.

The Secretary of War sought private bids to take over the whole project and thus relieve the Government. There were no offers made, but Henry Ford was asked to make a bid. This offer of a contract which we are considering to-day is a result of many conferences between the Government's representatives and Mr. Ford. The question under discussion in these conferences was as to a contract to be made between the Government and Mr. Ford. The unfinished dam and the terms as to its completion were parts of the discussion leading up to the drawing of the proposed contract or offer, and it was always understood that the lease was to extend for 100 years.

In the hearings the question as to the Federal water power act was discussed, and Mr. Ford's representatives always insisted that the lease would have to be for 100 years; otherwise he could not undertake to handle the great project.

Mr. Mayo stated:

Well, on account of the size of the project and the immense amount of capital necessary to develop it to such an extent that we can use all the power, Mr. Ford felt that in 50 years he would perhaps only have made a good start (p. 296).

We realize it; yes, sir. The point is if the offer is accepted we will have such a very large investment at Muscle Shoals in the course of the next 10 or 15 years that we could not afford to risk that much of an investment there and run the risk of having the power end of it cut from under our feet at the end of 50 years (p. 243).

It was made clear in the hearings that, outside of a great development in industries at or near Muscle Shoals, there was proposed the possibility of building storage reservoirs which would increase the primary horsepower. It will be seen that the question of the length of the lease is a vital one in the acceptance of the offer.

The main question before the Congress in this offer is not water-power development, but it is the opportunity to get in our country a supply of nitrates which will more nearly supply the growing demands. Our country is now the only great Nation depending wholly for the greater portion of its nitrate needs upon Chile. We get nearly three-fourths of our supply from that country. The natural supply there is greater by far than that in any other country.

A nation ought not to have to depend on a foreign supply of so vital a thing as nitrates, and with that supply located thousands of miles away and in a foreign country. Nitrates are needed in every form of ammunition used by our Army; in smokeless powder, nitroglycerin, picric acid, T. N. T., and, in fact, is necessary in all explosives.

General Beach said before the committee:

I can not understand anybody who is acquainted with the conditions being willing to put the United States in such a position that in case of hostilities it would have to depend upon securing its nitrates from a foreign source of supply (p. 103).

The conditions surrounding the supply in Chile are most unsatisfactory. During the first year of the Great War in 1914 the Germans had a fleet off the coast of Chile, which interfered with the Allies in their effort to transport the much-needed nitrates. When we entered the war it became necessary to utilize 128 of the large ships to bring the supply to this country, and the ships were badly needed in the transportation of our troops and supplies to France. The need for nitrates was so great that there was a record of one month when 370,000 tons of nitrates were brought to this country.

Outside of the great distance from the supply the conditions in Chile are not satisfactory. We are the largest buyers and have nothing to say about the price. The prices and distribution are controlled by a committee with a subcommittee in London and Berlin. The Government of Chile places an export tax of eleven and twelve dollars on each ton. If for no other reason than the national defense the great opportunity offered in this contract to keep in running shape the nitrate plant No. 2, which has a capacity of 40,000 tons of nitrate a year, should be accepted. This would supply the nitrates needed for the ammunition of 12 divisions of our Army in actual warfare.

As great as our need is for a supply of nitrates in our own country for ammunition for our Army, there is another field where the great activities for the production of nitrates provided for in the offer would be of tremendous help to our country. The nitrates made in peace time and into a commercial fertilizer at a greatly reduced price would be a wonderful relief to the farmers. The provisions of the contract as to the manufacture and sale of fertilizers are clear. It has the approval of all the farmers' organizations, and a careful reading is convincing that every interest of the farmer is protected. Nitrates are essential to a good commercial mixture to fill the requirements of a salable fertilizer. The other elements needed, such as phosphates, to make up the mixture are located near Muscle Shoals and can be easily acquired.

The farmer would be greatly benefited by the acceptance of this offer. He believes in Henry Ford and has strongly supported his offer.

At the present time the farmer who has a farm needing fertilizer can not afford to put enough fertilizer on the farm. If given the opportunity under the working of this contract, he would be able to purchase enough fertilizer to build up the soil. Many are the farms that need help. This opportunity to buy cheap fertilizers is better than the loans of money on easy terms as provided by the several acts of Congress. When the loan is made there is interest to pay and in the end the loan will have to be paid. If the money is spent on high-priced fertilizers, the amount purchased will be limited.

The Agriculture Department is urging the farmers to increase the yield per acre. There would be no better way than to make possible cheaper fertilizer.

In many sections of the South the farmer who tries to raise cotton and corn has had a hard time.

The efforts to beat the boll weevil and the army worm have been very good and most often failure has been the result. Now the county agents and the farm bureaus urge him to raise more cotton to each acre, but with high-priced fertilizers it is difficult to do.

If we cut the farmers' fertilizer bill one-half we will see a great prosperity return to this country. Where farms are abandoned, they will be restored through the means of cheaper fertilizer. The farmer who has farmed for years with a shortage of fertilizer finds the soil gets poorer and poorer and the crops as a result get smaller.

The advent of a great reduction in the price of fertilizers would give him hope.

There is no other offer which provides for so great an output of fertilizers in peace time.

One of the most important considerations of the offer is the manufacture, sale, and distribution of fertilizers. The proposed agreement is that there will be produced annually mixed or commercial fertilizers which shall have a nitrogen content of 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen or 110,000 tons of ammonium nitrate. This is the present capacity of the nitrate plant No. 2.

The careful reading of sections 14, 15, and 16 will show what a wonderful opportunity there will be for a great development in commercial fertilizers.

The active operation of this great nitrate plant No. 2 and the fact that it is available with all its facilities for the United States whenever, for the national defense, it should be needed. It has been said by the Chief of the Ordnance Department of the Army that this fact would be worth many millions to our Government in nitrate preparedness. If this offer should not be accepted and the plant No. 2 should be kept in condition all the time it is estimated that it would take over $250,000 a year for maintenance and upkeep and the replacements necessary over the period of the lease would amount to twenty millions. The cost to the Government, it is seen, would be tremendous. The acceptance of this offer would take from the Government the burden.

There can certainly be not just criticism as to the terms of the offer in reference to the proposed dams. It is provided as to the Wilson Dam that there will be paid annually 4 per cent of the actual cost of completion including the amounts paid out since May 31, 1922, by the Government. The same percentage is provided for as it relates to the proposed Dam No. 3 to include the same percentage on the cost of the acquisition of necessary land and flowage rights.

The provisions as to the repairs, maintenance, and operation of the two dams is clearly set forth. The amounts to be contributed by Mr. Ford have the approval of the Chief of Engineers, as shown in the hearing. The sinking fund provision is set out in detail. It is an interesting feature of the offer.

If the payments as made are invested by the Government at 4½ per cent, the total amount would at the end of the lease amount to $58,570,003, which would entirely recoup the Government for its outlay. The primary horsepower from the Wilson Dam will be approximately 100,000 horsepower and the secondary power is estimated at 450,000 horsepower.

There is a wide variance in the amount of water in the Tennessee River during the different seasons. The Government has a record for many years showing this variance. It is proposed to bring about the development of reservoirs or storage basins in the mountains of east Tennessee, which would increase greatly the amount of primary power available.

The amount of power to be developed at Dam No. 3 is estimated at 40,000 primary horsepower; secondary horsepower, 200,000. From the construction of these two dams it is estimated that the value to navigation is approximately $8,500,000. This would make many miles of the river navigable. At the present time the activities at the Wilson Dam have blocked all through river transportation. The change which would be made in the river by the construction of the dams with the locks would relieve the Government of an expenditure of $50,000 to $75,000, which has been the cost of the upkeep and maintenance of an antiquated canal system.

There can be no doubt of the many advantages which will be given to the Tennessee river transportation. The Tennessee River made navigable from Chattanooga through the Muscle Shoals section would mean an increase in shipments of the natural resources along the river.

It would be impossible to give in so limited time all the advantages flowing from this offer if it is accepted.

I want to say that I am proud that Tennesseeans are for the Ford offer. At the hearings of the committee at the last session of Congress the then Governor of Tennessee, Gov. Alf Taylor, was given a hearing. He is a Republican, but much loved by all Tennesseeans regardless of party affiliations. He urged for the people of Tennessee that the Ford offer be accepted.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from Tennessee yield back any time?

The CHAIRMAN. No. The gentleman consumed his 12 minutes.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Mississippi use some of his time?

Mr. QUIN. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GERAN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for eight minutes.

Mr. GERAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I was very much interested yesterday in the remarks made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], a member of the Committee on Military Affairs. The latter gentleman stated, and his statement seemed to cause, as it seemed to me, a considerable amount of interest, for the reason, the gentleman from Iowa argued, that Mr. Ford did not agree to bind himself, his heirs and assigns, to carry out the terms of this contract. He left the impression, it seemed to me, that there was something peculiar in that the first proposal made by Mr. Ford was different from the second proposal; that the first proposal intended to do something and expressed certain ideas in certain words that the second proposal did not express; and that that was very vital to this question of guaranty.

I therefore want to call your attention to the two proposals made by Mr. Ford. The first one is embodied in a letter from the Secretary of War and is known as House Document No. 167. In paragraph 19 of that offer, which is the concluding paragraph, appears the following:

> The above proposals are submitted for acceptance as a whole and not in part. Upon acceptance the promises, undertakings, and obligations shall be binding upon the United States and jointly and severally upon the undersigned, his heirs, representatives, and assigns, and the company, its successors and assigns; and all the necessary contracts, leases, deeds, and other instruments necessary or appropriate to effectuate the purpose of this proposal shall be duly executed and delivered by the respective parties above mentioned.

That proposal is dated and signed by Mr. Ford on the 25th day of January, 1922. After that there was another proposal made by Mr. Ford, and that proposal is the one I think that is referred to by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL]. In the second proposal paragraph 20 takes the place of paragraph 19 in the original proposal, and the second proposal recites:

> The above proposals are submitted for acceptance as a whole and not in part. Upon acceptance the undertakings and obligations shall be binding upon the United States—
> And so forth.

Then follows in identical language the same specific guaranty made in the proposal No. 1. So that there is no difference between the guaranty in proposal No. 1 and that in proposal No. 2, as set forth in these two documents.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GERAN. I will.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Is that the language in the present bill?

Mr. GERAN. It is not the language in the present bill, and I am coming to that now, I will say to the gentleman from Iowa. The language of the present bill covering this subject appears in section 23, and section 23 says that—

> All the contracts, leases, deeds, transfers, and conveyances necessary to effectuate the acceptance of said offer shall be binding upon the United States and jointly and severally upon Henry Ford, his heirs, representatives, and assigns, and the company to be incorporated by him, its successors and assigns.

The argument is made that these words, appearing in lines 15 and 16, "necessary to effectuate the acceptance of said offer," means that the only guaranty made by Mr. Ford is the guaranty prior to the execution of the contract.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GERAN. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think the language in the first of the two proposals covers the guaranty that ought to be covered?

Mr. GERAN. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Then I propose, before this bill reaches its final stages, to offer that language as the guaranty to be contained in the bill.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GERAN. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We are told that Mr. Ford will not accept any amendment. Will the gentleman from Illinois accept that amendment?

Mr. MADDEN. I propose to offer it myself in the form of an amendment.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Jersey yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. GERAN. I regret I can not yield. My contention is this: No amendment is necessary in order to carry out Mr. Ford's proposal because section 23 is perfectly plain.

Mr. MADDEN. I think it is myself, but if there is any doubt about it it should be cleared up.

Mr. GERAN (reading)—

> SEC. 23. All of the contracts, leases, deeds, transfers, and conveyances necessary to effectuate the acceptance of said offer shall be binding upon the United States, and jointly and severally upon Henry Ford, his heirs, representatives, and assigns, and the company to be incorporated by him, its successor, and assigns.

Those words, "necessary to effectuate the acceptance of said offer," are simply explanatory and are by no means words of limitation. The contracts, leases, deeds, transfers, and conveyances that are necessary to effectuate this offer will be guaranteed and are binding, and so forth.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think there is any doubt at all but what the language in section 23 covers the first and second proposals, but I do not want any doubt about it. I am willing to adopt the language of any one of the proposals as a substitute for that.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GERAN. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I understand——

Mr. GERAN. For a question, but not for a speech.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will you accept that?

Mr. GERAN. I will accept it if you can show to me or anyone else that it is necessary. The two proposals made by Mr. Ford are just as plain as the English language can write them, and section 23 simply expresses what is in these two proposals, namely, that upon the acceptance of this proposition all contracts and leases, and so forth, which are going to be made will be binding upon Mr. Ford, his heirs and assigns, so that we are simply quibbling and continuing to confuse the issue by reading these as words of limitation and not as words of explanation. Furthermore, if there were any doubt about that I would call your attention to section 12 of this bill. Section 12 provides:

> As the purchase price for the foregoing plants and properties to be conveyed to the company by the United States, the company will pay the United States $5,000,000—

And so forth. And further on in the section it is provided that—

> Each of said deeds shall refer to or contain the provisions of this offer and said deeds shall be so drawn as to make such provisions covenants running with the land.

So it seems to me it is perfectly plain that when we come to draw our contracts, draw our leases, or draw those papers which are necessary to effectuate the terms of this proposal all those convenants shall run with the land. And then section 18 provides:

> In addition to any other remedies that may be possessed by the United States, and as a further method of procedure in the event of the violation of any of the terms of this proposal or any contracts made in furtherance of its terms, the company agrees that the Attorney General may, upon the request of the Secretary of War, institute proceedings in equity in the District Court of the United States for the northern district of Alabama for the purpose of canceling and terminating the lease of Dam No. 2 or Dam No. 3, or both of them, because of such violation or for the purpose of remedying or correcting by injunction, mandamus, or other process, any act of commission or omission in violation of the terms of this proposal or any contract made in furtherance thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GERAN. May I have two minutes more?

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for two additional minutes.

Mr. GERAN. So it seems to me there is no question but what the Government is amply protected in these matters. But I want to call your attention to one other thing. Mr. Ford undertakes to do certain things and the Government undertakes to do certain things. The main thing which the Government undertakes to do is to advance a sum of money necessary to complete Dam No. 2 and to construct Dam No. 3. It will require approximately—so the engineers estimate—$50,000,000 in order to do that work, but that $50,000,000 is by no means all that is necessary to be expended at Muscle Shoals, for Mr. MADDEN, when he appeared before the Military Affairs Committee, stated that Mr. Ford will have to expend a great deal of money himself in order to carry out this proposition. In other words, as Mr. MADDEN said, Mr. Ford will have to expend between $40,000,000 and $50,000,000——

Mr. MADDEN. He will have to expend $59,000,000.

Mr. GERAN. I ask you gentlemen whether it is fair to presume that Mr. Ford is going to expend $59,000,000 in carrying out the terms of this contract and then default in connection with the fulfillment of his contract. It seems to me we ought not to assume that is true. But if Mr. Ford does, he will lose his $59,000,000 and the Government will have it. Muscle Shoals will be completed and Mr. Ford's deeds, leases, and contracts will be canceled.

I just want to express a thought which has occurred to me in connection with this, that we learn some things when we come to Congress, and I have learned some things here, too, along with the rest of you.

I have learned that when we went to war we were proud of the possessions of America; we were proud of our material resources; we were proud of our men, of the spirit of our men, and of our ability to carry on the war; but notwithstanding our millions of men, all of our resources, and our apparent ability to carry on the war there was one thing which we lacked, and that was the nitrate necessary for high explosives.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. GERAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL]. [Applause.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am one of those Members who opposed the development of Muscle Shoals by the Federal Government not because I am opposed to the development of water power but because I am absolutely opposed to Federal ownership, development, or operation of industry. The condition that exists at Muscle Shoals at the present time, the enormous waste of millions of the people's money, as admitted by the majority report, at least substantiates the position taken by Congress when it refused to authorize the beginning of this work. However, it was begun under the authority granted the President under the national defense act, and we have spent some $125,000,000 there, and the question now before us is, What can we best do to get the most out of this development and make it best serve the interests of the American people? We are the directors of this corporation; we are confronted by a cold-blooded business proposition, and we must treat it in a truly business manner. As far as Mr. Ford is concerned, I should just as soon sell it to him as anyone else, but I want reasonable compensation for this most valuable property, and we are not getting that if we accept the proposition now before us.

Without burdening the RECORD with any long argument, I am going to try to state briefly and point out three or four basic reasons just why I am opposing the acceptance of the Ford offer at the present time.

First. The Ford offer on fertilizer production does not mean what it purports to mean, and particularly as it is carried out by the terms of the McKenzie bill. I say this in all earnestness, with the full realization of the importance of this statement, which statement can be backed up by undeniable and undisputed facts as shown on the record. The final Ford offer, dated May 31, 1922, beginning on page 8 of the McKenzie report, shows that section 15 reads as follows:

> Inasmuch as the manufacture of commercial fertilizer for our soils and the sale and distribution of same to the farmers and other users thereof constitute one of the principal considerations of this offer, moving to the Government of the United States and its people, the company expressly agrees that it will continuously throughout the lease operate nitrate plant No. 2, using the most economical source of power, at the approximate present annual capacity of its machinery and equipment in the production of nitrogen and other commercial fertilizers, mixed or unmixed, according to market demand (said capacity being equal to approximately 110,000 tons of ammonium nitrate per annum containing 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen).

In this offer there is seemingly made a bona fide agreement of a tangible nature, though qualified in some important respects, but possibly capable of being carried out, if such operations could have been so done that Mr. Ford could have netted his 8 per cent. What do we find, however, in the McKenzie bill accepting this offer on fertilizer production? The bill does not follow the language quoted. The wording of the bill—and this is controlling—is very different. The changes are significant and radical and are so worded that Mr. Ford's obligations are materially modified to his very marked benefit. This section, now No. 14, reads:

> The company expressly agrees that continuously throughout the lease period, except as it may be prevented by reconstruction of the plant itself, or by wars, strikes, accidents, fires, or other causes not under its control—

> it will manufacture nitrogen and other commercial fertilizers mixed or unmixed, etc., * * * at nitrate plant No. 2, or its equivalent, or at such other plant or plants adjacent or near thereto as it may construct, using the most economical source of power available.

There is the meat in the coconut, and there is where you have given away your birthright, as far as the actual production of atmospheric nitrogen is concerned, if you accept the Ford offer. These last three lines are entirely different than the original offer. They absolutely release him from making one pound of atmospheric nitrogen at plant No. 2. Then, as a separate and distinct undertaking and having no relation to the making of fertilizer and from which not one pound of fertilizer need be expected or hoped for, he will "maintain nitrate plant No. 2 in its present state of readiness, or its equivalent."

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman does not overlook the fact that the statement says he will make fertilizer either at the existing plant or at some other plant that may be constructed. Now, what difference does it make at what plant he makes it?

Mr. SNELL. That is what I want to call to your attention, that you have not followed the original language in the Ford offer of May 22.

Mr. MADDEN. But what difference does that make?

Mr. SNELL. It makes this difference to me, that in the first place you have changed the Ford offer, which Mr. MCKENZIE says can not be done; and, secondly, you have yielded on the vital proposition of the whole plan, and your yielding is entirely in favor of Mr. Ford and against the American people.

I contend that these changes are significant, for not only will Mr. Ford avoid the operation of nitrate plant No. 2 for the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen—and atmospheric nitrogen is nowhere mentioned or considered in the McKenzie bill, and not one pound of nitrogen so produced need be made thereunder—but under the phrasing of this section is permitted, through suitable enlargement of his present by-product operations, whereby he is already engaged in the manufacture of a fertilizer, ammonium sulphate, if these enlargements are constructed adjacent or near to Muscle Shoals, to make ammonium sulphate and ammonium sulphate only, to the extent of his entire fertilizer obligation, without producing one pound of it in nitrate plant No. 2 or using therefor a single kilowatt of energy from the two dams.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SNELL. Yes; I will yield now.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. If the gentleman will consult the last and the original offer, he will find that the bill has not departed from the offer but uses the exact language of the offer. I will read it:

> or at such other plant or plants adjacent or near thereto as it may construct, using the most economical source of power available.

Mr. SNELL. I am taking the offer printed in the McKenzie report made in May, 1922.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. This is the original offer signed by Mr. Ford.

Mr. SNELL. I am taking the offer we have before us at the present time. It has been said that the original Ford offer can not be changed, but it has been changed in the bill we have before us.

Two hundred thousand tons of ammonium sulphate, less than one-third of the present United States production of ammonium sulphate, made by Mr. Ford from Alabama coal in by-product ovens as he may construct them and as has been publicly heralded as being in his plans, or the same or similar product, perhaps even if produced from his extensive coal holdings in Kentucky and West Virginia, would not only completely meet his obligation of fertilizer production but, through the mere maintenance of nitrate plant No. 2 at an insignificant sum per annum, releases for his own profit and use the operation of nitrate plant No. 2 for any other product than fertilizer which he may desire to make if "equivalent readiness" is maintained, and at the same time releases to other uses than fertilizer the 60,000-kilowatt steam plant at Sheffield, the 40,000-horsepower steam plant to be built at Lock 17, and all the power from both dams, a total of some 970,000 horsepower of electrical energy.

No one claims, not even Mr. Ford himself, that Mr. Ford has discovered a process or has contributed in the slightest degree to the scientific development of the art of atmospheric nitrogen fixation. But the altered wording of this bill shows that since his final offer made in May, 1922, he has discovered something else of very great importance to himself, and that is that he can not make and sell fertilizer that is made through the operation of plant No. 2. And I want some gentlemen who say we can not change this contract by dotting an "i" or crossing a "t" to explain why this change was made. If you can change this in one place, you can change it in another; and I want to change it in some places to the advantage of the American people. [Applause.]

On the other hand, he can make and is making ammonium sulphate in his by-product coke ovens and can and is getting for it the market price representing no saving to the farmer, and can completely carry out his fertilizer obligations through its manufacture by enlarging his by-product coke oven operations. This will not lower the cost and will not benefit the farmer, but it will enable Mr. Ford to carry out his contract and secure and retain the personal benefits he is seeking. The Ford fertilizer offer, as bald and vague as it was in his letter of May 31, 1922, completely loses what value it ever had in the light of the present wording of the McKenzie bill.

The changes are significant, the contract so radically modified to Mr. Ford's benefit as to completely demolish his plea for special privilege and to completely evade what the country has been shrewdly led to expect in the way of radically lowered fertilizer costs. Mr. Ford's recent "discovery," therefore, underlies the real reason for the radical change now carried out by the terms of the McKenzie bill.

My second objection to the Ford offer lies in the Ford purpose to gain the undisputed possession of an immensely valuable water power belonging to the Nation, built by the Nation's money, and built mainly for the purpose of the national security in time of war, and to secure it for his own use on terms that violate not only the conditions of the Federal water power act in respect to Federal regulation and control but are at the same time obnoxious and against public rights and interest in both the price to be paid and the length of the lease, 100 years, with a preferred right to negotiate for a further period. The true motive behind the Ford offer, the considerations of the Ford offer moving from the Government to him as beneficiary, is cheap electrical energy. Make no mistake on that point. Henry Ford is quoted as having said, "The destiny of the American people for centuries to come lies at Muscle Shoals," and if he obtains Muscle Shoals he could well add the words "and lie in my hands there." I have here a circular issued by a firm of real estate dealers and selling Muscle Shoals real estate, in which this Ford motive is set forth in better form than I can myself do it. It reads, in part:

Why Henry Ford said:

"I will employ 1,000,000 men at Muscle Shoals.

"I will build a city 75 miles long at Muscle Shoals."

Because Muscle Shoals has 1,000,000 potential hydroelectric horsepower, inexhaustible deposits of raw material, water and rail transportation facilities, over $100,000,000 in completed factory and plant buildings, now equipped with machinery for manufacturing commodities of life with electric energy at new low cost of production.

And I admit all these reasons are true. Then the circular resumes in these words:

Because Henry Ford visualizes at Muscle Shoals a vast industrial empire, pulsating with happy workers at high wage rate, 1,000,000 jobs, the realization of his ambition, the furnishing of employment to every man and woman who wants and needs employment. The dawn of a new prosperity. The hydroelectric chemical age. The saving of millions upon hundreds of millions annually in living expenses to the American people from the development of this new industrial center in the Tennessee Valley. A second Chicago!

And all this latter "vision" is about 100 per cent plain bunk! Except that over this "vast industrial empire" there will preside Henry Ford and his dynasty, certainly for 100 years and longer if "preferred rights" mean what we understand them to mean.

Mr. ALMON. Was that Howell N. Graves, of New York, who issued that advertisement?

Mr. SNELL. I saw the advertisement on Broadway. I do not know the names of the persons.

There you have it—strikingly and candidly told. Is there any mention of fertilizer in this summary; any evidence of his intent to supply cheap or any kind of fertilizer? It is power he wants. It is power he will get—mechanical power, social and political and industrial power beyond belief, on which he may indeed build an "industrial empire."

Because "Muscle Shoals has 1,000,000 potential water power, and over one hundred millions in completed factory and plant buildings" and is now equipped for manufacturing not only the commodities of life but all commodities with electric energy at new low cost of production—there we have the true statement of why Mr. Ford wants Muscle Shoals for his very own on terms that he challenges the Congress to change by the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t," under threat of withdrawal of his offer, and has the effrontery to flout a sovereign State seeking some assurance of power for its insistent needs by compelling its Senator to be satisfied with an assurance made by a "Ford representative" that Mr. Ford will at some time allocate some of this power to Mississippi.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman believe what he says when he says that Muscle Shoals will develop 1,000,000 horsepower?

Mr. SNELL. I believe it has potential possibilities of somewhere between 800,000 and 900,000 horsepower.

Mr. MADDEN. On what does the gentleman base his belief?

Mr. SNELL. On the testimony given by the engineers before the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. MADDEN. There is not a man living who can tell that with any degree of accuracy.

Mr. SNELL. I will admit that to a certain extent it is indefinite, but that is the testimony of the engineers before the committee, and I read it in the hearings. It is the best evidence you have, and it is the evidence you have used in preparing this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. But the gentleman did not say that. The gentleman did not say it was in the testimony; the gentleman said it would be possible.

Mr. SNELL. I believe it is possible; and, besides, it is in the hearings and has been disputed by no one.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I would like to finish this statement and then I will be glad to yield.

I know something about hydroelectric power. I have built and own a water power, developed electrically, in northern New York; a small one it is true—only some 3,000 horsepower. I know something of water-power values; what electrical energy means to industry now; what it will mean in the future, as coal grows scarcer, more costly, as labor costs, transportation costs, transportation difficulties increase. Were it possible to transfer Muscle Shoals to New York State, or to New England, or to Detroit, the present-day values of 850,000 horsepower, in mere dollars and cents, are simply staggering. Even at Niagara Falls, that great water power, built in part by nature, the average price at the switchboard is some $19.60 per horsepower year, and this price includes long-time contracts made years ago at a ridiculously low figure, and taken up by industry at that figure, because that figure is already cheap power. I am informed you can not get it at any price at Niagara Falls at the present time.

I wonder how many of us here know or comprehend the magnitude of the power possibilities at Muscle Shoals. There is to be installed at Dam No. 2, 600,000 horsepower, in generating capacity; at Dam No. 3, 250,000 horsepower, in generating capacity. There is already installed an 80,000-horsepower modern steam unit at nitrate plant No. 2. There is to be built for him, under the Madden amendment, an additional 40,000-horsepower steam plant at Lock 17. This makes a grand total of 970,000 horsepower. He calls it a million horsepower. To be fair, not all of this water power is primary power at the present time—by primary power is meant power available 365 days in the year and for 24 hours per day.

But there is a very large amount of primary power immediately available on completion of the dams, something like 250,000 horsepower, and Mr. Ford has very skillfully insisted upon the installation of generators and water wheels for the total amount above named, 850,000 horsepower, because he realizes that as headwater improvements are made on the Tennessee River the primary power is immensely increased and that ultimately, perhaps within the next 10 or 15 years, the total of primary power will be the same as the installed generating capacity. So that projecting the matter in the future, as may with propriety be done, say, 10 or 15 years from now, Mr. Ford at that time will have available from the water power, 850,000 horsepower in primary power, and this increase from the present amount of primary power will, under the McKenzie bill, cost Mr. Ford not one cent. He is not required to contribute a penny toward headwater improvements or storage, but what does he gain? The figures are illuminating as showing canniness, at least, in insisting upon the installation of so large a generating capacity.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield right on that point?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. The gentleman knows the reputation of Mr. Elon H. Hooker, President of the American Association of Engineers, and one of the bidders here. Mr. Hooker is from New York, and the gentleman knows his reputation?

Mr. SNELL. I do.

Mr. McSWAIN. Did the gentleman read the hearings where Mr. Hooker testified on his professional reputation that there was not over 75,000 horsepower, primary, at Dam No. 2?

Mr. SNELL. I know the man who knows more about this than any other man on the floor of this House and he himself told me that there is at least 150,000 primary horsepower, and that is the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON].

Mr. ALMON. Let me correct the gentleman. The building of Dam No. 2 and Dam No. 3 will create 121,000 primary horsepower.

Mr. SNELL. I understood the gentleman to tell me the other day he thought there was at least 150,000 horsepower at these two dams.

Mr. ALMON. And the two steam plants, 120,000 horsepower, making a total of 241,000 horsepower.

Mr. SNELL. The exact amount is somewhere along there. We can not tell exactly what it is.

With each improvement of the river or its tributaries above him, that would add a mere 50,000 horsepower to his primary capacity, and without, as I have said, costing Mr. Ford a single penny, Mr. Ford's power costs would materially decrease in a radical way, though his payments to the Government remain fixed at the yearly rate of $2,199,649.54 throughout the entire lease period of 100 years. These decreases are interesting to compare with even the low costs at Niagara. Assuming that Mr. Ford has at the beginning of the lease period 250,000 primary power, his cost per year per horsepower is $8.80. When headwater improvements add 50,000 horsepower—or 300,000 horsepower primary—his cost per horsepower is cut to $7.33 per annum; when 350,000 horsepower is available, his cost becomes $6.28 per horsepower.

With 400,000 horsepower, the cost is $5.49.
With 450,000 horsepower, the cost is $4.88.
With 500,000 horsepower, the cost is $4.40.
With 550,000 horsepower, the cost is $4.
With 600,000 horsepower, the cost is $3.66.
With 650,000 horsepower, the cost is $3.38.
With 700,000 horsepower, the cost is $3.14.
With 750,000 horsepower, the cost is $2.93.
With 800,000 horsepower, the cost is $2.74.
With 850,000 horsepower, the cost is $2.58.

And even on top of this and before the regular contract begins he has 100,000 horsepower for six years at $2 per horsepower. Eighty thousand horsepower more for three years at $2 per horsepower, a lower price by twice over than horsepower was ever sold anywhere in the civilized world. I want you to think of these figures before you vote for this measure.

Or, in other words, Mr. Ford gets for $2,200,000 per year that which is richly worth even in that location under present conditions at least $12,200,000—a straight out-and-out gift to Mr. Ford of $10,000,000 a year for 100 years. This proposition has Teapot Dome beaten a hundred ways in giving away Government property. And before you are through with it, it will be a bigger scandal.

Disregarding the Sheffield steam plant—except to say that there is an offer for it of $4,500,000—this 850,000 horsepower would yearly produce nearly double the energy in kilowatt hours now used in the entire New England district, namely, 5,550,000,000 kilowatt hours at Muscle Shoals as against 3,384,000,000 kilowatt hours for the entire New England district; nearly one-half of the energy now used in the middle Atlantic district, including Niagara Falls, 5,550,000,000 kilowatt hours compared with 11,620,000,000; practically as much as all the energy now used in the Pacific district, 5,550,000,000 kilowatt hours compared to 5,650,000,000 kilowatt hours there. It is some 249,000 horsepower more than the ultimate development of power on the American side at Niagara Falls. It is more than one-half of the developed water powers in the entire South, and represents more than 20 per cent of the total potential water-power resources of that region. When given to Henry Ford for his private use, and therefore not available or intended for general industry, there will remain in the South to fill the growing and insistent needs for power coming from a population of 18,000,000 people, something over a bare million and a half of potential water power classified as good, indifferent, and poor, yet remaining to be developed.

What folly to say, as does the McKenzie report, that there is nothing in the history of the electrical-power business to indicate that water-power rights will be more valuable 50 years hence than they are to-day. The argument is unique and specious. It is diametrically opposed to known and actual facts. As coal costs increase due to well-known and clearly recognized causes, water power becomes increasingly valuable and increasingly necessary to our industrial existence. Why, all any man needs to do to refute this argument is to refer to the long debates on the water power act. The fundamental principles of that whole act are the increasing values of the water powers and natural resources and they must be kept for all time for the people. Yet the first opportunity you propose to vitiate that whole act and give the largest single water power in the East to one man to do as he pleases with for 100 years. It is the crime of the age, and the worst of it is that it is done in the name of agriculture. If any other man made a similar offer on a much less valuable power, it would not receive five minutes consideration in this House.

Third. The Ford offer demands a fee simple title to the entire nitrate properties, including the new steam power plant, and site 100 miles away, and the new transmission line proposed by the Madden amendment, the latter the greatest piece of folly contained in the whole bill.

I am unalterably opposed to the transfer by the Government of these great plants, primarily built as a measure of national security, to any private agency of any kind. The Government can not now and can not in the future rely on foreign or alien sources of nitrogen for war purposes. The underlying purpose behind the building of these great plants was to have a permanent agency in the hands of the Government for securing this war essential.

I assert, without fear of successful contradiction, that every legitimate purpose behind the Ford offer can be fully met, every desire to serve the farmer fully carried out, by leasing these properties on a long time and generous lease which at the same time shall safeguard every national right; and, further, that as nitrate plant No. 1 has become of striking usefulness under our present knowledge of the spectacular and revolutionizing developments in the synthetic production of ammonia, every precaution should be taken that this plant should be put to work, and by no means, or under any circumstances, scrapped. It represents the true hope and expectation of cheap fertilizer through the development therein of the synthetic process. A revolution in the industry impends through the discovery of a new catalyzer at our own fixed nitrogen laboratory, that gives us a commanding position for not only an unequaled explosive but an unbeatable process for fertilizer, and nitrate plant No. 1 has become thereby of infinitely greater importance than nitrate plant No. 2.

Neither plant should be sold. Neither should be scrapped. No justification can be urged for their sale or their scrapping in the light of this new value established by the recent startling advances in the art.

The German production of ammonium sulphate in 1922, for example, was some 1,425,000 tons, and 1,050,000 tons were produced by the synthetic process, only 375,000 tons by the by-product process. The Germans lead the world in this production and at low prices, but what they have done we can do even better under our new catalyzer, and there can be brought about at Muscle Shoals and elsewhere where cheap power is available a production even greater in quantity and lower in cost than the German's.

But it can not be done at nitrate plant No. 2, nor under the Ford plan of ammonium sulphate from by-product ovens, obligated as he is to supply only 200,000 tons, which I again repeat, need not, under his contract as it now reads, be made to the extent of a single pound at nitrate plant No. 2.

I am just as much interested in getting cheap fertilizer for agricultural needs as any man here, but I do not propose to be fooled about it. Let us have a clean-cut power proposition and a clean-cut fertilizer proposition. We can afford to give away every horsepower used in the production of fertilizer if we get the market price for the balance. You could use the secondary power for 9 or 10 months of the year to manufacture nitrates and easily sell the primary power for twice as much as Ford is offering. I maintain if we use our heads and are not carried away by propaganda Muscle Shoals can be made to produce fertilizer at the lowest possible cost and pay interest on every dollar the Government has ever put there.

Therefore I earnestly protest against the unparalleled folly of passing the Muscle Shoals bill as recommended by the Military Affairs Committee. I earnestly ask you to read and digest the enlightened views and facts presented in the Hull report. No saner or more clearly stated analysis has ever been made of the real demerits and unfairness and objections to the Ford offer, and which I have only treated in part.

We can not afford to pass legislation of this magnitude so pregnant with evil for generations yet to come, so menacing, I believe, to the present one, without considering where we shall land. Truly Mr. Ford has said: "The destiny of the American people for centuries to come lies at Muscle Shoals," but this destiny is surely safer in the hands of the Nation and under its control and regulation than in the uncontrolled hands of an individual builder of an empire there. Shall we sell—does the Congress and this administration in the light of the real and verifiable facts dare to sell—the Nation's birthright at Muscle Shoals for a mass of fertilizer promises? [Applause.]

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 13 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL]. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday the gentleman from Iowa had something to say about Mr. Gray Silver and Col. J. W. Worthington being promoters. I might say that after the very able speech of the gentleman from Michigan this morning I can not think of the gentleman from Iowa that I do not recall the line from Hamlet when Hamlet walked into the graveyard, picked up the skull, looked at it, and exclaimed, "Alas, poor Yorick."

Let me say that Colonel Worthington is a citizen of Alabama and that the people of Alabama are proud to claim him. He has given of his time, of his money, of his life to the development of this great project for national defense and for the farmers of this country. More than this no man could do. [Applause.]

As has been well explained by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE], the Government enterprise at Muscle Shoals was undertaken by the Government of the United States for the express purpose of carrying out the provision of section 124 of the national defense act. That section provided for the manufacture of nitrogen to supply munitions of war in time of emergency and to supply fertilizer for the farmer in time of peace. This was the purpose for which the plants at Muscle Shoals were located and constructed by the Government, and thus should and must be the paramount and dominant consideration in the disposition of Muscle Shoals by the Government. But as an Alabamian, as a Representative of the people of Alabama, may I remind you gentlemen that in any disposition of Muscle Shoals the people of Alabama are in a very real and peculiar sense concerned. Their welfare, their happiness, and their prosperity in no small measure depend upon the disposition of that gigantic source of power.

My State is an agricultural State, and the farmers of my State, together with the farmers of the whole country, will profit from the manufacture of fertilizer at Muscle Shoals. But there is another matter of compelling consideration to the people of Alabama in the disposition of Muscle Shoals. Of the 850,000 horsepower at Muscle Shoals no one has advocated the need of using more than a part of that great power for the manufacture of fertilizer. This leaves a large part of that great power to be used for other purposes and the use of this power is of tremendous importance to the people of Alabama. Need I call to your attention, gentlemen of the House, the fact that vital as is the disposition of Muscle Shoals to the people of Alabama, they have no authority, no power in that disposition. As Muscle Shoals is the property of the United States, Congress is the only body that has any authority or power in the disposition of Muscle Shoals. Congress and Congress alone can say how Muscle Shoals shall be disposed of. I therefore ask that I may have the privilege at this hour of giving to you something of the feelings and of the sentiments of the people of Alabama on this great question.

In 1907 the Alabama Power Co., almost entirely owned and wholly controlled by British capital and British interest, a company of Alabama in name only, commenced it activities in the State. In that year it deluded and ensnared the Legislature of Alabama into the passage of the 1907 water power act. By that act the State of Alabama practically abdicated its sovereignty over its greatest natural resource, the use of its splendid rivers for the production of power. By that act the owners of power sites were granted in perpetuity the right to construct their dams and works without payment of one cent to the State in return therefor. By that act the owners of power sites received the State's right of eminent domain for the condemnation of land for flowage and other purposes and paid not one cent to the State in return therefor. By that act the owners of power sites were granted an exemption from taxation for all works of water-power development. By that act the Alabama Power Co. acquired all of the best of the power sites in the State and all the special privileges granted thereunder and laid the foundation of its great design—the throttling of the Commonwealth in the iron grip of its monopoly. In the furtherance of that design it has known no limitation. It has had its legislators, its public officials. It has had its champions in Congress. It has endeavored to subsidize the press, to deceive the people. [Applause.]

For 25 years the people of Alabama, conscious of the tremendous possibilities of Muscle Shoals, have sought and prayed for its development. Too stupendous in cost for their undertaking, they witnessed with joy its purchase by the Government. Disappointed in the defeat in 1921 of the bill that provided for the governmental completion in large degree of the project, which defeat was brought about by the perverse action of a Member of this House who afterwards resigned to become a lawyer for the Alabama Power Co., the people of Alabama waited with anxious hearts, with eager anticipation, while the Government sought to find some one who would take over Muscle Shoals and complete its development. After a number of months of waiting by the people of Alabama, in response to a plea from them, Mr. Ford came forth and made his now famous offer. This offer meets every requirement of section 124 of the national defense act. It absolutely guarantees the manufacture annually of 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen for munitions of war in time of emergency and for fertilizer in time of peace. It assures the production of an amount of fertilizer equivalent to 250,000 tons of Chilean nitrate or equal to 2,000,000 tons of 2-8-2 commercial fertilizer. This is an amount of nitrate equal to the entire annual imports from Chile used by American agriculture before the World War. We find that during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1923, American farmers paid the Chilean Government $11,239,384 as a tax simply for the privilege of buying necessary nitrate from that country. If the establishment of the nitrogen industry at Muscle Shoals under the Ford offer resulted in nothing more than in eliminating the export duty collected by Chile for the privilege of purchasing nitrates in that country, it would have paid a dividend to American farmers and consumers of more than 5½ per cent on $200,000,000. But authorities everywhere declare that the acceptance of the Ford offer and the establishment of a nitrogen industry at Muscle Shoals will reduce the cost of fertilizer one-half. The annual expenditure of the farmers in this country for fertilizer over the past five years has been, in round numbers, $300,000,000 a year. Cutting this bill in half would save the farmers of this country $150,000,000 a year. In my State of Alabama we have important iron and steel industries, and Alabama is a large producer in the coal and coke industry, and Alabama's textile industry grows yearly; but Alabama, like every other State of the Union, is without the nitrogen industry.

Henry Ford proposes to establish at Muscle Shoals in Alabama the nitrogen industry, without which no nation can consider itself safe in time of war and without which no nation can preserve and increase the soil fertility of its lands. Resting on every acre of land there are 33,880 tons of nitrogen in the atmosphere. Henry Ford proposes to "fix" this nitrogen so farmers can use it, and the farmers in my State of Alabama look forward with confidence that Henry Ford will reduce the cost of their fertilizers one-half. Alabama farmers paid for fertilizer in 1920, $14,066,108 for about 341,000 tons, and they paid in 1910, $7,630,952 for about 425,000 tons; that is, they paid 84 per cent more money for 4 per cent less tonnage, strange as it may seem. When Alabama farmers can get these fertilizers for one-half what they have been paying for them in normal times they will double and treble their purchases, and will by so doing double and treble their production per acre.

The Ford offer was received throughout the State with deep gratification. At last the great project at Muscle Shoals was to be developed. At last the hopes of the people were to be realized—their prayers were to be answered. The Commonwealth was vocal with the plea of the people to Congress for acceptance of the offer. But there was one dissenting voice. Bearing the honored name of Alabama, there was one dog in the manger. Did the Alabama Power Co. join hands with the people of Alabama for the acceptance of the offer and the development of Muscle Shoals? Did they lend their help or lift their voice to further the cause? Conscious of their inability to undertake the development of Muscle Shoals themselves; conscious of the fact that they had preempted the entire water-power sites and rights in perpetuity of the Coosa, Tallapoosa, and Little Rivers, which practically took in all the water power in the State except that at Muscle Shoals; and conscious of the fact that at the rate they were then developing it would take them a hundred years to develop the power they held, the Alabama Power Co.'s president announced through the press when the Government, through the Chief of Engineers of the Army, called for bids for the development of Muscle Shoals that they were not interested in Muscle Shoals for themselves and that they would make no bid for it.

They knew full well of the untiring efforts of the nitrate director of the War Department in 1919 to interest private capital in the development of Muscle Shoals and of his failure. They knew full well of the efforts of the Chief of Engineers of the Army to secure bids for Muscle Shoals and how, after a number of months of widest publicity, Mr. Ford made the only genuine offer. The Alabama Power Co. not only did not help the cause of the acceptance of the Ford offer, fraught with such tremendous possibilities for the people of the State and particularly for the farmers, but they sought to ridicule it, to laugh it to scorn, to damn it with the smile of contempt. They said that the offer was not practical; that neither Henry Ford nor anyone else could successfully manufacture fertilizer at Muscle Shoals. Unable to deceive the people, unable to mislead them, unable to deter them in their urge for the acceptance of the Ford offer, the Alabama Power Co. now comes forth and makes an offer, an offer that failed utterly to meet the requirements of section 124 of the national defense act, an offer that made no provision whatever for the manufacture of nitrogen for war munitions or for fertilizer for the farmer. The Alabama Power Co. made this offer with no expectation of its acceptance, with no faith in its worth, but they made it solely in the effort to obstruct, to thwart, to delay, to encompass the defeat of the Ford offer. [Applause.] Then it was that the people of Alabama awakened to the sinister motives and unholy designs of the Alabama Power Co.; were stirred as they have not been stirred in 50 years. In civic clubs, in secular societies, in farm meetings, in directorates, in committees, in official bodies, in public gatherings, in mass meetings they came together and petitioned and prayed and memorialized Congress to accept the Ford offer and to deliver them from the conspiracy of the Alabama Power Co. monopoly. Telegrams asking the deliverance poured in to the Members of this House, and the mails were laden with messages of protest. The Legislature of Alabama adopted the following joint resolution:

Senate Joint Resolution 9.

Whereas the Muscle Shoals enterprise and its development for the benefit of the agricultural interests of this Nation being of profound importance; and

Whereas it being known that Mr. Henry Ford has made to the Government of the United States of America a proposal for the development, leasing, and control of said enterprise; and

Whereas it being known that Mr. Ford's organization is financially able to develop said industry and the marked efficiency of his organization is almost a matter of common knowledge; and

Whereas the agricultural interests of the country have confidence in the proposal of Mr. Ford to manufacture their needed fertilizers at a much lower cost to them than they have been able to obtain heretofore: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of Alabama (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America is hereby petitioned and memorialized to adopt such measures and enact such laws as will cause the favorable acceptance by the Government of the United States of Mr. Ford's proposal; and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Presiding Officers of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to each Senator nad Member of Congress from the State of Alabama.

Passed Senate of Alabama, October 4, 1921.

Passed House of Alabama, October 6, 1921.

Anxious that Congress might know that all minds were as one, that all hearts were as one, 5,000 of Alabama's citizens gathered together in mass meeting assembled in Montgomery, the capital of the Commonwealth. They came from every corner, from every part of the State. They came representing county governments, municipal authorities, women's clubs, labor bodies, chambers of commerce, civic bodies, and farmers' organizations. Never in all the years of that historic old capital city had there been a meeting whose atmosphere was more surcharged with enthusiasm, whose purpose was more determined, and whose sentiments were more unanimous. As a Representative of the people of Alabama, permit me to present and to read to you at this time the memorial to the President and the Congress of the United States adopted by that great meeting:

MEMORIAL TO THE PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES AND THE COMMITTEES OF CONGRESS ADOPTED BY THE STATE-WIDE MASS MEETING HELD IN THE CITY AUDITORIUM AT MONTGOMERY ON WEDNESDAY, MARCH 1, 1922.

We, citizens of Alabama, 5,000 strong, representing county governments, municipal authorities, women's clubs, labor bodies, chambers of commerce, civic bodies, and farmers' organizations from every quarter of the State, in mass meeting assembled at Montgomery, with full confidence in both the justice and wisdom of the President and Congress, do hereby declare:

That while the entire Muscle Shoals stretch of the Tennessee River lies within the borders of this State, the right to control and regulate the river in the interest of the Nation's commerce has been ceded by the State of Alabama to the Federal Government. We recognize the fact that Muscle Shoals is the property of the Nation, belonging alike to the people of all of the States; and while we claim no greater right than any other State to say what shall be done with Muscle Shoals, we believe that we but exercise the guaranties of the Federal Constitution when we petition Congress that this great national asset be not employed by the Government as an instrumentality for fastening upon us and upon our children and our children's children the yoke of an oppressive and burdensome monopoly.

We affirm that the Alabama Power Co. now owns and controls a number of splendid power sites on the Coosa River in this State; that it owns and controls all of the available power sites on Little River in Alabama; and that it owns the wonderful power site at Cherokee Bluffs on the Tallapoosa River in this State; that in the 14 years since its incorporation it has built one power dam in this State and commenced work on one other dam; that at the present rate of development of the power potentialities already under the control of this corporation more than 100 years will go by before all of these dormant water powers are harnessed; that it has been the policy of that corporation to develop only such power as can be sold in small units and at high prices; that controlling as it does all of the great water-power sites in a State blessed by God Almighty with wonderful power possibilities, it, a foreign-controlled corporation, is in position to litigate with any American-owned organization which may seek to develop any one of Alabama's wasting water powers, just as it now threatens to litigate with Henry Ford, or with the Government, if either seeks to build Dam No. 3 at Muscle Shoals, or to control the Government-built steam plant and transmission line at Gorgas; that in spite of the fact that this foreign-owned corporation has long enjoyed exemption from taxation in this State, it has been busy ever since its entrance into Alabama in preempting every great power site within our borders, and in so copper-riveting its hold on all of Alabama's great hydroelectric potentialities as to prevent for all time their development by any possible competitor; that it has been its policy to buy these power sites at farm-land prices and to hold them in perpetuity as power sites; that it already controls the utilities in our principal cities and is year by year securing the control of the utilities in our towns and villages; and that if it secures Muscle Shoals it will have perfected its control of all of our great water powers and will hold in its selfish grasp all of these instrumentalities, placed within our borders by a beneficent providence for the promotion of the commercial and industrial welfare of all the people.

We hold that it would be a travesty on legislation if, after many years of congressional consideration of how best to conserve the power in our navigable streams for the benefit of all the people and how most surely to preserve them from being used as instruments of monopoly, the Nation's greatest water power should be handed over to the Alabama Power Co. under the national water power act; and we Further hold that it would be the quintessence of legislative folly for the Government, after 10 years of investigation as to how best to free the United States from its dependence upon a foreign power for its supply of nitrogen for explosives, in the event of war, and after spending millions of dollars in the construction of the greatest nitrogen fixation plant in the world, to turn over the only power capable of successfully operating the nitrate plant to a corporation owned and controlled by foreigners.

We remind Congress that just as the Alabama Power Co. has returned evil for good to the people of Alabama, so it is the one corporation whose dealings with our country in the grim emergency of war were so shameless, selfish, and conscienceless that when its conduct was investigated by a select committee of Congress the minority members of this committee joined with the majority in denouncing its brazen and sordid betrayal of its duty to a war-beset nation.

Again affirming our utmost confidence in the ability and the desire of the President and the Congress of the United States and the committees of Congress to reach the soundest solution of the pending questions relating to the disposition of Muscle Shoals, we wish to express ourselves with regard to Mr. Henry Ford's proffered contract with the Government. The subject is of such vital interest to the people of Alabama that with greatest enthusiasm they have assembled in this meeting for the purpose of making this memorial:

"Upon mature deliberation we, as citizens, do express our firm conviction that it is to the best interest of the United States and to the interest of the people of Alabama that the offer of Henry Ford be accepted and concluded as a binding contract and for the following among other reasons:

"The acceptance of the Ford offer would insure the operation in Alabama of at least two great organizations engaged in the development and sale of hydroelectric energy and would further insure competition in the distribution and sale of power throughout the territory which can be reached by transmission lines from the several power sites on the Tennessee River whose development is within the contemplation of the Ford offer.

"The Ford offer insures the operation of United States nitrate plant No. 2 for a period of 100 years for the production of fertilizers in time of peace and for the production of nitrates for explosives in the event of war.

"It insures to the millions of farmers throughout the United States, whose organizations have with unanimity indorsed the offer of Henry Ford, the continuous operation of this Government-built plant for the production of nitrate fertilizers in competition with the present producers of nitrates, by a company whose profits will be limited to 8 per cent, and in sufficient volume to have a controlling influence in fixing the price of nitrates and nitrate fertilizers for agricultural uses.

"The Ford offer insures to the people of the United States the operation of nitrate plant No. 2 and its maintenance in such a constant state of readiness, with a trained force of operatives, as to guarantee to the Government and its citizens an independent, internal supply of nitrates, in exact accord with the announced intention of Congress as expressed in section 124 of the national defense act of 1916.

"The Ford offer guarantees the construction of Dam No. 3 and makes provision for use by the people of the United States for purposes of navigation of one of the country's largest and most important rivers which is an integral part of the great Mississippi River waterway system.

"In the consideration given to the various offers for Muscle Shoals much has been said about the profit and loss that would accrue to the Government of the United States and to its people from the acceptance or the rejection of the various offers. We respectfully urge that a plan which looks to a constant supply of cheap fertilizers for the farmers of the Nation through a period of 100 years, which insures to American industry during that period the use of nearly 1,000,000 horsepower of electric energy, which provides for the security of the Nation in the event of war, and which guarantees the navigability of one of the country's greatest rivers for all time. These continuing additions to the resources of the Nation, if it were possible to express them in terms of dollars, with interest at 4 per cent, will in the course of 100 years add so vastly to the wealth of the Nation and the prosperity of its people that any difference in the price of the nitrate plant as fixed in the several offers, and any difference between the purchase price offered and the estimated possible scrap value of the property, is dwarfed into insignificance.

"With these considerations in view and having in mind the freedom of our own people from a galling and oppressive water-power monopoly, the freedom of the American farmer from a burdensome and grinding fertilizer monopoly, the opening of a great river to navigation, and the security of the country in the event of war, we urge the President and the Congress of the United States to accept the offer of Henry Ford, whom we verily believe seeks through his offer to dedicate to the American people and especially to the farmers of America his genius and his fortune.

"We indorse the sentiment 'America first' and Muscle Shoals first for Americans and, above all, for American farmers. Henry Ford is a typical American, who by his genius has done more for country people and country life than any other man of his time. A man who has the trust and confidence of the great masses of the common people, as evidenced by the resolutions adopted by every gathering of plain, ordinary Americans, including the representatives of 4,000,000 farmers, who have given voice to their sentiments in regard to his proposal for the development of Muscle Shoals.

"We believe the issue in Congress is clearly drawn. It is a contest between the people and the interests which control the people's fertilizer and power resources.

"On behalf of the army of the unemployed, in the interest of the great body of plain American citizens, in the name of millions of perplexed and burdened farmers, we beg our President and the Congress of the United States and its committees to promptly accept the offer of Henry Ford.

Mark you, gentlemen, that the people of Alabama have spoken to you as Alabamians, but they have also spoken to you as Americans. They have petitioned you to deliver them from a galling and oppressive water-power monopoly, and they have also petitioned you not to surrender the security of the country in the event of war, into the hands of a corporation owned and controlled by foreigners. They remind you that the Alabama Power Co. is the one corporation whose dealings with our country in the grim emergency of war was so shamelessly, selfish, and conscienceless that when its conduct was investigated by a select committee of Congress, the minority members of this committee joined with the majority in denouncing its brazen and sordid betrayal of its duty to a war-beset Nation. Let me remind you that following that great meeting in Montgomery, it became the duty of the Attorney General of the United States to pass upon the validity of the contract made between the Alabama Power Co. and the Government during the war for the construction of the Gorgas Steam Plant, and such was the Attorney General's opinion of that contract that he was moved to write these words:

No one can carefully analyze the long and rather complex contract made with this company (The Alabama Power Co.) without being impressed with the harsh and even drastic provisions which it imposes on the Government. When its intricate provisions are closely scrutinized and their full significance realized, it becomes at once apparent that the company lost no opportunity of turning to its own advantage every possible change of circumstances.

Let me remind you further that it was on this contract held null and void by the Judge Advocate General of the Army and by the Attorney General of the United States and found by a committee of Congress to be reeking with Alabama Power Co. disloyalty to this war-beset Nation, that the Alabama Power Co. sought to charge that the people of Alabama were unfair in asking that the Gorgas Steam Plant, together with the other Muscle Shoals property be sold to Mr. Ford.

Since that great meeting in Montgomery, the Alabama Power Co. has marshaled in its offices at 120 Broadway, New York City, the forces of Wall Street, of the Fertilizer Trust, of the Aluminum Trust, of the predatory interests in an effort to defeat the Ford offer. Throughout the country these selfish interests have waged a sinister and unholy compaign against the Ford offer. The Alabama Power Co. has literally flooded the State of Alabama with propaganda of misrepresentation and of deception. They have proclaimed to the people of Alabama through the widest publicity that their offer would bring into the Federal Treasury each year more money than the Ford offer.

The fact is that 14 Members of this House, in reporting to this House the bill for the acceptance of the Ford offer, show that each year the Ford offer will put into the Federal Treasury $235,000 more than will the power companies' offer. They have attempted to lead the people of Alabama to believe that if they could get Muscle Shoals they could distribute much more power than they are now distributing and could meet more demands than they are now meeting. They have not told the people of Alabama that they hold more than sufficient power to satisfy every need in the State if they would only develop that power. They have attempted to lead the people of Alabama to believe that if Mr. Ford gets Muscle Shoals he will not distribute power. They know that Mr. Ford, on the 11th day of October, 1923, issued a statement in reply to a statement from the Secretary of War, in which Mr. Ford said that he would distribute power. They know that this means competition and that competition means good service and fair rates for the people of Alabama. [Applause.]

Since that great meeting in Montgomery, the Alabama Power Co. in an effort to influence the people of Alabama, has spent thousands of dollars, and all of this money they have taken from the pockets of the consumers—the people of Alabama. They have attempted to subsidize the press. Column after column of their advertisements have appeared in our papers. They have banqueted civic clubs and societies. They have given fine prizes and made large donations. They have chartered private cars and special trains, and financed junketing trips of all sorts. They have gone into municipalities and made all kinds of promises of cheap rates and fine service. They have set out to gain control of directorates and of high officials. Everywhere, in a thousand ways, they have attempted the purchase of the people of Alabama. My people are not a rich people, but they are an honorable people. They have not swerved—they have not turned. They remain steadfast and unanimous in their desire for the acceptance of the Ford offer. [Applause.]

Just as our committee was on the verge of closing the hearings on Muscle Shoals, the Alabama Power Co. joined hands with eight other power companies of the South, all descendants of a common ancestor, all children of British capital, and all seeking, by their joint efforts, to acquire a monopoly of the water power of the South. These companies, under the leadership of the Alabama Power Co., brought in a new offer for Muscle Shoals. After the expenditure of so much money in Alabama, after such great efforts on the part of the Alabama Power Co., the Alabama Power Co. was able to present to our committee witnesses from Alabama in number less than the fingers of the hand.

These witnesses did not possess the effrontery to advocate the offer of the power companies. They all said that they came merely to ask that Muscle Shoals be disposed of to the interest of Alabama. But their coming found its explanation when one of these witnesses admitted on being questioned by me that the first thing he did when he arrived in Washington was to go to the room of the president of the Alabama Power Co. at the Washington Hotel, where, on paper furnished him by the president of the Alabama Power Co., the witness, together with the president and the attorney of the Alabama Power Co., prepared the notes from which the witness testified before our committee. One of these witnesses was the distinguished mayor of Mobile. When he appeared before our committee, the people of Mobile, fearful lest his appearance might be interpreted as representative of them, held a referendum vote on the disposition of Muscle Shoals, and the result of that referendum was 11,856 votes for the acceptance of the Ford offer and 17 votes for the acceptance of the power company's offer. [Applause.]

If a referendum could be held this day throughout the State of Alabama, the answer would be no less decisive, no less emphatic. There are 10 Representatives from that Commonwealth in this House, and there will be 10 votes from that Commonwealth in this House for the Ford offer. Yea, more, when the roll shall be called and the South shall answer, I prophesy that there will not be one discordant note in that answer. Never in all its history has there been in the South more singleness of purpose, more unanimity of feeling than there is this day on this question of Muscle Shoals. From all over this Union will come the voices that will swell the chorus and sing out the victory of this measure. For, mark you, not a single Member of the 435 Members of this House asks or advocates the acceptance of the offer of the power companies—no; not even their most valiant servant, the gentleman from Iowa. And whatever else may be said of him, let it ever be recorded to his credit that he favored the provision written into Mr. Ford's proposal that Muscle Shoals should always be held and controlled by American citizens and by American citizens only. I say this reverently. I say it as one who in the hour of the Nation's danger was privileged to answer the Nation's call. I say it as one who would gladly answer that call to-morrow. But heaven forbid, that it should be my lot to answer that call with the powder horn of this Nation in the hands of a foreign power. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, as a Representative of the people of Alabama, commissioned by them to speak, standing here this hour and gathering in my own the voices of them all, I ask you to reject the power companies' offer; I ask you to accept the Ford offer; one means monopoly of my people, the other means freedom for my people; one means oppression and greed, the other means independence and opportunity; one means selfishness and cupidity and exploitation, the other means growth and happiness and prosperity; one is cast over with the pall of disappointment, of defeat, of disaster, the other fills the future with faith, with hope, with promise; one is unpatriotic and un-American, the other is patriotic and American; the one, God forbid, the other, God grant. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

[By unanimous consent, Mr. HILL of Alabama was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, President Coolidge in his annual message to this Congress, discussing the situation at Muscle Shoals, stated the problem to be that of developing low-price nitrates—

> For the direct benefit of the farmers and the indirect benefit of the public in time of peace, and of the Government in time of war.

He stated:

> Such a solution will involve complicated negotiations, and there is no authority for that purpose. I therefore recommend that the Congress appoint a small joint committee to consider offers, conduct negotiations, and report definite recommendations.

Many of us listened to the President and believed that his recommendation was a wise one. Others of us, young in the service in this House, have been told that for those on this side the recommendation of the President was akin to gospel and should be obeyed, and that to fail to obey was sin. Imagine then our surprise to learn that this matter, sufficient in importance to receive special mention in the Executive message, has been handled without any apparent consideration being given to the logical plan of procedure which came from the White House.

Much has been said regarding Muscle Shoals, and little has come from it except to create a confusion in the public mind, both as to the facts involved and the purpose sought to be accomplished.

The proposed bill outlines a contract to be entered into on behalf of the Government authorizing the sale and leasing of valuable properties. Every question of its interpretation should be so safeguarded that the rights of the Government are without doubt fully protected. Every question of the advisability, feasibility, or advantage of the Government bartering away the great untold, almost unlimited resources of Muscle Shoals should be decided in favor of the people of the United States. It is their heritage, their birthright, not only for themselves but for generations yet unborn, that we are asked to dispose of in this act.

With that thought in mind I read this bill and wondered in doing so just why many of its provisions were made. Then I read the report of the majority of the committee and the letters therein from Henry Ford, and there I found my answer. Gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House criticized often during the debate on the tax bill the writing of that legislation in the Treasury Department, emphatically telling us that the writing and framing of legislation was the sole right and duty of Congress. Some of those same gentlemen now ask us to pass this bill without amendment, and I find that it was written, not in the Treasury Department by a sworn official of the Government, but that in all material points its contents were dictated almost word for word by the offer presented by an automobile manufacturer of Detroit.

This is not a question of the cheap production of fertilizer or the production of fertilizer at all. That can be produced and without doubt will be produced in the near future at Muscle Shoals. The sole question here should be, By whom should this fertilizer be produced? In other words, should the plant be sold; and if so, to whom? Or should the Government operate and control the plant?

If the answer is that the plant should be sold, then a reading of the bill, which, we are informed by its introducer, should not be amended, convinces me that it should not be sold under the conditions of this proposed act.

In the provision for the completion of both Dams Nos. 2 and 3 it is provided that the company shall complete Dam No. 2 and build Dam No. 3 "as speedily as possible at actual cost and without profit to the company." Around this are thrown no safeguards, no protection as to limiting cost, of giving public notice of contracts, no assurance of economy—none of the things are required to be done by the company which Mr. Ford is to organize such as the Government requires in all cases where it is acting directly. The Government does only one thing, and that is pay whatever bills Mr. Ford's company contracts in the building of this plant. After these dams are built Mr. Ford's company begins after a few years to pay 4 per cent interest on the investment. But it should be noted that the United States now has invested in Dam No. 2 about $17,000,000, upon which Mr.

Ford pays absolutely no interest or lease rental. He gets it free. The United States contracts to install machinery producing 850,000 horsepower; only 100,000 of it is to be used in producing fertilizer, and the rest is Ford's, absolutely to do with as he pleases, save and except not to exceed a small 300 horsepower which Mr. Ford's company agrees to deliver "free of charge" to the Government to operate the locks. Out of the unlimited power generated by the property paid for by the people of the United States the pittance of not to exceed 300 horsepower is given back in a great show of generosity.

The President in his message further stated:

> The best information I can secure indicates that present methods of power production would not be able profitably to meet the price at which these imports can be sold. To obtain a supply from this water power will require long and costly experimentation. Otherwise our purpose would fail completely. It seems desirable therefore in order to protect and promote the public welfare to have adequate covenants that such experimentation be made and carried on to success.

The company here covenants—> to determine by research whether by means of electric-furnace methods and industrial chemistry there may be produced on a commercial scale fertilizer compounds of higher grade and at lower prices than farmers and other users of commercial fertilizers have in the past been able to obtain, and to determine whether in a broad way the application of electricity and industrial chemistry may accomplish for the agricultural industry of the country what they have economically accomplished for other industries; and if so found and determined, to reasonably employ such improved methods.

The President says this experimentation will be "long and costly" and that there should be "adequate covenants" that it be carried on to success.

In this clause there is nothing definite, nothing fixed in amount, time, method, nor plan; no assurance of success given, and if successful, the company agrees to "reasonably employ such improved method." A clause more indefinite, vague, and inconclusive could not be written regarding a matter upon which so much of the future of the industry depends.

This property is practically being given to Henry Ford, and yet the bill provides that in the event of war, when property and lives should be fully and freely placed at the disposal of the Government, if the Government wants this plant, or any part of it, it must protect Ford's company from its losses, not specified nor limited, must return the property in as good condition as when received, and must reasonably compensate the company for its use. The liberal provisions of this contract are not reciprocal even in time of great national emergency.

Neither is the company content with all of these benefits for 100 years, but unblushingly asks for a preference right in dealing with the Congress 100 years from now for further extensions of the use of this great resource.

The right to condemn private property for public use is a recognized right of the Government. But here it is proposed to condemn private property not for public use or public good but that, once condemned, it may be improved by the building of a steam plant thereon by funds taken from the Public Treasury and then sold to Ford's company at a small fraction of its cost for his private use and purposes. The United States agrees to buy rights of way, lands, and flowage rights at Dam No. 2 through an agent to be named, not by the United States but by the company. Have we reached the point in the development of the United States where the Government buying property to lease to a third party allows that third party to name the agent to conduct the negotiations for the Government?

These are but a few of the many places in the bill that are objectionable and sufficient to defeat it. But there are other reasons for rejecting this pact.

Mr. Ford does not put his fortune behind this plan, but only $10,000,000 in a corporation. There is nothing to prevent him selling at any time.

We propose to contract to keep these dams in repair for 100 years, at a fixed payment of $55,000 a year. There is absolutely no basis upon which these figures can be established; it may be necessary to rebuild the dams; they may be destroyed by flood or earthquake, but the Government and not Ford's company takes the risk. Who can estimate the purchasing power of the dollar 100 years from now? Yet this would bind the Government for 100 years without more than a wild guess of future conditions.

This bill, as I see it, is to give Ford and his company a fee simple title to about $90,000,000 worth of property for $5,000,000, the junk value of the property to-day being estimated at from $11,000,000 to $16,000,000. The steam plant included in this sale can be sold to-day for $4,500,000, so we are told. The Government now has $3,472,487.25 of this $5,000,000 in its Treasury, received from the sale of the Gorgas plant to the Alabama Power Co., and which Mr. Ford asks to be spent on a new plant.

It is proposed that we should appropriate $50,000,000 more to put this plant in operation and then lease it for a sum which the Senate Committee on Agriculture says amounts to 2.79 per cent per year. It is proposed to do this with money belonging to the people of the United States, taken from them by taxation, and at the same time grant to Mr. Ford's company the right to charge 8 per cent profit on fertilizer sold to our farmers and turn him absolutely loose in the profits he can make from the power monopoly which we give him.

The Federal water-power act provides that there shall be no grant of water-power privileges for more than 50 years—here it is proposed to make it 100 years. Another provision is that a small rental shall be paid for the use of power that belongs to all the people—here there is no rental for the power provided. Public control of the rates charged the consumers and a regulation of the service either by State or Federal authority is again a principle of development insisted on in America—here Mr. Ford's company is without regulation either by State or Federal authority. There is no limit to the profit he can make. We have heretofore asked the lessee to construct his own dams with his own money and take the risk of disaster and accident—here the Government furnishes the money to construct the dams and takes the risk of accident and disaster. Need more be said to defeat the bill?

Fertilizer may be necessary in many southern and eastern States now, and it will become more and more necessary as the years go on, and the Government should be in a position to develop and deliver that fertilizer to the people of the United States in unlimited, and not limited, amounts at cost, and not cost plus 8 per cent. My own State of Nebraska has used an average of 500 tons of commercial fertilizer per year for the past several years. During that same time the United States has used from 5,000,000 to 7,000,000 tons. When the time comes that the great States of the West demand a supply of fertilizer such as the East now uses, where are they to get it if the Government now adopts a policy of disposing of all its great resources and placing them out of the control of the American people? Mr. Ford's company agrees to produce only 40,000 tons of nitrogen—only one-half the present demand—and he can not be compelled to produce more, and will only produce that when it can be sold at a profit. Teapot Dome, with its oil is valuable, but when the oil is gone its value ends—it is a decreasing asset. Here the value of this asset increases with use. The public has condemned the leasing of the oil lands; it will condemn in like manner this bill when a full understanding of it is had.

Go back 100 years and picture the development of the United States—its railroads, telegraphs, telephones, electricity, chemistry, medicine, control of the air and the seas, the changes in methods of farming, and so forth. Imagine ahead development of similar import, and who can tell the demand for nitrate and power 50 or 75 years from now? Yet for 100 years this great power plant, with all its possibilities of service and good to the general public, is absolutely sold and disposed of—with only 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen required to be produced—everything else belongs to Ford's company.

Surely some way can and must be devised whereby this resource can be properly developed, fertilizer produced, power benefits given to the people, and the Government protected without this great subsidy being given to Mr. Ford to enter into a profitable business.

Such a method is offered in the plan of Government ownership and operation offered in the Senate by Mr. NORRIS, of Nebraska. It keeps title to the property in the Government of the United States; it provides for the completion of Dams 2 and 3 by the Government and their operation and control by a Government corporation directed to operate the dams and steam plant at Muscle Shoals to supply explosives in time of war and fertilizer in time of peace, surplus power developed is to be sold, preference being given to State, counties, and municipalities under charges and regulations provided in the act. Nitrate plant No. 1, which Mr. Ford may abandon, the Norris bill provides shall be used for experimental purposes for the developing of improved methods for the extraction of nitrogen from the air. In case of war the whole plant can be taken over by the Government without cost to the taxpayer. Fertilizer will be produced, power will be distributed to the people at large instead of monopolized by one individual, the whole people will benefit and not a corporation. While not enough fertilizer can be produced to supply the demand the Government will be in a position to prevent extortion. As I see it, everything that the people can gain by this development can be had by Government operation and control, and all rights and privileges belonging not only to this generation but to generations yet unborn will be adequately preserved. I favor the Government operation and control of this great project for the benefit of all the people.

Much has been said here regarding the benefit that the passage of this bill will confer upon the American farmer and appealing to his present distress as a reason for its passage. May I call the attention of this Congress to the fact that the great agricultural distress is in those States between the Mississippi River and the Rocky Mountains and north of the Mason and Dixon line, and that the passage of this bill will be of no present benefit to them.

This Congress can do much to aid in bringing back a measure of prosperity to the agricultural regions of the West. President Coolidge, in his annual address, stated:

> Competent authorities agree that an entire reorganization of the rate structure for freight is necessary. This should be ordered at once by Congress.
> The farmer—
> must be assisted by the reorganization of the freight-rate structure which could reduce charges on his production.

A reorganization of the freight-rate structure, with a consequent reduction on the products of the farms of the West, a freight-rate reduction for the western farming communities will be of great and material benefit. This Congress can start that in operation—the President asked on December 6 last that it be done at once. It has not yet been done.

In many sections of the West farmers on reclamation projects, who have staked their all in an effort to make the desert sections produce abundantly, who did so relying on the promises of the Government, are waiting while heartaches and tragedy increase for this Congress to give relief. They have seen their Government treat other great groups of citizens generously. They have heard of this bill loaning the people's money to Mr. Ford at 4 per cent while they are asked to pay 12 per cent interest on delinquent charges which they can not pay from the products of their farms. They have seen the agencies created by Congress to give the farmer financial relief refuse them aid, or having once given it the Federal agency has become the hardest taskmaster of them all. They have been told that farm lands were the basic wealth of the country, and they, owning lands, have offered them as collateral to the Federal reserve banks for loans to carry on their operations and been refused credit thereon. This should be corrected. They are asking the liberalization of the rules under which the farm-loan agencies operate in order that they may better serve.

They have believed that an increase of the tariff on wheat would help restore prices to their great commodity, and this Congress has refused to act at the request of their representatives.

They are asking this Congress to act, and act quickly, in the consideration of bills designed to bring about a better price condition for their commodities, to aid them in the diversification of their products, to reduce the spread between the consumer and the producer. These plans take money, but if the Government has money to assist Mr. Ford in the development of Muscle Shoals, then it also should have money to assist in the restoring of prosperity to the farmers of the West.

They have asked that freight congestion and high transportation rates be relieved by the developing of the inland waterways of the Nation.

The great Western States have led in the demand for the passage of adjusted compensation and are looking to this Congress to take quick and favorable action thereon.

The West also expects this Congress to submit for adoption the constitutional amendment recently passed in the Senate regarding the election of a President and Vice President and to submit an amendment regulating child labor. It expects this Congress to do justice to the requests of the postal employees of the country for a readjustment of salaries and allowances. It expects the passage of adequate pension bills for the veterans of the Civil and Spanish-American Wars, their widows and dependents. [Applause.]

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 13 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN], a member of the committee.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield, first, to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SALMON].

Mr. SALMON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I can not let the chance pass to take a few moments of your time to voice the sentiment of the people of the seventh congressional district of Tennessee. They have gone with this proposition from its inception to the present. Government operation is beyond question.

The disposition of Muscle Shoals is not a matter merely of local interests, nor is it a partisan matter; it is a subject in which the entire country is interested. It is one of the enterprises brought into being on account of the World War; contemplated at the time for the purpose of the manufacture of nitrates necessary in the manufacture of munitions.

The location of Muscle Shoals made it almost impenetrable from without, and nature's handiwork had formed one of the most ideal conditions for the harnessing of the water of the great Tennessee River and the development of hydroelectric power known to the country and probably the best known to civilized man. These elements concentrated and combined at Muscle Shoals in the northwestern corner of the State of Alabama, and just south of and across the line from southern Tennessee, caused the selection as the place for the erection and establishing the world's greatest nitrate plant and the building of one of the most gigantic dams and locks ever attempted in this country. The power to be produced from the harnessing of the Tennessee River at the point is estimated to be over 1,000,000 potential horsepower. Here the river is about three-quarters of a mile wide, passing over solid limestone rock for a distance of something like 30 miles and through a channel cut through a tableland, with the banks on each side ranging from 150 to 300 feet high.

The importance of the place discovered, the decision made, the necessity being great, the Government entered upon the construction of the dam known as the Wilson Dam and the building of two nitrate plants—thousands of cottages suitable for housing tenants, employees, without reserve and probably with one of the greatest aggregation of engineers, mechanics, and laborers employed anywhere in the United States at any time on a similar project. Cost, expense, nor economy were considered, but the one sole object was to harness the power, transmit it into electrical energy at the earliest time possible in the production of war munitions. Wages and materials were high, and no time taken to develop and try out economical systems in the development of this project, hence it is estimated that the prosecution of the projects during this trying period must have cost at least twice as much as it would have cost in normal times, and, too, being done at a time when the American dollar was worth only about 55 or 60 per cent of its normal value. Therefore the real value of that portion of the project completed during this period would not be much, if any, over half the actual amount expended.

The only portion of this project which is of stable and lasting value is the dam and locks, steam plants, quarries, and acquired lands. The ever-changing process of the development of such chemicals as nitrates and the machinery necessary for its production may render practically worthless the nitrate plants hastily constructed during the emergency of the World War.

The hundreds of thousands of dollars expended by the Government for tools and equipment for temporary use in construction and the temporary buildings erected for housing during this emergency can be of little value even in scrapping. Therefore the only real, tangible asset the Government has to dispose of is composed of the dams, steam plant, rock quarry, and lands. The other portions of the project are of doubtful value. There was so much doubt about the peace-time value of this project that early after the armistice it was freely discussed and predicted in Government circles and throughout the country that the entire project should be abandoned and the materials scrapped and disposed of. Just at this time, when the Government representatives were seemingly perplexed, without purpose or policy regarding the project, they turned to America's two greatest geniuses—Mr. Edison, the inventive genius, and Mr. Ford, the industrial genius—for investigation, advice, and counsel. These two men, at their own expense and in their own way, visited the project, made minute investigations of its possibilities, and reported to the Government, thus saving Muscle Shoals from the same character of scrap heap to which so many war enterprises had been consigned.

Then followed the proposition of Mr. Ford to take over the undertaking, complete the Wilson Dam and build Dam No. 8, utilize the power produced by the harnessing of the Tennessee River in the manufacture of nitrates for use as a component of fertilizer in time of peace and for the manufacture of nitrates and munitions of war in time of war, agreeing to maintain and keep in repair the entire project for a period of 100 years, binding himself, his heirs, assigns, and estate to organize a $10,000,000 corporation as a guaranty that his proposition would be fulfilled and carried out. Up until that time other interests had manifested no interest in rescuing the Muscle Shoals proposition from disuse and the scrap heap. But as it began to appear that one of the Nation's greatest natural resources in hydroelectric power was going to be harnessed and utilized neighboring and competing interests began to take notice, and at first began to disseminate propaganda questioning Ford's ability to perfect the project and manufacture nitrates; but this argument was soon utterly refuted by Ford's known achievement, and then they began another propaganda to the effect that Ford had not offered the Government enough for the project, that an individual should not control it, and by many other methods succeeded in so muddying the minds of the Representatives that legislative action was stifled for more than two years.

Just about the time the committee in charge, at this session of Congress, was ready to make a report on the acceptance of the Ford offer these ambitious competitive neighbors came forth with a proposition to lease the plant for a shorter period than the Ford offer. Then followed another flood of propaganda to the effect that the Ford proposition was violative of the national defense act of 1916 and water power act of 1920, and this is the question seriously urged on the floor of the House to-day, but incidentally insist that their proposition would pay more money to the Government than would be received by it from the Ford offer. This argument "sticks in the back," as we are now disposing of a war-time emergency project.

Following this proposition manufacturing interests, chambers of commerce, and newspapers influenced directly or indirectly by them, began a gigantic and well-directed propaganda in favor of this proposition and against the Ford offer. Almost every Member of Congress has been flooded with resolutions, letters, and newspaper clippings in furtherance of this propaganda. The Ford offer has withstood all of these onslaughts and now stands forth among the agricultural interests of the country and all other allied interests as being the best offer for the Government, and for the whole people, for the handling and operation of this great resource.

I have the proud honor to represent one of the great agricultural districts in the blue-grass region of southern middle Tennessee, which section is noted for its fertile soil, great livestock industry, a large part of its territory being underlaid with rich phosphate rock from which phosphoric acid, one of the necessary components in the manufacture of fertilizer, is extracted.

The phosphate areas in this section are among the largest and richest in the United States; thus, with the manufacture of nitrates at Muscle Shoals and the production of phosphoric acid from this great area of phosphate-bearing rock in the same or near-by communities, affording two of the principal necessary components of fertilizer, make the Muscle Shoals project a national question in which every section of the United States is vitally interested.

That Mr. Ford will be the most potent factor in bringing success out of the Muscle Shoals proposition in bringing together these two necessary components in the production of commercial fertilizer is nowhere questioned or doubted.

For these reasons and further for the reason of the unshaken confidence in the honesty, integrity, sincerity, and financial ability of Henry Ford, and his determination to carry into effect his proposition and aim in the matter, almost every farmer in my entire district and in the State of Tennessee is insisting that the Ford proposition should be accepted at the earliest possible moment. That his organization may take immediate charge, complete the construction work, and put the machinery of the plant in motion, and the President's instruction to turn this project over to private interests for completion and operation, should result in the unanimous passage of the McKenzie bill, thus discontinuing the red-tape expensive governmental development at the expense of the tax-paying public and that peace-time operation of the enterprise be finally and fully declared abandoned. [Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the distinguished gentleman and public servant from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] used 55 minutes of time in discussing this question and evidently made a profound impression upon the minds of some members of the committee. Yet, I call attention to the fact that during the whole 55 minutes not one single word escaped the lips of the gentleman from Ohio to indicate that there was crossing his mind the fundamental thought back of this whole proposition, namely, to provide for national defense. In a few weeks this House will have passed appropriation bills for the Army and the Navy aggregating, perhaps, over $700,000,000, and that thing will go on year after year, never diminishing, but as we shall grow in population and power and in duty to defend this population and possessions, it will increase, perhaps, to two or three times the present sums. Yet every cannon will be defenseless, every rifle as useless as a dry cornstalk, every bomb as harmless as a baseball, unless there be sufficient nitrate, the essential destructive explosive element, and in every ingredient that goes in to make high explosives essential in war. The only resource, the only place on earth where natural nitrates may be had in sufficient quantities for war or fertilizer is in Chile. History no older than 10 years tells us the importance of that. When war broke out in Europe in 1914 both the Central Powers and the allied powers were utterly dependent upon Chilean nitrates for explosives.

On November 1, 1914, the German fleet destroyed the British fleet off the coast of Peru and shut off the supply of nitrates for the Allies. If that condition had continued, the fight for the Allies, the fight for liberty, the fight for parliamentary government, the fight for the people, could not have continued for six months. Fortunately on December 16, off the Falkland Islands, the British fleet destroyed the German fleet and opened the avenue for nitrates to pass to the Allies and closed the way by which they might reach Germany. The Germans then had to resort to the very thing we are now seeking to resort to, to wit, the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen. Further than that we now could easily be cut off in time of war by a naval power having equal or greater strength than ourselves by taking advantage of some peculiar strategic position. We are separated by thousands of miles of water from our base of nitrogen supply. The only thing that we can do to make ourselves safe, to make our artillery worth while, the only thing that national defense requires, is to have an inland supply of nitrogen—an inland supply so far from the coast that even should foreign fleets take possession of the coast towns no "big Bertha" that could be mounted on the coast could ever reach the inland supply of nitrogen and destroy it. Such a safe and secure inland supply is to be had out yonder at Muscle Shoals, and another such will in time be placed at Bowlder Canyon on the Colorado River and later in other parts of the Nation.

So goes the logic of the situation. Fortunately—it seems as if by a divine place—the very power that is used to destroy human life in time of war, to wit, nitrogen, is the power necessary to produce the things essential to preserve human life in time of peace, to wit, nitrogen. [Applause.]

ECONOMICAL NATIONAL DEFENSE POLICY.

Now, that is just what we have in the proposition now before Congress. The nitrate plant is more important than any arsenal or machine shop or navy yard, because they are all powerless without nitrates. The contract will bind Henry Ford to keep nitrate plant No. 2 in perfect condition to make nitrates for war purposes at any time during the whole period of 100 years. If the Government were to undertake to maintain this nitrate plant itself, as it does maintain its ordnance factories and navy yards and arsenals, then it would necessitate an annual appropriation of several million dollars, and this sum of money if placed into a sinking fund would in the course of 100 years reach staggering proportions. The cumulative power of money at interest is beyond the ordinary comprehension of us people who are not accustomed to dealing with it. But for illustration, I will state that $1 put up annually, at the end of 100 years—this representing a principal of $100 only—will, if placed at interest of 4 per cent, amount at the end of 100 years to over $1,287. So that one dollar by the growing power of interest becomes more than $12.

DO WE WANT GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP, GREED, AND GRAFT?

The only question that confronts us as practical men at this time is, Shall we accept the Ford offer, or shall the Government itself complete and operate the plant at Muscle Shoals? Undoubtedly the so-called offer of the Alabama Power Co. and its associates is not worthy of serious consideration. It is a feeble imitation of some of the best points in the Ford offer, but it falls down at the vital places.

First of all, when the matter was first presented to them several years ago they ignored the whole matter, practically said that it was worthless to them, that the water power could not be developed at a cost that would prove remunerative, and held on with a deathlike clutch to their contract made under the exigency of war, whereby they claimed the right to purchase the Gorgas steam plant. The Department of Justice denounced the exacting, harsh terms of said contract, and expressed the opinion that it indicated the spirit of one seeking to drive a hard bargain with his own country in time of war.

THOUGHT THEY HAD KILLED FORD'S OFFER.

Finally, after long negotiations and frequent refusals by the Alabama Power Co. to state to the public in the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs what it considered to be the reasonable value of the Gorgas steam plant, said plant was sold by the Secretary of War to the Alabama Power Co. for about $3,500,000. Then the Alabama Power Co. thought that Ford's offer was dead. Ford had said that his proposition stood as a whole, and that he considered the Gorgas plant essential to the economical and businesslike operation of the nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals.

MADDEN'S SUGGESTION TORPEDOED ALABAMA POWER CO.

But in the face of the insistent demands from the farmers from every corner of the Nation that this great opportunity to produce fertilizers at reasonable prices and thus restore our waste lands and increase the economical production of foodstuffs, and thus while making agriculture more profitable at the same time reduce the cost of living to the people massed in industrial and commercial centers, the Hon. MARTIN B. MADDEN, chairman of the great Committee on Appropriations and universally considered to be a hard-headed, successful business man, who knows the value of a dollar, and believes in saving to the Treasury of the Nation every cent possible, and who has stood four-square many a time in the breach when efforts to raid the Treasury were being made, came forward with the proposition that in order to meet the terms of Henry Ford and give him no excuse to escape from his proposition, and thus bind him to assist this Government to carry on its program of national defense and to produce cheaper fertilizers in time of peace, that he [MADDEN] would advocate the building by this Government of a steam plant to take the place of Gorgas steam plant and thus be in a position to accept the Ford offer.

MIRACULOUS CHANGE BY ALABAMA POWER CO.

When this announcement was made from a responsible official of the Republican Party in close touch with the administration, when the President came forward with his message urging final and definite decision upon the disposition of Muscle Shoals, then consternation reigned in the ranks of the Alabama Power Co. Suddenly the Alabama Power Co. saw all of its deep-laid schemes to wreck by inaction and indirection the great project at Muscle Shoals falling to pieces, and saw rising the stalwart statue of a real competitor in the field of power production and of power distribution. Naturally the Alabama Power Co. has received sympathetic support from the Fertilizer Trust of the Nation, and from the financial interests that are common to both the Alabama Power Co. and the Fertilizer Trust. So that here a competitor was rising to haunt the Fertilizer Trust also. Then the Alabama Power Co. got busy and hearings were resumed on the bill early in January, 1924, and the Alabama Power Co. was certainly on the scene, having enlisted the cooperation of other southern power companies, and particularly the Tennessee Power Co. and the Memphis Light & Power Co. I can not see any of the earmarks of sincerity in the proposition of the Alabama Power Co. The officers of that concern, especially Mr. Thomas W. Martin, as the record will show, have been intimately familiar with the whole nitrate program planned by this Government more than eight years ago, and enacted into section 124 of the national defense act in 1916. He has known that the manufacture of nitrates for fertilizer purposes in time of peace from the same plant that was designed to manufacture nitrate explosives in time of war was a part of the same great conception and the same wise plan for the economical production of nitrates which are alike essential to the destructive power of war and to the productive power of agriculture in time of peace.

Nitrates are necessary to kill human beings in war, and necessary to feed human beings in peace. Yet in the face of all this knowledge the Alabama Power Co. came forward with a purely power proposition only, and utterly ignored the fertilizer end of the proposition. When that was called to the attention of their representative, Mr. Yates, he alluded in a veiled and mysterious sort of way to certain "other persons" who would come to Washington to make a flattering offer to take care of the fertilizer end. Finally, becoming impatient with this "hide and seek" method, I interrogated Mr. Yates, as will be found on page 74 of the printed hearings, as follows:

Mr. MCSWAIN. These gentlemen who are prepared, or who are going to be prepared, about the fertilizer proposition, are on their way to Washington?

Mr. YATES. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCSWAIN. Are they anywhere within 1,000 miles of Washington now, do you think?

Mr. YATES. Well, I think probably one is; the others are not.

Mr. MCSWAIN. How many thousands of miles do you think the others are away?

Mr. YATES. I should say there are probably two of them close to 1,000 miles away at this time.

Mr. MCSWAIN. Do you think those two will be prepared to talk when they get here?

Mr. YATES. I believe they will within a reasonable time; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you call a reasonable time?

Mr. YATES. I think this proposal, Mr. Chairman, should go in to-morrow or the day following. Now, I can not say more than that. We have to discuss several matters with them and put the proposal in and arrange for their testimony.

The next day Mr. Yates was back before the committee killing time with rambling and irrelevant talk, and when I again sought to get some definite information, as will be found on page 92 of the printed hearings, said:

Mr. MCSWAIN. I want to ask for some information again this morning, not opinion. I would like to ask if those two gentlemen who represent somebody who proposes to take the power from you for the purpose of manufacturing fertilizer have arrived in Washington?

Mr. YATES. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCSWAIN. Where are they—are they in this room?

Mr. YATES. No, sir.

Mr. MCSWAIN. They are not in this room?

Mr. YATES. No, sir.

Mr. MCSWAIN. Then, are they in Washington?

Mr. YATES. They are at the hotel.

Mr. MCSWAIN. Have you seen them?

Mr. YATES. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCSWAIN. Where did you see them?

Mr. YATES. At the Washington Hotel.

Mr. MCSWAIN. They are at the Washington Hotel?

Mr. YATES. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCSWAIN. What are their names?

Mr. YATES. I would prefer not to state.

Mr. MCSWAIN. We want to know; we want information, not opinion.

Mr. YATES. I know; but I have said in every way I could we are going to have them here, sir.

Mr. MCSWAIN. Are they not coming before this committee?

Mr. YATES. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCSWAIN. Then, where is there any objection to giving their names if they are coming.

Mr. YATES. I prefer not to do it.

ALABAMA POWER CO. WAS "THE OTHER PEOPLE."

The upshot of the whole thing was that on January 24 there was brought in what was called the offer of the fertilizer people, and, to my surprise and astonishment, this proposition was signed by the same identical corporations that signed the power proposition of January 15, with the additions of the names of Mr. Swann, Mr. Bacon, and Mr. Jones, who are understood not to represent very much financial strength, if any, but merely to have an associate and working relation with the power companies in the fertilizer proposition.

So that it appears that Mr. Yates was trifling with the committee when he said that the people who were going to make the fertilizer proposition were on their way to Washington and would arrive in time to go before the committee the next day, when, in fact, they were already in Washington, and Mr. Yates was one of them, representing the Alabama Power Co., and knew as much then and there as he knew on January 24, and as he knows to-day, about any fertilizer proposition.

Therefore when he answered the questions propounded on page 92 in the evasive, wriggling way that the record discloses, it is entirely manifest that Mr. Yates was not candid with the committee, and it is not surprising therefore that his propositions were looked upon with suspicion.

POWER END MUST GUARANTEE FERTILIZER PRODUCTION.

When the propositions of the power companies are properly scrutinized, it is manifest that they were hurriedly hatched up to try to stem the tide toward the acceptance of the Ford offer and not with any sincere businesslike intention of having them accepted instead of the Ford offer. It is well understood that the committee and the Congress and the country would insist that the power and the nitrate elements in this proposition would be so interlocked and interdependent that the power factor would guarantee and enforce the nitrate factor. The power companies came first of all on January 15 with a power proposition, pure and simple, and suggested as a sort of side issue and fifth wheel that another concern would later take up and consider the fertilizer end. Then the proposition of January 24 was finally fixed up and reluctantly brought in, and we see no interlocking and interdependence between it and the power whatever. First of all it speaks of a $5,000,000 corporation, but does not assure us that this will be paid in in cash, and, on the contrary, it might be a mere man of straw. And then it speaks of "commencing the manufacture of fertilizer after the construction of the first unit of its plant shall have been finished," and will start with 5,000 tons of nitrogen a year and gradually increase the production as the farmers may demand.

Instead of agreeing to a nonpartisan board of judges appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, representing every group of farmers in the Nation, it suggests that a single executive officer, to wit, the Secretary of Agriculture, appoint the commission, and that this commission would be the mere responsible creature of the Secretary of Agriculture alone, and does not give this price-fixing commission any of the legal status that the Ford offer does, and the offer of the power companies does not confer upon any officer of the United States the power of visitation and inspection, and, therefore, of criticism and correction, that the Ford offer does.

FIFTEEN MILLION DOLLAR CORPORATION A MYTH.

Finally, when all these matters were called to the attention of the Alabama Power Co., while the hearings were still on, one of their representatives, Mr. Yates, in desperation, seeing that they had failed to confuse the issue as they had expected, stated orally before the committee that they would agree to organize one single corporation with a capital stock of $15,000,000, to correct the other propositions, but they did not sign any paper to that effect and have never signed any paper to that effect. They did not say that this $15,000,000 or any part of it would be cash. It remains to be stated what part of it would be water, and what part would be promotion funds, and what part would be patent rights, and what part would be mere hot air.

WHY THE FORD ENEMIES WANT GOVERNMENT OPERATION.

So we come to the proposition again that the only thing before the country now is either the Ford offer or Government operation. It is true that the enemies of Mr. Ford and of his business policies, and of his personal views and private character, are so fixed in their prejudices that they would rather see the Government embark in this enterprise of making fertilizer than to see Henry Ford undertake in this way to serve his Nation by assisting agriculture in peace and by assisting national defense in time of war.

It is manifest that Mr. Ford like all great, strong, and outstanding characters has succeeded in creating many powerful enemies, and these enemies place their opposition upon a multitude of grounds. Some are so idle and frivolous as to say that because he organized the "peace-ship trip" he is too idealistic and impracticable to intrust with Muscle Shoals. Some say because he has made several hundred million dollars by manufacturing cheap cars that he sells at a very low price that he has all the money that any one man ought to have, and to let him take up his obligations under this Muscle Shoals proposition would add many millions more to his pile. Some object because he heretofore had political ambitions. Others object because having abandoned his political ambitions he has announced in favor of a particular candidate. Others object because they do not like his cars, saying that they are too "rattly" and are really dangerous to human life. These fastidious persons should find Lincoln cars more to their taste, but there they find an objection on the ground that the Lincoln is too expensive and too fine and only manifests Mr. Ford's extravagant taste. All these enemies of Mr. Ford have combined to defeat this great national enterprise. Some hate Mr. Ford because he was the first great outstanding industrialist that raised the wages of his employees. Others hate him because having bought in a bankrupt railroad, by reducing rates he built it to great financial independence. Others hate him because he refused to be sandbagged and profiteered upon by the bootlegging coal dealers and went to the mountains and bought a coal mine of his own. All these classes who hate Mr. Ford must take full responsibility for playing into the hands of the Power Trust of the South Atlantic States and the Fertilizer Trust of the United States.

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP AND ECONOMIC SABOTAGE.

The Power Trust and the Fertilizer Trust, though they generally oppose governmental operation with all the vigor of their beings, yet to-day would prefer to see the Government embark in the manufacture of fertilizer at Muscle Shoals rather than to let Henry Ford do it. And why? Because they feel satisfied that they can continue their program of sniping and that they can carry on a guerrilla warfare with the Government operations; that they can seduce and traduce first this Government agent and then that Government agent until the whole project will be in confusion; and finally, when ruined and totally discredited, that a disgusted Government will give up the whole proposition and close down the fertilizer mill and allow the nitrate plants, essential to national defense, to become inadequate and worthless, and thus throw back into the hands of these monopolists their great opportunity to continue to pile up in peace and war countless millions at the expense of the American people.

TEST NOT MERE RICHES, BUT TEST IS HOW WERE RICHES MADE AND HOW NOW USED.

What if Mr. Ford is very wealthy? Certainly he has made his fortune by his own physical and intellectual efforts. He has contributed wonderfully to the comfort and happiness of the masses of the people. He has made profits, but he has been willing to divide his profits with the public. As the price of raw material fell he would reduce the price of his cars. Millions and millions of poor men, women, and children that never would have tasted the joy of automobile riding and that could never own a Packard or a Cadillac, or even a Dodge, have been able to buy Ford touring cars and cross over the bounds of State lines and to visit scenes that otherwise would have been forever sealed to them, and thus to broaden their vision and to deepen their feelings and to carry them home filled with new ideas and deeper inspiration and to profit by the observations made in distant sections, counties, and States.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration, H. R. 518, is to authorize the Secretary of War on behalf of the Government to sell to Henry Ford, or a corporation to be incorporated by him, nitrate plants Nos. 1 and 2, Waco Quarry, and to lease Dams Nos. 2 and 3 for a period of 100 years.

I have given this bill as careful consideration as my other duties as a Member of Congress will permit. I am not an engineer and therefore can not go into the details of the engineering features of the bill. Neither am I a member of the Military Committee, and I have therefore not had the advantage of the extensive hearings held by that committee. This proposition has been under consideration for some time. It must be assumed that the Military Committee and the Secretary of War have driven the best bargain for the Government that could be made with Henry Ford with reference to this project.

Briefly, the bill (sec. 1) authorizes the contract to be made with Henry Ford, or a corporation with a minimum capital of $12,000,000 to be organized by him; the company is to complete (sec. 2) Dam No. 2, its locks, power house, and all necessary equipment as speedily as possible at actual cost for the Government and without profit to the company; the company is to lease (sec. 3) Dam No. 2, its power house and equipment, except the locks, for a period of 100 years, conditioned upon payment to the United States as an annual rental therefor 4 per cent of the actual cost of acquiring land and flowage rights and of completing the locks, dam, and power house, including all expenditures made subsequent to May 31, 1922, the interest being payable annually; and, in addition (sec. 4), pay $35,000 annually for repairs, maintenance, and operation of Dam No. 2, its gates and locks; and the company (sec. 5) agrees to furnish power sufficient for the operation of the locks, not in excess of 200 horsepower. The company further agrees (sec. 6) to construct for the United States, in accordance with plans and specifications of the Chief of Engineers, Dam No. 3 at actual cost to the company, lease the same (sec. 7) for a like period and upon practically the same terms as that of lease of Dam No. 2, and (sec. 8) pay $20,000 annually for repairs and maintenance of this dam. A sinking fund is provided, to be paid annually, of $19,868 and $3,505 by the company, sufficient to repay the Government for the money advanced in completing the construction of Dam No. 2 and for the construction of Dam No. 3. The work is to be done in accordance with plans and specifications prepared by the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army. The company (sec. 11) agrees to purchase from the United States nitrate plant No. 2 and nitrate plant No. 1, also the Waco Quarry, for a consideration (sec. 12) of $5,000,000, payable in installments, the deferred payments bearing 5 per cent interest. The company agrees (sec. 13) not to permit the property to depreciate but to keep it in a good state of repair, and agrees (sec. 14) to maintain nitrate plant No. 2 in its present state of readiness, or its equivalent, for immediate operation in the manufacture of materials necessary in time of war for the production of explosives. This is a very important provision. This plant is happily located in the inland at Muscle Shoals in northern Alabama and can not be reached by foreign foes.

FERTILIZER FOR FARMS.

I am particularly interested in the bill for the reason that it provides (sec. 14) that one of the principal considerations for the contract is the agreement on behalf of the company to manufacture nitrogen and other commercial fertilizers during the entire period of the lease, at nitrate plant No. 2, of at least 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen, which is the present annual capacity of this nitrate plant, and in the event that the plant is destroyed or damaged the same will be rebuilt. The company agrees (sec. 15) to sell fertilizer products to the farmers and other users of fertilizers at a price which shall not exceed 8 per cent of the fair, actual cost of production, and agrees to the appointment of a board of nine members nominated by the leading farm organizations, from whom the President shall select the members, subject to confirmation by the Senate, and this board, advised by a representative of the Bureau of Markets, shall determine what has been the cost of manufacture and sale of fertilizer products and regulates the price at which said fertilizer may be sold by the company, limiting the profit to 8 per cent of the actual cost. This is a very important provision to the farmers of the country. It is a provision of the very greatest value to the farmers of the South and West. The farmers are in a very depressed condition. Everybody appreciates that. Every effort should be made through legislation and administration to relieve them. The cost of production of the leading agricultural products is greater than the farmers get for them in the market. The farmers of the country need, in my opinion, among other things—

First. To be supplied with money at a lower rate of interest on long-time loans. This is attempted to be done, and is being done, through the farm land banks, the one serving Oklahoma being located at Wichita, Kans.

Second. They need better marketing facilities, and there are many bills pending before Congress at the present time and under consideration by the Committee on Agriculture to assist them in this respect. They are doing a wonderful work themselves through cooperative agencies in studying the question of marketing and in marketing their farm products. In this respect they need more financial assistance to enable them to hold their farm products so as not to be compelled to sell them upon a depressed market, but to hold and sell their products as they may be orderly marketed.

Third. They need to be encouraged in lowering the costs of production. Cheap fertilizer aids in this respect. Of course, everyone appreciates that if fertilizer is manufactured at a price that is not prohibitive and if the farmers are able by the use of a sufficient amount of fertilizer to double the amount of cotton raised per acre or the yield of wheat, oats, or increase the amount of any other farm product that can be produced from an acre of ground, the cost of production will be correspondingly lowered and the farmers will profit thereby. At present the prices of commercial fertilizer is prohibitive in Oklahoma and but little is being used. It will be a great advantage to farmers to use some fertilizer on every farm. The original cost of fertilizer is in the first place too great, and in the second place the cost of transportation would prohibit the use by farmers of very much fertilizer. The location of this plant at Muscle Shoals on the Tennessee River, in northern Alabama, is accessible to the farmers of the South, and with the Tennessee River improved it can be easily made navigable for small boats which could transport fertilizer down the Tennessee into the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, then up its tributaries, insuring water rates to a great area of country, including my own State of Oklahoma, which would have a water rate up to Fort Smith, Ark., and perhaps to Muskogee, Okla.

I favor the lease to the company to be organized by Henry Ford because—

First. It is generally recognized throughout the country that he is financially responsible and that a contract entered into with him will be carried out.

Second. It is with some embarrassment and reluctance that I say that, in my judgment, unless this bill is passed authorizing a contract to be made with this company to be organized by Henry Ford these dams will not be completed and no similar contract will be let by the authority of Congress to any other company. I base this statement upon the arguments made during the consideration of this bill and the several votes cast. I deeply regret the sectional arguments and appeals that have been made on the floor and the sectional spirit evidenced by the many votes and large number of hostile amendments offered for no other purpose than to divide the friends of the measure and to defeat it. The name of Henry Ford is an influence which has brought to the support of this bill barely sufficient number of Members of Congress to insure its favorable consideration. No other company could have brought to the support of this bill sufficient influence to insure the appropriation of a sufficient amount of money to insure the completion of Dam No. 2 and the construction of Dam No. 3 in any State in the South. We might just as well understand it, and the farmers of the country might as well understand it that if they hope to break the strangle hold of the trusts and combinations they had better get behind this bill as it passed the House. I voted against a great many amendments, which, if I had been drawing the contract, I would have supported. I was bound to assume that the Committee on Military Affairs and the Secretary of War had secured all the favorable provisions possible written into the contract, and I did not want to vote for amendments, although I favored them, if I thought that such amendments stood in the way of completing this project which I regard of such very vital interest to the farmers of the country. As your farm lands become more unproductive the need of cheap fertilizers from year to year will be felt.

Again I favored the contract with the Ford Co. over propositions made by other companies not only for the reason that the Military Committee after a thorough investigation had recommended the Ford Co., but the people of northern Alabama and the adjacent country of Tennessee, commercial bodies, business men, farmers and laborers, and in fact all classes of people, are almost a unit in favor of the Ford Co. Why is this? They had an opportunity to investigate these companies. They are not deceived by the offers of other companies. They know, of course, that the fight against the Ford offer is not only made by other power plants but in a very adroit way by the Fertilizer Trust and combinations and that all amendments are offered for the purpose of dividing the friends of the measure and to reduce the slender majority for the bill to a minority and accomplish its defeat.

The completion of this project as contemplated by this bill means a reawakening of the farmers of the South and West. It will give them renewed hope. It will convince them that the Congress of the United States is really trying to do something worth while for the farmers of the country. Of course, the farmers need other things than cheap fertilizers, but these other needs are subject matters of other bills and should be considered, and I trust will be considered, at an early date in the House. The farmers of the country will not be deceived by the many criticisms made of the bill and the many attempts made to amend it in order to encompass its defeat. The dams will be completed at Muscle Shoals and the power utilized for the benefit of the farmers of the country through a contract made with the Henry Ford Co., or cheap fertilizer will not be supplied to the farmers of the country during the present generation.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes' time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WRIGHT]. [Applause.]

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, as is well known, the Muscle Shoals project was inaugurated under the provisions of the national defense act of 1916, the particular provision under which this great project was started being that the President of the United States might select some place for the purpose of manufacturing nitrates for explosives in time of war and for fertilizers in time of peace. It would seem from the discussion of this great question that gentlemen overlook the original and prime objects and purposes for which this great plant was inaugurated. It is confused and confounded with a purely water-power proposition, when, as a matter of fact, the water power is but an incident to the great objects and purposes which the Government had in mind in the installation of this plant, these purposes, as before stated, being for the manufacture of nitrates to be used in the manufacture of explosives in time of war and for fertilizers in time of peace. The plant was located at Muscle Shoals simply because of the available water power at that point which could be developed to drive the machinery necessary to carry out the great objects and purposes which I have indicated. So that I repeat, that water-power element now sought to be made a dominant matter by the opponents of the pending bill is only secondary and is incident to carrying out the great scheme and purposes which the Government had in mind. Now, gentlemen, I wish you could go back just a few years and follow the history of this proposition. It will be recalled that the Government commenced the work of the construction of Dam No. 2, known as the Wilson Dam, and about $17,000,000 had been expended on that one project during and just after the war, and a great nitrate plant was constructed at Muscle Shoals, known as No. 2, which cost $67,000,000. Nitrate plant No. 1 was constructed at a cost of something like $12,000,000. After the close of the war and after about $17,000,000 had been expended on the construction of the dam, as well as the other large expenditures, the work stopped because of the lack of any further appropriation.

It will be recalled by gentlemen now Members of the House that the Congress absolutely refused to appropriate one dollar to prosecute further the work on the construction of the Wilson Dam. The new administration came into power and evidently regarded this Muscle Shoals project as a veritable white elephant upon its hands; and soon after Mr. Weeks became Secretary of War he directed General Beach, Chief of Engineers, to put out advertisements, so to speak, over the country to see if anybody or any company would come forward and make the Government any proposition for Muscle Shoals. Keep in mind, it was standing still, going to decay, rapidly deteriorating, the cofferdams going down and decaying, and $500,000 to $1,000,000 was being annually spent by the Government simply in caring for and preserving the property. Now, gentlemen, under those circumstances, and after these advertisements were sent out, what happened? These southern power companies which we hear so much about appeared before General Beach and absolutely discouraged the spending of another dollar at Muscle Shoals, indicating it was an impractical proposition to go any further with the construction of this great dam. They indicated to General Beach that it would be an unprofitable venture for the Government or anybody else to prosecute this work, and the only man in the whole world who came forward with a proposition was Henry Ford. Now, this proposition has been pending for over two years. I undertake to tell you, after a careful study of all the propositions which have been submitted, that the Henry Ford offer is the only single comprehensive offer which has ever been made which contemplates the carrying out of the purposes the Government had in mind in the inauguration of this great plant. I shall not take the time to enumerate its numerous provisions. You will understand that the prime object is to keep this country supplied with nitrates for explosives in time of war and, secondly, for the manufacture of fertilizers in time of peace. Now, there has been stressed here the great importance of the fertilizer proposition, but I fear many Members do not know the magnitude of what the fertilizer proposition means in the United States. Why, gentlemen, do you know that the statistics for the year 1920 show that there were used in this country fertilizers amounting to $326,399,900?

There was an increase from the year 1910 to the year 1920 from $114,882,551 to the amount I have indicated for 1920. In the year 1922 the figures show there were about 6,000,000 tons of fertilizers used in the United States. Now, you will bear in mind that a balanced commercial fertilizer consists of three elements, acid phosphate, potash, and nitrogen, and about one-fourth of these elements is nitrogen, and nitrogen is the most expensive element. It costs about twice as much as the potash and acid phosphate. Now, I want to give a few figures on Chilean nitrates. You will understand we have been relying on Chile for our nitrate supply from time immemorial.

It is expected that the manufacture by Mr. Ford of fixed nitrogen from the air at Muscle Shoals would work a veritable revolution in the manufacture and use of fertilizer in the United States. As commercial fertilizer is now manufactured and sold to the farmers there is only about an average of 300 pounds of real plant food in a ton—the remaining 1,700 pounds being inert matter or what is known as "filler." Mr. Ford could sell the fertilizer in concentrated form—the real plant food—without the filler and the farmer could do his own mixing and thereby save the enormous expense of the handling, mixing, and freight on the 1,700 pounds of inert matter or filler. Every farm has an abundance of earth suitable for this mixing. Besides the time will, perhaps, soon arrive when the real plant food in the concentrated form will be distributed in the fields without mixing with a filler.

It should also be kept in mind that the use of fertilizer is general—every State in the Union using it.

Beginning with 1831 and up to and including the first seven months of the fiscal year 1924 we imported from Chile 16,902,532 long tons. The duty we paid Chile alone on that nitrate amounts to $209,178,989.35. To-day this nitrate is costing the people of the United States $69.14 per long ton delivered at the ports of this country. That price is made up of $46.49 per long ton for the nitrate itself; export duty, per long ton, $12.53; ocean freight, $5.73; shrinkage, commissions, and so forth, $4.48; making in all, $69.14 per ton.

Mr. ALMON. And the farmers of America paid the Chilean Government more than $10,000,000 in export taxes last year?

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. I saw a statement which seems to be pretty well founded that the Guggenheims have about gathered in a monopoly of the nitrate of Chile, a monopoly that has never consulted the interest of anybody but themselves.

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes. I want to follow the consideration of this proposition through the Committee on Military Affairs of the House. When this matter was first taken up it was opposed by the Fertilizer Trust of this country and opposed by the Water Power Trust, and that fight was led by this company that you have heard so much about, known as the Alabama Power Co. It is one of the allied power companies that are making bids for this property.

When the matter first came up these interests, which first fought this proposition, insisted that the development was unnecessary; that there was already enough water power developed in that section of the country; and, in the next place, that Henry Ford could not make fertilizers at Muscle Shoals, and that if he could make it, it was not needed, because there was already an oversupply in the country. Now, after a lapse of two years, these same interests came before the committee and insisted that the acceptance of the Ford offer would be detrimental to the water-power interests in the southeastern section of the country, and that this power should not be turned over to Mr. Ford but distributed by them over the country, and that there is now a scarcity of this power in the Southeast. These same people, who in 1922 ridiculed the idea of Henry Ford or anybody else making fertilizer at Muscle Shoals, now come and say they will undertake to do it, and do it at half the price that is now being charged the farmers of the United States, and stress the desirability and importance of it being done, and show it is entirely practicable.

Let us see if we have a dearth of water power in this country. I have some statistics as to primary power which has and can be developed in the United States, as follows:

Water powers of the United States.

[Estimated horsepower January 1, 1920.]

Region.	Developed.	Undeveloped.	Total.
North Atlantic States	1,788,800	1,465,200	3,254,000
South Atlantic and Eastern Gulf States	1,509,500	2,691,500	4,201,000
Ohio River drainage area	1,287,900	2,649,100	3,937,000
Upper Mississippi River region	809,000	1,396,000	2,205,000
Lower Mississippi River region	146,800	770,200	917,000
Western Gulf region	68,000	632,000	700,000
Mississippi River drainage area	755,100	4,699,900	5,455,000
Colorado River drainage area	438,900	5,461,100	5,900,000
North Pacific States	719,600	22,400,400	23,120,000
South Pacific and Rocky Mountain States	1,088,600	8,931,400	10,020,000
Total for the United States	8,612,200	51,096,800	59,709,000

You will notice there has been developed in the South Atlantic and Gulf States region 1,509,500 horsepower, and there is undeveloped 2,691,500 horsepower. In the whole United States there has been developed 8,612,200 horsepower, and there is undeveloped 51,096,800 horsepower; so that I do not see, gentlemen, that there is any probability of a dearth of water power in this country at an early date.

The trouble about it, gentlemen—and we might as well be plain—is that this Alabama Power Co. had hoped that the Government would go forward and spend its money on the construction of dams at Muscle Shoals, and then this company would pick it up for a song. There is no trouble about the available water power in the Southeast if they want to develop it. It is available.

Now, some question has arisen as to the construction of this offer and as to the fertilizer proposition contained in it. I want to say, for the benefit of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], who criticized the language of the fertilizer proposition and said it was not in accordance with the offer as printed in the report, that by some means in the printing of that report the final offer as submitted by Mr. Ford was not printed, so far as the fertilizer feature is concerned, but the language printed in the bill is exactly the same as that in the proposal of Mr. Ford as finally perfected and agreed to.

Now, it is conceded that it is important to have nitrates in order to make the United States independent of all other countries for its supply. It is also conceded that it is needed for munitions, and it is conceded that it is necessary for agriculture. The question is, Can it be produced at Muscle Shoals?

Now, the chemists and experts and scientific men all agree that it can be made there, and at a much less cost than is now being paid for it. It is true that the art is constantly undergoing changes. Now, it being true that it can be produced there, let us see if the Ford offer binds him to produce fertilizer at Muscle Shoals. I invite your attention to section 14 of the McKenzie bill, which provides:

Since the manufacture, sale, and distribution of commercial fertilizers to farmers and other users thereof constitute one of the principal considerations of this offer, the company expressly agrees that, continuously throughout the lease period, except as it may be prevented by reconstruction of the plant itself, or by war, strikes, accidents, fires, or other causes beyond its control, it will manufacture nitrogen and other commercial fertilizers, mixed or unmixed, and with or without filler, according to demand, at nitrate plant No. 2 or its equivalent, or at such other plant or plants adjacent or near thereto as it may construct, using the most economical source of power available.

The opposition want to distort this into a meaning that it does not convey by saying that Mr. Ford will not have to manufacture this fertilizer at Muscle Shoals unless the market demands call for it, when, as a matter of fact, the words "according to demand" relate exclusively to the character and form in which he is to offer this fertilizer for sale.

In other words, if Mr. A wants to buy pure nitrogen under this contract Mr. Ford will have to sell it to him, and if Mr. B wants it mixed with other elements, Mr. Ford will have to mix it for him and sell it to him in that form. So that the words "market demand," as they are inserted in that provision, do not relate to the quantity he is to produce, but to the kind he is to produce. Is not that clear, gentlemen?

Now, we will read further from the fertilizer provision in the offer:

The annual production of these fertilizers shall have a nitrogen content of at least 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen, which is the present annual capacity of nitrate plant No. 2.

Can the English language make that any clearer? If anybody could put any fancied construction upon the first part of this section 14 which would make it look doubtful—and they can not do it—why, certainly what follows would take away the fancied doubt, when it says:

The annual production of these fertilizers shall have a nitrogen content of at least 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen, which is the present annual capacity of nitrate plant No. 2. If during the lease period said nitrate plant No. 2 is destroyed or damaged from any cause, the company agrees to restore such plant, within a reasonable time, to its former capacity.

Now, gentlemen, I want to say in connection with these fertilizer provisions that I was on a subcommittee appointed by the Committee on Military Affairs which was to undertake to perfect and work out a provision with Mr. Ford's representatives which would guarantee to the Government that Mr. Ford would produce 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen a year.

Mr. QUIN. And does not the bill contain the exact language worked out by that subcommittee?

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes. That subcommittee held many meetings, and I want to tell you the provision was not an easy thing to draw, because, as you lawyers know, these commonplace things are the most difficult to clearly express. We wanted to accomplish several things in this provision. We wanted, first, to bind Mr. Ford to manufacture fixed nitrogen for fertilizers with a nitrogen content of at least 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen for 100 years at Muscle Shoals or adjacent to that plant. Not only that, but we wanted to obligate him to make it continuously during the 100 years.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. WRIGHT. Certainly.

Mr. BEGG. I notice the bill provides that he shall make it, provided he is not reconstructing the plant. Suppose he decided he could not profitably make it and did not want to make it. Would he not be complying with the terms of the bill and requirements of the contract if he simply tore down the building and proceeded to take 50 years to reconstruct it?

Mr. WRIGHT. It would bear no such construction. It means when it is destroyed by winds, fires, accidents, or like casualties.

Mr. BEGG. It does not say that. It says in the process of reconstruction.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I will yield the gentleman five additional minutes provided he does not give it away in interruptions.

Mr. BEGG. Evidently the gentleman from Mississippi does not want any information about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for five additional minutes.

Mr. WRIGHT. The suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Begg] is merely fanciful, like the other attacks made here. What I was going to say was that after many meetings—and there were some good lawyers on that subcommittee——

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WRIGHT. No.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The gentleman is a member of the committee, but does not seem to want to give any information.

Mr. WRIGHT. Later, if I have the time, I will yield. My friend from the State of Washington [Mr. Miller] was a member of that subcommittee and several others, and we met time after time and at times with representatives of Mr. Ford in an effort to perfect some language which would carry out the points we had in mind, to bind Mr. Ford to manufacture fertilizers at Muscle Shoals, mixed or unmixed, with or without filler, and with a nitrogen content of 40,000 tons annually, and finally this language, as contained in section 14 of the McKenzie bill, was agreed upon. I undertake to say, gentlemen, barring any personal connection I had with it, that I do not believe that the language could be improved on.

I think it carries out the idea of the committee in binding Mr. Ford to make fertilizers at Muscle Shoals and that it would bind him if the offer is accepted.

There has been a great deal said here about the cyanamid process being obsolete, and that Mr. Ford is to operate nitrate plant No. 2, which is to produce fixed nitrogen, under the cyanamid process. In that connection let us read this fertilizer provision further. Mr. Ford agrees:

(a) To determine by research whether by means of electric-furnace methods and industrial chemistry there may be produced on a commercial scale fertilizer compounds of higher grade and at lower prices than farmers and other users of commercial fertilizers have in the past been able to obtain, and to determine whether in a broad way the application of electricity and industrial chemistry may accomplish for the agricultural industry of the country what they have economically accomplished for other industries; and if so found and determined, to reasonably employ such improved methods.

So he does not bind himself to the cyanamid process; he does not bind himself to any process, but he binds himself to use the most economical process of securing fixed nitrogen from the air by the electric-furnace methods and industrial chemistry.

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WRIGHT. Certainly.

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. I wish the gentleman would give his opinion upon the stipulations in that contract which seek to bind Mr. Ford, his estate, and his heirs during the 100 years to comply with that contract and whether he is strictly obligated to do so.

Mr. WRIGHT. That is contained in section 23, and I will read that provision as it appears in the bill:

SEC. 23. All of the contracts, leases, deeds, transfers, and conveyances necessary to effectuate the acceptance of said offer shall be binding upon the United States, and jointly and severally upon Henry Ford, his heirs, representatives, and assigns, and the company to be incorporated by him, its successors and assigns.

That language, as it appears, certainly binds Mr. Ford, his heirs, and assigns to the faithful performance of any of these contracts that may be entered into as to the manufacture of fertilizers or anything that is covered by his offer. The English language can not make it any clearer.

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. Why did you not use the words "executors and administrators?"

Mr. WRIGHT. Well, heirs and assigns cover everything; that binds Mr. Ford's entire estate absolutely, and there is no doubt about that.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WRIGHT. No; I decline to yield. That is not a new question; that has been up in the committee, and the opposition to the bill has urged that all along. The language is clear and unambiguous and absolutely binds Mr. Ford and estate.

Much was said by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burton] about the national water power act and in criticism of the power being turned over to Mr. Ford without being placed under the provisions of this act. There is absolutely no analogy between entering into the proposed contract with Mr. Ford and granting some person or company a license to develop a water power on a navigable stream. When such a license is granted under the act it does not impose on the licensee the heavy liabilities and responsibilities which Mr. Ford proposes to assume under his offer—the greatest, perhaps, ever proposed to be assumed by any man or company in the history of the world.

Besides, this is a case of the Government dealing with its own water-power plants, developed and to be developed, with its own money, and connected therewith and as a part of the same contract embodying stipulations imposing the heavy obligations on Mr. Ford of keeping the great nitrate plant in a state of readiness, at his own expense, for war purposes for the next 100 years and manufacturing the fertilizer in accordance with the terms of his proposal. What could be accomplished if he should be placed under the terms of the water power act?

All of the States have public utility boards or commissions with regulatory powers, and under the act in question the Federal Water Power Commission has no authority to fix rates in a State which has a State commission, the only exception in such cases being it can settle disputes where the commissioners of the two States can not agree. To place the Muscle Shoals power under the Federal act would mean that 25 cents per horsepower would have to be paid—one half to the Federal commission and the other half to the Board of Engineers of the War Department, and thereby increase the cost to the farmer of fertilizer produced at Muscle Shoals.

The gentleman from Ohio also severely criticizes the inadequacy of price Mr. Ford proposes to pay for the nitrate plants. As a matter of fact, this consideration is insignificant compared to the real consideration which would move the Government to accept the offer, the real consideration being the stupendous and unprecedented obligations proposed to be assumed by Mr. Ford. The gentleman promised some constructive suggestions as to Muscle Shoals, but during the entire 55 minutes he addressed the House his only suggestion was that he favored Government operation and ownership in preference to any of the offers which had been submitted, and that he was opposed to Government operation and ownership.

My friends, the issue is squarely joined. The great interests opposing the acceptance of the Ford offer have been energetically spreading a propaganda from one end of the country to the other, using freely the press of the country for the dissemination of misleading statements intended to poison the public mind and create a prejudice against the offer. The minority report on this bill has been broadcasted over the South; certainly not by the nominal author of it.

On the other hand, the distressed and struggling farmers of the country are eagerly watching our action and hoping and praying that we will pass this bill and thereby give them some relief. Which side will you take?

It is a momentous issue and fraught with transcendant importance. No country can long endure unless it encourages and fosters its agricultural industry—the basic industry and upon which depends the success of all others.

This is a great national question with which we are dealing. Let us dispose of it without partisanship, prejudice, or passion, but with an eye single to the best interest of the people of our beloved country and their posterity.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Mississippi whether the members of the committee who have all the information on this bill have been enjoined from giving information to the Members of the House?

Mr. QUIN. The gentleman can get all the information he pleases from his own colleagues, who control half the time.

Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in the very brief time allotted to me it will be impossible for me to fully discuss any of the particular features of the Ford offer. I have had occasion several times heretofore discuss it to a considerable extent.

I very much appreciate, Mr. Chairman, the courtesy of my good friend from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] in yielding me this brief time. I am aware, of course, of the many demands that have been made upon him for time. I particularly appreciate it because the movement to harness this great waterpower which has been going to waste for so many years at Muscle Shoals, and to make it serviceable for humanity, was first started in the city of Nashville, Tenn., where I live and which I have the honor now to represent upon this floor. My colleague from Tennessee [Mr. FISHER] stated that the citizens of Tennessee were for this proposition. The gentleman referred to the fact that Gov. Alf Taylor, the former Republican Governor of Tennessee, and one of the most beloved citizens of that State, two years ago, while governor, came here and appeared before the committee and appealed at that time for the acceptance of the Ford offer, and I had a telegram to-day from Maj. E. B. Stahlman, one of the most distinguished and one of the most progressive citizens of Tennessee and of the entire South, in which he expressed the opinion that in the referendum that was being taken by his great paper, the Nashville Banner, in Nashville and surrounding towns there would be, possibly, 30,000 votes, and that 90 per cent of them would be cast for this proposition. Among numerous other letters and telegrams I have also received the following telegrams:

NASHVILLE, TENN., March 4, 1924.

A. G. WOODARD, President.

Gentlemen have claimed that there is going to be no distribution of power upon the part of Mr. Ford. Other gentlemen have called attention to the fact that last October he publicly proclaimed he would run power lines for 200 miles. The people of the South, the people of Alabama and Tennessee and of Georgia and of the other southern States in proximity to this great power, are not so greatly concerned as some gentlemen from other sections seem to be. They are for the acceptance of Henry Ford's proposition and against the acceptance of the proposition made by the power companies, among other reasons because they do not want this Congress to deliver them into the hands of a power monopoly in the South, a monopoly that now controls practically all of the water power in the South that is now available for use.

I have always contended, gentlemen, that this proposition should be considered, primarily, from two standpoints—from the standpoint of the national defense act, which declared, in section 124, that this great power should be developed at Muscle Shoals for the purpose of national defense, for the purpose of the manufacture of nitrates for munition purposes in war times and nitrates for fertilizer in times of peace.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have only a few minutes, and I hope the gentleman will permit me to finish my remarks.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I just wanted to know whether the gentleman knew of any Member of the House who did not agree with him so far as the national-defense proposition was concerned?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; and if the gentleman would remain silent and if I had the time, I think I could show the gentleman that his position upon the floor of the House is in direct antagonism to what was declared to be the purpose of Congress when it enacted the national defense act. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I regret I have not the time.

Now, take the two propositions before the House. Mr. Ford binds himself to maintain the nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals in a good state of preservation and keep it in repair, in a modern and up-to-date condition, to be used by the United States in the event of war, and in peace times it is to be used for the purpose of manufacturing at least 40,000 tons of nitrates for fertilizer purposes. There is no question about his being bound for the performance of his contract, both to keep the plant in an up-to-date, modern condition, to be used by the Government in the event of war, and also to manufacture nitrates for fertilizer purposes. [Applause.]

As I have said, I have many times discussed on the floor of the House the proper disposition of Muscle Shoals, and it is not my intention in the limited time at my disposal to discuss the Ford offer from the standpoint of financial benefit to the Government. I fully agree with the President that the comparatively small amount of financial benefit to the Government is not the major consideration. The real consideration is the development and the use of this great power for the primary purpose of carrying out the plain intent of the national defense act under which its development by the Government was first undertaken. As I have stated, that intent is clearly set forth in section 124 of that act which provided for the installation of a nitrate plant to be used for the manufacture of nitrates for munition purposes in time of war and for fertilizer in time of peace. After reading the minority report and listening to the discussions in opposition to Mr. Ford I am constrained to believe that those opposing his offer do not take into consideration the needs of the farmer for cheaper fertilizer and the importance of Congress doing something to relieve the agricultural industry, which forms the basis of all our prosperity. Farm bureaus and their representatives in every section of our country have importuned Congress to adopt the Ford offer because they appreciate the fact that this is perhaps the only opportunity to break the hold of the fertilizer trust and the Chilean nitrate producers who have admittedly kept the price of fertilizer up and have paid their stockholders rich dividends at the expense of the farmers. And it is a source of regret to me that a Representative from the great farming State of Iowa, Mr. HULL, which boasts of being the richest agricultural State in the Union, should lead the fight to prevent the farmer from obtaining this long-sought relief. Both under the terms of the act and for economic reasons the interests of the farmers should be paramount in the consideration of this question, and I do not hesitate to say that those who oppose the Ford offer will disregard their wishes unanimously expressed, and in my opinion, whether intentionally or otherwise, if they are successful, will have strengthened the strangle hold which the fertilizer interests now have upon them.

And you who represent an agricultural constituency either in whole or in part upon this floor need not think that the farmers are not watching you and your vote upon this proposition. They will know who their real friends are when the roll is called.

The gentleman from Chicago, Mr. MADDEN, who represents a constituency located in the heart of the city of Chicago, has had vision to see that any relief which is given to the farmer and which will add to the production of our country will bring prosperity to the city, and with a broad statesmanship is one of the strongest supporters of the Ford offer. What are you who are charged with the direct responsibility of representing the agricultural constituency of your district going to say to your constituency by way of explanation of your vote if you cast it against the Ford offer?

Having in mind the spirit and intent of the national defense act, which was to provide cheaper fertilizer for the farmer in times of peace, the Committee on Military Affairs of the Sixty-seventh Congress recommended that this offer be accepted, and the committee of the Sixty-eighth Congress, with the exception of a small minority of six members, has declared in its majority report that—

After hearing all of the evidence and after considering the various proposals—

They have—reached the same conclusion as that of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Sixty-seventh Congress, viz, that the offer of Henry Ford is the only proposal which meets all of the requirements of section 124 of the national defense act, and when judged in this light the Ford offer is found to be satisfactory in all respects.

Mr. Ford in his offer makes this express agreement:

Inasmuch as the manufacture of commercial fertilizers for our soils and the sale and distribution of the same to the farmers and other users thereof constitute one of the principal considerations of this offer moving to the Government of the United States and its people, the company expressly agrees that it will continuously throughout the lease period operate nitrate plant No. 2, using the most economical source of power at the approximate present annual capacity of its machinery and equipment in the production of nitrogen and other commercial fertilizer, mixed or unmixed, according to market demand (said capacity being equal to approximately 110,000 tons of ammonium nitrate per annum, containing approximately 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen). If during the lease period said nitrate plant No. 2 is destroyed or damaged from any cause, the company agrees to restore such plant within a reasonable time to its former capacity, and further agrees:

(a) To determine by research whether by means of electric-furnace methods and industrial chemistry there may be produced on a commercial scale fertilizer compounds of higher grade and at lower prices than farmers and other users of commercial fertilizers have in the past been able to obtain, and to determine whether in a broad way the application of electricity and industrial chemistry may accomplish for the agricultural industry of the country what they have economically accomplished for other industries, and if so found and determined to reasonably employ such improved methods.

(b) To maintain nitrate plant No. 2 in its present state of readiness or its equivalent for immediate operation in the manufacture of materials necessary in time of war for the production of explosives.

He further agrees that—

In order that farmers and other users of fertilizer may be supplied with fertilizer at fair prices and without excessive profits the company agrees that the maximum net profit which it shall make in the manufacture and sale of fertilizer products shall not exceed 8 per cent of the fair annual cost of production thereof.

And in order that this provision may be carried out he agrees to the creation of a board of nine voting members, seven of whom are to be chosen from the leading farm organizations of the country and two to be selected by the company, and who shall have authority after the fullest investigation to determine the actual cost of production and fix the price of fertilizer to the farmer in accordance with the agreement. It is thus left with the farmers themselves, uninfluenced by any political consideration, to determine what is a fair and just price for the fertilizer manufactured. I submit that no fairer proposition could have been presented.

Forty thousand tons of nitrate will produce 2,000,000 tons of fertilizer and is the equal of the 250,000 tons of nitrate which were imported from Chile in 1923 and for which, in addition to the cost, the farmers of the country were compelled to pay the Chilean Government more than $11,000,000 for the privilege of buying.

It is conceded that nitrates can be produced for one-half of their present cost and with the experimentations which Mr. Ford agrees to conduct they will doubtless be produced in time for even less. Will anyone contend that 2,000,000 tons of fertilizer placed on the market each year at a price far less than the present price will not serve to bring down the cost of fertilizer to the farmer? The fertilizer interests think so, for otherwise they would not have had their representatives here in Washington and conducted such an expensive propaganda over the country in opposition to the Ford offer. Let me repeat that you who vote against the Ford offer vote to continue this monopoly. You vote as the British and Chilean nitrate producers would have you vote. You vote against giving to the farmers and the consuming masses of the country the benefit of securing at a cheaper price this important and essential factor in the productivity of the soil.

While the primary consideration is the manufacture of fertilizer, all of the power generated at Muscle Shoals will not be needed for that purpose. And in a statement which was issued in October, 1923, and which was obviously very carefully and deliberately prepared, Mr. Ford declared: "If I get Muscle Shoals we shall run power lines 200 miles in every direction from Muscle Shoals." This is the clear, unequivocal promise upon his part to distribute a certain amount of the surplus power for commercial purposes. Will it be contended that Mr. Ford made this solemn statement for the purpose of deceiving the public? His record in the past certainly does not justify any such conclusion nor do I believe that his bitterest opponents will so contend. The power companies of the South think he will keep his pledge, for it was only after he made this statement that they got together and submitted an offer for this power more than two and one-half years after Mr. Ford first submitted his offer, and they have numerous representatives here to-day fighting his offer. As in all public matters the people themselves are not represented save by you. The people have confidence in Henry Ford and they believe he will faithfully carry out every pledge that he has made.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON].

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I discussed the merits of the Ford offer at length on yesterday and shall devote the little time allotted to me now in calling attention to some inaccurate statements which have been made by others. Member after Member has stated that it would only be necessary for Mr. Ford to use 100,000 horsepower to manufacture fertilizer, when as a matter of fact, as I have heretofore explained, it requires 260,000 horsepower to meet the fertilizer obligation of Mr. Ford, and this is more power than the primary power that will be developed by both of the dams and the steam plant at No. 2 and the one to be built on the Warrior River. No one can dispute the fact that the primary power from the two dams amounts to 121,000 horsepower. The steam plant at Muscle Shoals and the one to be built on the Warrior River will provide for an additional 140,000 horsepower, altogether amounting to 241,000 horsepower.

Several Members opposing the Ford offer have called attention to discrepancies between the Ford offer and the terms of this bill, but when the two have been compared they are found to be identical.

This is no ordinary legislation. Mr. Ford has made an offer to purchase and lease property from the Government, and the bill reported by the committee provides for the acceptance of that offer, and it should be voted up or down. Those in favor of the Ford offer I take for granted will vote for the bill. It is but natural to expect those who are opposed to the Ford offer to criticize it and, if possible, make such changes as would defeat it. Some one has said that the bill was prepared in Detroit and that we had criticized the revenue bill prepared by Mr. Mellon. The cases are not at all analogous. The revenue bill was general legislation in which every Member of the House had a voice and was expected to take part in the preparation of its various terms and provisions. In this case, as I have said, it is a question of whether the House is willing to accept a bona fide offer made by Henry Ford to buy and lease the Government's property at Muscle Shoals.

A few Members of the House continue to contend that the water-power feature should be under the control of the Water Power Commission. They seem to overlook the fact that this development at Muscle Shoals was not only authorized and commenced before the water power act was passed but by express authority of Congress in the national defense act of 1916, for two fundamental purposes, viz, to make explosives in times of war and cheap fertilizer for the farmers in peace times. And for that reason the Congress of the United States should keep within its power the control over this entire property and not delegate it to the Water Power Commission or any other Government bureau nor to any Cabinet member or number of Cabinet officers.

Why should the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON] manifest such interest in the distribution by Mr. Ford of the surplus power in that section of the country? The Representatives in this House of all the States and entire territory which could possibly be supplied with this surplus power are here favoring and will vote for the offer of Henry Ford just as it is written. If they are satisfied with the provisions of the Ford offer and the assurance of Mr. Ford that if his offer is accepted that the surplus power will be sent in every direction for 200 miles, why should the Representatives from the section of country which can not be served by this surplus power interpose an objection?

It was remarkably strange that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], speaking for 40 minutes on this subject, failed to mention the national-defense feature of the development at Muscle Shoals. It is very evident from what he said and from his record in the House and the Senate that if it had been left to him these dams on the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals would never have been built and the water power developed if he could have prevented it. He talks about conservation of our natural resources. It would seem from his argument that his idea of conservation, so far as it applies to Muscle Shoals, would be to allow the water to continue to flow over the shoals at that point and go on into the Gulf without being utilized.

The gentleman from Ohio also criticizes that provision of the bill authorizing Mr. Ford or his representative to provide for the purchase of the lands which will be overflowed by the construction of Dam No. 3. Mr. Ford will have to pay the interest on the cost of these lands, and it will be to his interest to acquire the same as cheaply as possible; and he should be given this right for the same reason that he is permitted to complete the water-power dams, for he believes that he can do the work cheaper and quicker than the Government. The less the cost, the less the interest he will have to pay. The flowage damages at Dam No. 2 have already been paid by the Government.

Some one has said that it would require an additional appropriation by Congress of $50,000,000 to complete the water-power development if Mr. Ford's offer is accepted, while the fact is that only an amount sufficient to build Dam No. 3, estimated at $25,000,000, will be required in addition to the amount carried in the Army appropriation bill which has been reported to the House.

There has never been a question before Congress which has met with such interest and favor as the offer of Henry Ford for Muscle Shoals. The committees of this and the last Congress have recommended its acceptance. The passage of this bill will meet with the approval of the American people. It will break the Fertilizer Trust and reduce the price of the farmer's fertilizer one-half. It will increase food production, reduce the cost of living, and give employment to millions of people at good wages. [Applause.]

Mr. McKENZIE. Has the gentleman from Mississippi any Member here to whom he can now yield?

Mr. QUIN. No; my orators are not present.

Mr. McKENZIE. In the interest of expediting this matter, let me state that I have only one speaker left. I have 40 minutes remaining. I will ask the gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from Pennsylvania if we should rise now if we can not agree that the gentleman from Mississippi will use 40 minutes to-morrow and the gentleman from Pennsylvania 40 minutes to-morrow, and I use 40 minutes, and at the expiration of that time close general debate.

Mr. QUIN. I can not agree to that, for I have got this time promised.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, how much time is there remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has 1 hour and 27 minutes remaining; the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Mississippi have 1 hour and 49 minutes remaining between them.

Mr. MORIN. All my time is allotted and I can not agree to surrender any part of that time to-morrow.

Mr. McKENZIE. I think it is always conceded that the side in charge of the bill shall have the closing speech. I have but one more speech, and naturally we expect to reserve that to the end of the debate, which is perfectly proper. It seems to me these gentlemen should have had their speakers here this afternoon, so that we would not have to take up so much time to-morrow. I do not say that in a critical spirit, but I am anxious simply to expedite the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman understands it is not our duty to have the speakers here when he has more time to use than we have.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Will the Chair state again how much time there is remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has remaining 1 hour and 27 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Mississippi, between them, 1 hour and 49 minutes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, in order to expedite the bill, I will ask the gentleman from Mississippi if he will be willing to agree that to-morrow we shall use only as much time as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has remaining, and that is 1 hour and 27 minutes. Will he be willing to curtail the discussion to that extent?

The CHAIRMAN. There is a difference of only 12 minutes.

Mr. QUIN. The gentleman wants to know if I will sacrifice 12 minutes? I will, rather than have any hard feelings. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKENZIE. It is not a question of hard feelings, it is a question of getting along with the bill. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MAPES, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 518, the Muscle Shoals bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. TYDINGS (at the request of Mr. HILL of Maryland) by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for to-day on account of important business.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I have introduced two amendments to the national prohibition act proposing certain changes in that act, chief of which is the provision striking out the latter half of section 33 of Title II of that act.

This amendment, H. R. 7644, if enacted into law, will drive the colored gentleman out of the woodpile in which he has reposed so snugly for the past four years.

It will eliminate the inexcusable and indefensible portion of that act, through the provisions of which the rich are given the right to have all the liquor they choose. A more disgraceful provision was never incorporated into any law. More open, brazen class legislation is unthinkable.

My amendment will at least make an honest and sincere attempt to make of the eighteenth amendment what the people intended it should be when they adopted it, namely, prohibition for all, and not a law affecting only a part of the population of this Nation.

The United States as a Nation knows nothing about actual prohibition, for it has never tried it. What it has tried is something often called "Volsteadism," and I dispute no man's right to give it that name. But it is not prohibition. There is as wide a difference between the two as there is between a swamp and a desert.

What we now have is the curse of the country. Prohibition, if we can have it, will be a boon, a godsend, a blessing to untold millions, and to millions of generations yet unborn.

I look to all who want real prohibition and not a farce to support my bill.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 6, 1924, at 12 o'clock noon.

The Lord our God be with us and help us to do the things which are acceptable before Thee. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

STATEMENT BY FORMER ATTORNEY GENERAL GREGORY.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I desire to place in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the statement addressed by former Attorney General Gregory to President Coolidge in reference to the oil-lease matter, and the President's comment thereon. Both statements were given to the press by the President immediately after Mr. Gregory's interview with the President following his arrival from Texas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

FEBRUARY 2, 1924.

MR. PRESIDENT: On last Tuesday night, when I was in Austin, Tex., you stated to me over the long-distance telephone that you wished to employ me in the investigation of the leases of the naval oil reserves. You will recall that after expressing my appreciation I stated that I was not in close touch with the developments in the matter; that nothing occurred to me that would prevent me from serving, but that I would be in Washington Saturday afternoon—to-day—and would then confer with you on the subject. I had no idea that in saying this I was accepting an appointment or that you so understood it. I assumed that that would be decided when we conferred and that in the meantime I would have an opportunity to go through my books and correspondence to see whether in the course of my private practice I had ever had any employments which might stand in the way. It was also my desire, before definitely committing myself, to confer with Senator WALSH of Montana, who has conducted the investigation of the Senate committee. I was very much surprised to read in the Texas newspapers the next morning that I had been appointed, but did not feel at liberty to make any public statement, and consistently declined to do so until I had seen you.

Of course, if it had been in my mind at the time of our telephone conversation that I had been employed by Mr. Doheny, directly or indirectly, or at any time, near or remote, that would have ended the matter at once, because I would have realized that however free from criticism such employment might have been, it would have disqualified me from acting as your counsel on the present occasion. I have no recollection of having seen or communicated with Mr. Doheny in my life, and at that time did not recall ever having had any business connection with him or with any company controlled by him.

I returned to Washington as quickly as possible for the purpose of keeping my engagement with you, and arrived here this afternoon.

Yesterday while on the train my attention was called to a statement made the day before to the Senate Public Lands Committee by E. L. Doheny to the effect that his company and several others employed me "to represent them before the President in regard to getting permits to drill oil while in Mexico," and that "the Island Oil Co. billed us for $2,000 as our share of the fee that they paid Judge Gregory for this particular work."

I would have been at a loss to know what he was referring to except for his mention of the Island Oil Co. I remembered perfectly my employment by that company, although some of the details had passed out of my mind. I have now refreshed my recollection by examining data in my office. The facts are as follows:

In the fall of 1919 the firm with which I was then associated had among its regular clients the Island Oil & Transport Co., which is evidently the Island Oil Co referred to. It was a small independent company without any connection whatever, so far as I have ever known, with either Mr. Sinclair or Mr. Doheny.

The Island Co. asked me to act for it in the concerted effort then being made by American oil companies to get the State Department to take action to prevent the threatened confiscation of their properties in Mexico, the Carranza government having refused to grant them permits to drill on their own property unless they accepted the provision of the new constitution vesting title to oil and other minerals in the government.

The purpose was to secure some character of diplomatic action by the United States Government which it was hoped would place American oil companies on the same footing as those of Great Britain, the latter having been allowed to continue development. The facts in regard to all the interested companies were about the same, the law as to all was the same, and there was general cooperation among them in attempting to obtain relief.

I gave the matter attention for some months, and the Mexican authorities finally extended to the American companies the privileges enjoyed by those of Great Britain.

This result was brought about in December, 1919, or January, 1920, and my employment in the matter ended then and there. I rendered a bill to the Island Co. for $15,000, which it paid.

At some stage of the transaction the Island Co. stated that the work I did redounded to the benefit of other companies besides itself and that, it being a small company, it would try to induce several of the others similarly situated to make contributions to the fee charged. I understood that some of them did so. The Huasteca Petroleum Co., which was controlled by Mr. Doheny, was one of these, and no doubt paid the Island Co. the $2,000 referred to by Mr. Doheny.

This phase of the matter had entirely passed out of my mind. But even at the time I never thought of my employment as an employment by Mr. Doheny or his company, and he evidently did not, as his testimony before the Senate committee, as reported in the press, is to the effect that he knew nothing about my connection with the transaction until within the last few days.

I have never felt that the transaction involved the slightest necessity for apologies, nor even for explanation, but for the unusual conditions which have arisen.

It is obvious, nevertheless, that the fact that one of Mr. Doheny's companies bore a part, however indirect and however small, of the expense of my employment by the Island Co. makes it inappropriate for me to act as your counsel in this matter.

Respectfully yours,

T. W. GREGORY.

To the PRESIDENT.

This letter was made public at the White House, accompanied by the following statement:

FEBRUARY 2, 1924.

The statement in the letter of Mr. Attorney Gregory to me regarding the conversation between him and me over the telephone and the inferences to be drawn from it are correct.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

MUSCLE SHOALS.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an interview with Governor Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, on the question of Muscle Shoals.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

PINCHOT OFFERS SEVEN POINTS OPPOSING FORD PROPOSAL.

HARRISBURG, PA., March 5.—Henry Ford's offer for the Muscle Shoals project, which is now before Congress, "should not be accepted unless and until it is amended to conform to the principles of the Federal water power act," Governor Pinchot declared in a statement to-day. He set forth seven points of the act which he said safeguarded the public and asserted the Ford offer and the bill to accept it sacrifices all but one, that insuring complete development.

These seven points were set forth as:

"First, insure complete development; second, limit the lease to not more than 50 years; third, insure to the public at the end of the lease a free hand to take back the site and works on terms fair both to the public and the lessee; fourth, provide for the regulation of service, prices, and security issues if the lessee is engaged in public service; fifth, secure for the public all profits in excess of a fair return on the lessee's actual net investment; sixth, insure a fair return to the public on Government money invested; seventh, require the lessee to pay his fair share of the cost of storage reservoirs built above his works up to the amount of the benefits he gets from them."

The governor said he had "no objection" to Ford getting Muscle Shoals, "provided the terms on which he gets it are in line with the Roosevelt conservation policies, and provided they secure for the public what the rights granted are worth."

PURCHASE OF NITRATES FROM CHILE.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, we have been considering here for a few days a bill proposing that the Government shall lend $50,000,000 to the farmers of the wheat-growing section of the United States. On yesterday while speaking on this subject I stated that the legislatures of the States in the sections proposed to be covered could, perhaps, provide the means of relieving the farmers instead of their coming to the National Government. In the Columbia (S. C.) State, which is a splendid newspaper published in South Carolina, and one which advocates sound doctrines there appeared on yesterday an editorial showing that the South Carolina Legislature a few days ago passed a resolution providing for taking up the question of the purchase of nitrate directly from the Chilean authorities. I commend that proposition, and I ask to have printed in the RECORD the editorial referred to, showing how the States may take care of their own citizens without coming to the National Government.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Columbia (S. C.) State of March 5, 1924.]

A MOVE TO BUY NITRATE IN CHILE.

The act passed by the legislature, and especially fathered by Representative R. D. McDonald, of Oconee, providing for the "appointment of a commission to look into the feasibility of purchasing nitrate of soda at actual cost to the farmers of South Carolina," may well bear good fruit.

Mr. McDonald, we understand, has already, through extended inquiry by correspondence during the past several years, familiarized himself with conditions surrounding the Chilean nitrate business and the normal commercial barriers which prevent economical trading between the Chilean producers of nitrate of soda and the consuming farmers, and he has received encouragement from Chilean sources to believe that some of those barriers may be removed.

What may be done must depend largely upon the ability and willingness of the Chilean Government to aid an independent move to escape the extra costs now imposed not only by the middlemen but by those who, having a monopoly of the trade, have been able to fix prices on the exported nitrate. If Chile is willing to sell direct and to send cargoes of nitrate of soda to Charleston and take back coal, the trading may be readily accomplished, and with mutual advantage. That point definitely settled and the the costs figured, the business organization necessary for carrying out the details would be simple enough.

It might seem rather venturesome for South Carolina farmers to bring this nitrate from the mines 5,000 miles away, but it comes from there, anyway, and if they can through business cooperation secure the advantages of direct trading it is worth the effort. We feel, too, that the work and earnestness of Representative McDonald in what is really a patriotic effort to serve is due our interest and cooperation.

The American consul general and other representatives of our Consular Service in Chile will, we are sure, be glad to contribute information and advice when called upon.

INCOME-TAX COMPARATIVE TABLES.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD for the use of the Senate a series of tables, the first showing the amount of tax on incomes of $5,000 or less under the so-called Longworth compromise plan; the second, a comparative table showing the amount of tax on incomes of $5,000 and less under the present law, under the Mellon plan, and under the Democratic or Garner plan; also a comparative table showing the amount of surtax under the existing law, as proposed by the Mellon plan, the Garner plan, and the Longworth compromise plan. I think the tables will be of some use to the Committee on Finance in its consideration of the tax reduction bill and also useful to Members of the Senate generally. I ask to have the tables printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

The tables referred to are as follows:

Table showing amount of tax on incomes of $5,000 and less under the Longworth compromise plan.

Income.	Single person.	Married person with no dependents.	Married person with 1 dependent.	Married person with 2 dependents.
$1,000
$1,100	$1.50

OUACHITA RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. ROBINSON. I also ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed to me by Mr. J. E. Callaway, of Arkadelphia, Ark., explaining the necessity and justification for the improvement of the Ouachita River from Camden to Arkadelphia, Ark., explaining the necessity and justification for the a brief news report relative to freight service on the Ouachita River.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

ARKADELPHIA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Arkadelphia, Ark., February 26, 1924.

Hon. JOE T. ROBINSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: As chairman of the committee on new industries of the Arkadelphia Chamber of Commerce, I desire to submit the following for your consideration with reference to the improvement of the Ouachita River from Camden to Arkadelphia.

First. The locks and dams on the Ouachita River below Camden have been completed, which makes all-year navigation from Camden south.

Second. The wholesale merchants of New Orleans and the business men of Camden are now cooperating to utilize navigation to Camden, and traffic with 600 tons of freight north-bound from New Orleans up every 14 days, with the tariff of 50 per cent of the rail rates, with a minimum of 25 per cent of railroad rates to Monroe and 30 per cent to Camden.

Third. Although Arkadelphia is the head of navigation, yet it is impossible to navigate the Ouachita River between here and Camden on account of the obstructions, consisting of snags and overhanging timber. If these obstructions were cleared, the traffic would be continued to Arkadelphia at a minimum of about 35 per cent of railroad rates.

Fourth. With the obstructions cleared we would have navigation to Arkadelphia five to six months per year, regardless of the advantages that the locks and dams would give us for slack water. The merchants of this city buy their heavy groceries largely from New Orleans, which is our natural market. If river transportation were open we could buy most of our commodities, including hardware, in New Orleans. There is a vast amount of traffic between Arkadelphia and Camden which needs navigation.

Fifth. If the department appreciated the advantages that this upper stretch would be to this section of Arkansas they would not hesitate to give us relief.

While you are familiar with the system of hydroelectric dams now in course of construction on the Ouachita River north of Arkadelphia, it is our desire to inaugurate river traffic by next winter without waiting for the dams.

Asking your good offices in obtaining the relief desired during the coming summer, I am,

Yours very truly,

J. E. CALLAWAY,
Chairman.

ARKANSAS WATER FREIGHT SERVICE OFFERED DEALERS—REGULAR STEAMBOAT TRIPS PLANNED IF COOPERATION IS OBTAINED.

Steamboat service to the prosperous and fast developing section of North Louisiana and South Arkansas tributary to the Red, Black, and Ouachita Rivers was offered wholesale merchants, jobbers, and manufacturers of New Orleans yesterday by Adolph Felsenthal, of Camden, Ark., and Capt. L. V. Cooley, president and general manager, respectively, of the Arkansas-Louisiana Navigation Co.

If New Orleans shippers will furnish a minimum of 600 tons of northbound freight for each trip, the navigation company, which has acquired an interest in the steamboat America, will publish a tariff at 50 per cent of the rail rate, with a minimum of 25 cents a hundred pounds to Monroe, and 30 cents to Camden, Ark. It will begin sailing on a 14-day schedule, and if the business justifies will have sailings each week.

Mr. Felsenthal and Captain Cooley yesterday laid their proposal before the traffic and transportation bureau of the Association of Commerce, which indorsed the proposed boat line, and will call the matter to the attention of the wholesale merchants and the manufacturers' bureaus. There will be no committee to solicit freight, it was announced. It is up to the New Orleans business interests to produce the tonnage.

Points that would be served by the steamboat line include Jonesville, Harrisonburg, Columbia, Riverton, Bosco, Logtown, Monroe, Sterlington, Ouachita City, Alabama Landing, Felsenthal, Moro Bay, El Dorado Landing, Calion, Smackover Landing, and Camden. The Ouachita River flows through the Monroe gas fields, and the El Dorado, Smackover, Norphlet, and Louann oil and gas fields of Arkansas.

New Orleans shippers would also have rail connections over two lines at Monroe and over three railroads at Camden.

The entire Ouachita Basin was tributary to New Orleans in the old steamboat days. Twenty years ago the traffic was cut off by lack of a channel in the Ouachita River, and since then the territory has been dormant so far as New Orleans is concerned. In the 20-year period it has grown immensely in population and wealth.

Camden and Monroe business men, who are interested in the navigation company, are anxious to see waterway connections reestablished with New Orleans. They declare that if New Orleans wholesalers and manufacturers will send salesmen into the Ouachita Basin to obtain orders on the basis of the low water rate that is proposed there will be no difficulty in securing the desired northbound tonnage. Cargo is already available for the southbound journey.

Mr. Felsenthal, a prominent business man of Camden, has been active for 30 years in bringing about Government improvement of the Ouachita River. Mainly as a result of his efforts the first congressional appropriation was voted in 1894.

Since then the Government has spent $6,000,000 to complete a system of locks and dams in the Ouachita River. The last lock was recently opened, giving a year-round channel of 6½ feet from Camden to New Orleans.

"The new transportation company"—

Said Mr. Felsenthal yesterday—

"has no stock for sale. It desires no bonuses. All it asks for is commerce, and it is willing to handle that commerce for 50 per cent of the rail rate, with minimum charges to Monroe and Camden.

"The company wants freight, and it wants to be certain this freight will be forthcoming for at least six months. The service is ready, but New Orleans wholesalers and manufacturers, who have a profitable trade territory open to them, must show that they will support a boat line."

CONDOLENCE ON DEATH OF FORMER PRESIDENT WILSON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the Senate of Portugal, expressing the sincere condolence of that senate upon the death of the great citizen and former President of the United States, Woodrow Wilson, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. McLEAN. I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance resolutions adopted by the American Legion of the Department of Connecticut relative to disabled ex-service men.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas it is a recognized fact that mental diseases are insidious in onset, often requiring years before restraint becomes necessary; and

Whereas steps are not taken in mental cases with the same dispatch as in purely physical conditions due to the stigma which attaches to insanity; and

Whereas the American Legion of the Department of Connecticut believes that the fullest latitude should be extended by the Government in such cases: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the said department is against any time limit for the filing of mental claims arising from service to the United States in the World War, and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Connecticut Representatives and Senators in Congress, to the Connecticut representative on the national committee of the American Legion, to the national commander of the American Legion, and to the department commanders of the New England States, New Jersey, and New York, in order that a concerted action may be obtained in this matter.

THE AMERICAN LEGION, DEPARTMENT OF CONNECTICUT,
E. P. ARMSTRONG, Department Commander.

Whereas regulations in force at present in the Veterans' Bureau require that ex-service men who develop tuberculosis after three years from date of discharge must show medical treatment for same within the three-year period or it is not allowed as traceable to service, with a result that many ex-service men who have developed tuberculosis since the three-year period who can not show medical treatment for their condition are now being hospitalized by other agencies; and

Whereas there are ex-service men to-day dying of tuberculosis, the object of public charity, unable to prove a service connection because the proof required is beyond all reason: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the State department of the American Legion of the Department of Connecticut is in favor of a five-year limit in all tubercular cases and feels that the United States Government should accept the responsibility for all such, and that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the Connecticut Representatives and Senators in Congress, to the Connecticut representative of the national committee of the American Legion, to the national department of the American Legion, and to the department commanders of the New England States and of New Jersey and New York, in order that a concerted action may be obtained in this matter.

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
By E. P. ARMSTRONG,
Department Commander.

Mr. HARRELD. I send to the desk a resolution of the Oklahoma State Legislature, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, as follows:

STATE OF OKLAHOMA,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

I, R. A. Sneed, secretary of state of the State of Oklahoma, do hereby certify that the following and hereto attached is a true copy of house resolution 11, adopted by the house of representatives February 4, 1924, the original of which is now on file and a matter of record in this office.

In testimony whereof, I hereto set my hand and cause to be affixed the great seal of State.

Done at the city of Oklahoma City this 5th day of February, A. D. 1924.

[SEAL.]

R. A. SNEED,
Secretary of State.
UNA LEE ROBERTS,
Assistant Secretary of State.

House resolution 11 (by Finley) memorializing Congress to increase the compensation of postal employees.

Whereas the employees of the United States Postal Service are efficient workers engaged in a work vital to the entire country; and

Whereas they are chosen by competitive tests, not political preference; and

Whereas the cost of living is from 65 to 85 per cent higher than 10 years ago; and

Whereas the postal employees have only received increase in pay of from 10 to 20 per cent in that length of time: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the ninth legislature in extraordinary session assembled, That we believe Congress should grant the postal employees an adequate increase in their compensation; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be furnished to the Oklahoma delegation in Congress.

Adopted by the house of representatives this the 4th day of February, 1924.

W. D. MCBEE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Correctly enrolled.

JOHN M. BELL,
Chairman of Committee on Engrossing and Enrolling.

Mr. EDGE presented a petition, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of the State of New Jersey, praying for the enactment of legislation granting adjusted compensation to veterans of the World War, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I desire to have inserted in the RECORD and referred to the Immigration Committee a resolution passed by the Legislature of the State of New Jersey, referring to a pending immigration bill.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Immigration and under the rule ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW JERSEY SENATE, March 4, 1924.

HON. WALTER E. EDGE,
Senator from New Jersey, Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Inclosed please find copy of a concurrent resolution that has passed both Houses of the New Jersey Legislature. According to the last paragraph of this resolution, I am forwarding a copy to you for your consideration.

Very truly yours,

ROBERT M. JOHNSTON,
Secretary of the Senate.

Whereas it is proposed in the Congress of the United States to enact a law restricting immigration, called the Johnson law; and

Whereas the said law will restrict immigration to 2 per cent of any nationality immigrating to the United States in the year of 1890; and

Whereas the immigration of the Italian people to the United States did not begin until, and was small in number, in 1890 and increased with later years; and

Whereas the effect of the bill will be unduly restricting the immigration of the Italian peoples and reflect upon them much in the same manner as so-called inferior peoples are reflected upon, to-wit, the Chinese and Japanese peoples; and

Whereas the Italian people, beginning with Christopher Columbus, benefited this continent and has conferred as great a benefit upon this country as any other people, and without their presence to-day the great work of constructing the railroad systems and the general construction work which has made the greatness of the country would have been impossible; and

Whereas the Italian race is industrious and thrifty and honest and law-abiding, and they and their native born and descendants have ornamented pages of history in this country: Therefore be it

Resolved that the Senate of the State of New Jersey (the House of Assembly concurring) does protest to the people of the United States against enacting such iniquitous and injurious law, a law as injurious to the United States of America as it is injurious and iniquitous to the great Italian people; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the two United States Senators of New Jersey and one copy to each Member of the House of Representatives from the State of New Jersey.

SETTLEMENT OF FINLAND'S INDEBTEDNESS.

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee on Finance I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 5557) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Republic of Finland to the United States of America. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The reading clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the settlement of the indebtedness of the Republic of Finland to the United States of America, made by the World War Foreign Debt Commission and approved by the President, upon the following terms is hereby approved and authorized:

Principal amount of obligations to be funded, $8,281,926.17; interest accrued thereon to December 15, 1922, at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum, $1,027,389.10, less payment in cash made by Finland March 8, 1923, on account of interest, $300,000, leaving a balance of $727,389.10; total principal and interest accrued and unpaid as of December 15, 1922, $9,009,315.27; less payment in cash made by Finland on May 1, 1923, $9,315.27. Total indebtedness to be funded into bonds, $9,000,000.

The principal of the bonds shall be paid in annual installments on the 15th day of each December, up to and including December 15, 1984, on a fixed schedule, subject to the right of the Government of Finland to make these payments in three-year periods; the amount of the first year's installment shall be $45,000, the annual installments to increase with due regularity until, in the sixty-second year, the amount of the installment will be $345,000, the aggregate installments being equal to the total principal of the debt.

The Government of Finland shall have the right to pay off additional amounts of the principal of the bonds on any interest date upon 90 days' notice.

Interest shall be payable upon the unpaid balances at the following rates on December 15 and June 15 of each year:

At the rate of 3 per cent per annum, payable semiannually, from December 15, 1922, to December 15, 1932, and thereafter at the rate of 3½ per cent per annum, payable semiannually, until final payment.

The Government of Finland shall have the right to pay up to one-half of any interest accruing between December 15, 1922, and December 15, 1927, on the $9,000,000, principal amount of bonds first to be issued, in bonds of Finland dated as of the respective dates when the interest to be paid thereby becomes due, payable as to principal on the 15th day of December in each succeeding year, up to and including December 15, 1984, on a fixed schedule, in annual installments, increasing with due regularity in proportion to, and in the manner provided for, the payments to be made on account of principal of the original issue of bonds, and bearing the same rates of interest and being similar in other respects to such original issue of bonds.

Any payment of interest or of principal may be made, at the option of the Government of Finland, in any United States Government obligations issued after April 6, 1917, such bonds to be taken at par and accrued interest.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I did not quite understand the full purport of the bill from its reading. I assume it provides for a settlement of the debt between our Government and the Government of Finland.

Mr. SMOOT. That is correct; and I will say to the Senator that the settlement is exactly the same as that between Great Britain and the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the question I was going to ask. There is not any difference between the form of the two settlements?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no difference; not a word has been changed.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the way, of course, in which the indebtedness ought to be settled. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will inquire if the report on the bill is a unanimous one?

Mr. SMOOT. The report is unanimous.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONGRESSIONAL ALLOTMENT OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. MOSES. From the Committee on Printing I report back favorably, with an amendment to the title, the bill (H. R. 7039) to amend section 72 of chapter 23, printing act approved January 12, 1895. I ask unanimous consent for immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New Hampshire the purpose of the bill?

Mr. MOSES. The purpose of the bill is to make uniform the practice of the House with the practice of the Senate with reference to the allocation of public documents to new Members, providing that Members of the House shall have the same rights in the documents allotted to their predecessors as are now possessed by Members of the House with reference to their predecessors.

Mr. FLETCHER. I recall the provisions of the bill now.

Mr. ROBINSON. What are the rights of Members of the House to documents that formerly went to their predecessors?

Mr. MOSES. The Members of the Senate immediately on the 4th of March have the rights of their predecessors in all documents that are public, whereas Members do not, because their rights have extended until the following December, the beginning of the new Congress. It so happens that a case developed with some acuteness in connection with new Members during the last summer. Congress had authorized the printing of a very large edition of certain publications of the Department of Agriculture, two volumes on the diseases of the horse and the diseases of cattle, which were in very great demand. New Senators found themselves wholly without copies of any of those volumes except such as the Joint Committee on Printing were able to procure for them by transfer from one account to another.

Mr. ROBINSON. The bill, then, will in fact transfer to a new Member's account such documents as remain undisposed of at the end of the term of retiring Members.

Mr. MOSES. Yes, sir; and will put Members exactly on the same footing with Senators in that regard.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. MOSES. I ask that the bill may be read for the information of the Senate. It is a very short bill. The Senate will then understand its provisions.

Mr. ROBINSON. We may just as well know what we are doing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The reading clerk read the bill (H. R. 7039) to amend section 72 of chapter 23, printing act approved January 12, 1895, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 72 of chapter 23, printing act approved January 12, 1895, be amended so as to read as follows:

"That the congressional allotment of public documents printed after the expiration of the term of office of any Senator, Representative, or Delegate shall be delivered to his or her successor in office.

"Any Senator, Representative, or Delegate having public documents to his credit at the expiration of his term of office shall take the same prior to the convening of the next succeeding Congress, and if he shall not do so within such period he shall forfeit them to his or her successor in office."

Mr. MOSES. The bill exactly covers the point to which I have referred with regard to the large edition of the two volumes issued by the Agricultural Department. The appropriation for the documents was passed late in the session prior to the 4th of March but the edition was not printed until after the final adjournment of the Sixty-seventh Congress, and Members coming in with the Sixty-eighth Congress were not able to get copies of the documents.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend section 72 of chapter 23, printing act approved January 12, 1895, relative to the allotment of public documents."

TERMS OF DISTRICT COURT AT KANSAS CITY, KANS.

Mr. OVERMAN. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2236) to designate the time and place of holding terms of the United States district court in the first division of the district at Kansas City. I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] to the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the measure just reported by the Senator from North Carolina.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That after the passage of this act the terms of the United States district court for the first division to be held at Kansas City, Kans., shall be held at that city on the first Monday in October and the first Monday in December, instead of the dates fixed in the act approved September 6, 1916.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE.

Mr. KING. I introduce a joint resolution to enable the people of the Philippine Islands to form and adopt a constitution and establish an independent republic. Heretofore I introduced a resolution having the same object in view. An amendment was suggested which I have incorporated in the new joint resolution. I ask that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 92) to enable the people of the Philippine Islands to form and adopt a constitution and establish an independent republic, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions.

SURVEY OF MILL CUT AND CLUBFOOT CREEK, N. C.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, out of order, for the immediate consideration of House bill 4577, providing for the examination and survey of Mill Cut and Clubfoot Creek, N. C. It is Order of Business 198.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES in the chair). The Senator from North Carolina, out of order, asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 4577. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provision in section 12 of the river and harbor act approved September 22, 1922, providing for a preliminary examination and survey of Mill Cut, North Harlowe, Craven County, N. C., is hereby amended to read as follows: "Mill Cut and Clubfoot Creek, North Harlowe, Craven County, N. C."

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to state that the bill has passed the House, and its purpose is merely to correct an error in the designated waters to be surveyed by the engineers.

Mr. KING. It is not a new project?

Mr. SIMMONS. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF COTTON FUTURES ACT.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD two letters from one of the leading business men of the South, a resident of my State, whose name I shall omit, in regard to the efforts of the New York Cotton Exchange and others to depress the price of cotton and containing other information in regard to their efforts. I will state that I hope that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], who have bills pending dealing with this subject, will press their bills immediately, so that this gambling in cotton futures can be prevented. I have urged since I have been a Member of the Senate that Congress enact a law preventing gambling in cotton futures. A farmer who produces cotton should not have the price fixed by the speculators. It is an outrage for this to be done.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Hon. WILLIAM J. HARRIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: You will probably recall my conversation with you about having something to do in buying and selling future contracts. I have learned a great deal about this business this season. I occupy a position of having made a great deal more than I have lost; therefore you must give me some credit for an impartial statement on the curse of this business.

The man who buys a contract and loses money does not deserve any sympathy, but the man who makes the cotton and sells it on a fictitious speculative market made by unscrupulous and unconscionable speculators should have the sympathy of everybody, and that's the case as it now stands. The price of cotton a year ago the 1st of March was 31 cents a pound on the gamblers' market. It sold down by September to less than 21 cents, although there existed a small surplus. It commenced to rise and continued to do so until it reached over 37 cents in November. Since that time it has fluctuated and constantly gone down to where the gamblers' market for next October and December is 25 something. No doubt a large part of this year's cotton has been bought and sold before the seed have been planted. No doubt the market will continue to shrink in price until it gets back like it did last year to 20 cents, and then it will start back, should a small crop be raised, and repeat the same course as this season. In the meantime the mills and wholesale jobbers will increase their prices in proportion to the advance in cotton until Christmas, which time the wholesale jobbers will postpone buying until the market is reduced to suit their interest in buying their stock for next fall's sales.

The average farmer can not adjust himself to any such market. The law of supply and demand is absolutely set aside by these gamblers as their market they make is recognized and sales are governed by their market. According to statistics this country has never had as little cotton in proportion to the need of cotton as it has to-day. It is a fact that if the farmers should make 14,000,000 bales of cotton they would get less money for it than should they make seven. The cost of production plus a profit has no bearing on the market. It is only a question of what the gamblers will let them have. If they make a small crop they run it up at the first of the year and run it down after that time. However, should they make a big crop they continue to run it down far below the cost of production, so it puts the farmer in a position of getting a big price when he hasn't but little to sell, and less than cost of production when he makes a crop, consequently, the destruction of the producers of this country and the enrichment of millionaires, manufacturers, gamblers, jobbers, and distributers. The cities are growing in wealth while the producers of crops are becoming bankrupt.

There has been a great deal said about legislation to help the farmer. You can benefit the farmer by stabilizing his markets so that he can sell like other people sell their goods, at cost plus a fair profit, as the Cotton Cooperative Association is trying to do by selling their cotton 12 months in the year to mills, and being governed by the law of supply and demand, and fixing a price, as above stated, at cost of production plus a fair profit.

If the Congress will pass a law requiring every man who contracts to sell 100 bales of cotton to own that cotton, you will stabilize the market which will fluctuate only as the law of supply and demand governs it. Many people will tell you that this future market is absolutely necessary for the manufacturers to hedge their contracts by future contracts made by the people who do not own a bale of cotton, which is untrue. Spot-cotton houses and farmers' cooperative associations could make contracts with the mills for deliveries of cotton every month in the year, and it would be a bona fide transaction. They would be selling something that was in existence. The steel industry is one of the largest in the United States. I do not understand that steel futures are dealt in as cotton futures, but contracts are made for future delivery of steel to buyers. I also believe that the same condition applies to the grain markets. The argument that the gambler raises the price of cotton and causes the farmer to get more for it is very deceptive, as he also lowers the price of it far below the cost of production, and the practice is destroying the farmers of the country, and if the Congress will thoroughly study this question they will break it up and stabilize spot markets in lieu of the gamblers' market, which we now have in force. Your southern colleagues ought to realize that this condition is ruining us. Lands in my section can be bought for $10 an acre that would have sold easily for $50 a few years ago. Thousands of people are leaving the farms because they can not make a living and pay taxes on the land. The radicals in Congress and in the legislatures of the country are made radicals by this condition and will become more radical to the point of revolution unless some corrections are made for protection to the producers. Loaning them money is a small consequence. They must be protected from robbery; they must have some assurance that they will get a fair price for their products, so they can take care of themselves without the charity of government, which plunges them further into radical socialism and prejudices against the people who are better off than themselves.

I would be delighted to know that all Members of Congress would seriously consider this problem and not be swept aside with any argument for the necessity of the gamblers' market to buy and sell a product before it is planted, as is being now done. They are more destructive than the boll weevil and can be more easily eliminated.

Yours very truly,

_____.

MARCH 4, 1924.

Senator WILLIAM J. HARRIS,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HARRIS: You need not bother to reply to this letter. I am just inclosing you a little propaganda for your information put out by the gamblers' market, also a clipping from Roger W. Babson.

Future market now is $45 to $50 a bale for May and July futures below what it was the last of November. The future market on next December is around 24 cents, which is less than our people can make it for and live decently. Not many seed have been planted, but the price has already been fixed by the gamblers. To say that supply and demand has anything to do with the cotton market is not true.

I am just sending you these clippings for your information for your file in case the Congress wants to take this matter up. Senator DIAL writes me that if the people understood what this market meant, they would destroy it in a week, and that's my opinion exactly. If you would destroy the gamblers' market, it would be the greatest piece of legislation that has ever been enacted for the producers of this country, and would stabilize the textile industry, although they would fight it. In the end, it would save them from having idle mills.

Yours very truly,

_____.

Cotton market has dropped practically 20 per cent in the past month or so. In view of the strong statistical status, there is no basis for a further immediate marked decline. Careful survey shows that total consumption and exports for the first six months of the season were 6,931,916 bales. This amount is well over half the estimated total supply, 12,168,919 bales. In recent months consumption has declined materially, and exports during the balance of the season should rule materially under the first six months' average. Even with a drastic curtailment the total consumption will approach 12,000,000 bales, leaving the smallest carry over in modern history. Cotton is still too high from a long-swing standpoint, and the possibility of a huge acreage and conservative consumption indicate further price readjustment later in the year. Temporarily, however, the statistical structure is strong. In view of the sharp reaction in price, we believe one should protect actual needs for the greater part of the current season.

WIDE MOVEMENT PROVES COTTON-HEDGING VALUE—LARGE AND SMALL TEXTILE MEN NEED FUTURES MARKET FOR INSURANCE, SAYS MCELROY—MANCHESTER CRADLE OF FORWARD CONTRACTS—OPEN SWINGS IN 1924 MARKET HARMLESS TO PROTECTED MILL AND DRY GOODS INTERESTS.

(By Hugh F. McElroy, Tameling, Keen & Co.)

High prices and increasing scarcity of raw cotton during the past two seasons have done more than simply focus public attention on the futures markets, sensational though their fluctuations have been during that period. Summer scarcity on one hand and hopes for abundance in the fall and winter on the other, combined to cause a wide disparity between prices of cotton for prompt use by mills, as compared with new crop deliveries, even though the difference in time of delivery was a matter of only a few months.

When last year the striking difference of over 4 cents a pound was established between old cotton for May delivery and new crop for October delivery, wholesalers and jobbers refused to place their usual orders with mills for fall goods. At the same time a housewife's strike against the high prices set in, and mills were forced to quit purchasing raw cotton for sheer lack of orders.

Again this season, owing to a third disastrously short yield, the situation became even more acute, so that the difference between prices for May and October delivery expanded to the phenomenal spread of nearly 7¾ cents a pound.

The specter of summer famine was thus visible so far ahead that spinners were urged to purchase their needs for the whole year early, while receipts were running free and selections could be made out of a crop notoriously low in average grade. Many wise mill managers followed this course and were gratified to see cotton prices soar to vivid heights. All would have been well had consumers, retailers, and jobbers shown equal willingness to pay advanced prices for goods. But, apparently, the public's appetite for goods waned as raw cotton waxed in price, and mills saw orders on their books for delivery in summer months dwindle fast, while the business usually placed for fall and early winter was almost nil. Thus many manufacturers found themselves bare of orders, yet with stocks of raw cotton on hand as well as goods accumulating in their warehouses. They were in a quandary—goods would not advance to a raw cotton parity, and cotton suddenly developed a disposition to fall.

Here is where the contract market demonstrated its usefulness in a striking manner!

A year ago we issued an educational article on the value and methods of "hedging" in the cotton market, including among those addressed, more than a thousand of the largest department stores and dry goods merchants of the country. At that time the disparity between old and new crops was only 4 cents a pound, while this year an extreme difference of nearly 7¾ cents was established. Obviously, dealers in cotton goods—in all the various channels from manufacturer to the small retailer—desired protection from losses resulting from stocks carried over from one such season to another. Some, happily had learned of the insurance offered by sales of cotton futures, and availed themselves of it. To mill managers this method of protection was not a new story, but this year it has been used to far greater extent than ever before, for the very good reason that never before has there been such a wide chasm between old and new crop values and, therefore, more urgent necessity for such protection.

It is to be hoped that the profitable experience in "hedging" this season will have weight with those in the trade who have heretofore ignored its existence. The difficulty lies in convincing successful men of big affairs, that even greater success may be attained by investigating progressive methods new to them, but which have been tried for years by others and found invaluable.

The genesis of "hedging" harks back to Manchester, the cradle of the cotton-spinning industry. Manchester's great markets for yarn and goods lie in far-off India and China, with their teeming populations, whose only wearing apparel is made of cotton. Orders from those great customers are spasmodic, but enormous when they are placed.

In India the weather is the controlling factor. Until the monsoon breaks, with its life-giving rains, Indian merchants hold off, but once assured of a favorable season for food and other crops, they immediately place orders for vast quantities of goods. Chinese orders, on the other hand, are largely subject to fluctuations in silver exchange. When exchange, therefore, turns in favor of the buyer—without injuring the seller in any way—China becomes a big buyer. If British spinners waited until such orders arrived before making up goods, they would be overwhelmed. Of course, they do no such thing, but keep on steadily turning out goods for stock, so that they are always able to promptly fill the demand when it asserts itself. Such a process of manufacturing from a raw material subject to such wide fluctuations—both in supply and price—as cotton, would be the sheerest kind of gamble if some insurance against loss were not available or provided.

It was this situation which gave birth to the future contract system, and it is well to bear in mind that it goes back to the days of the sailing ship, when it took 60 to 90 days to land cotton in Liverpool from our Gulf ports. Spinners then were obliged to contract for cotton months in advance of their mill needs, and when goods were being piled up before orders arrived they required a method to sell against them for protection. Years of experience and elimination of abuses have brought the cotton-futures system close to the zenith of human perfection, a state which is largely due to the beneficient operation of the Federal cotton futures act, which went into full effect in 1915, and which has proved a boom to every branch of the cotton trade in the entire world.

FRANCIS SCOTT KEY BRIDGE.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution, which I send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. I desire to make a word of explanation in regard to it.

Some time ago the Congress passed a bill permitting the Daughters of 1812 to have placed upon the Key Bridge a bronze tablet with certain inscriptions. The Fine Arts Commission say that they hope it will be changed to a marble tablet, because a bronze tablet will discolor the surface to which it is attached. I spoke to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER], who is chairman of the Committee on the Library, which deals with these matters and who had the original bill passed through the Senate; and the Senator from Pennsylvania told me he would be glad if this joint resolution were passed. I therefore ask unanimous consent to have that action taken. The joint resolution simply changes the word "bronze" to "marble."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which he has just introduced. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 91) to authorize the National Society United States Daughters of 1812 to place a marble tablet on the Francis Scott Key Bridge, which was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the National Society United States Daughters of 1812 is authorized to place on the Francis Scott Key Bridge across Potomac River a marble tablet inscribed with the insignia of such society and with the last verse of the Star-Spangled Banner, after the plans and specifications for such tablet have been submitted to and approved by the Commission of Fine Arts on such plans and specifications.

SEC. 2. Such tablet shall be erected without expense to the Government of the United States.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REDUCTION OF TAXATION.

Mr. McNARY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 6715, the revenue bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2576) to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lieu on the table and to be printed.

TERMS OF THE PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT.

Mr. HARRIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 22) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States fixing the commencement of the terms of President and Vice President and Members of Congress, and fixing the time of the assembling of Congress, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

CHANGE OF DATE OF INAUGURATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning business is closed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to take up for consideration Senate Joint Resolution 22, Order of Business No. 174.

If Senators will permit me to say just a word in explanation of it, this is a joint resolution amending the Constitution of the United States, and has the unanimous report of the Judiciary Committee. In effect, it is the same constitutional amendment that the Senate passed at the last Congress. It went to the House, was referred to the proper committee, and came back from that committee with a favorable report. It was then placed on the calendar and lost. The joint resolution provides for fixing the time of beginning and ending of the terms of President, Vice President, and Members of Congress in January instead of the 4th of March.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nebraska a question respecting the joint resolution? Is the joint resolution as reported by the Committee on the Judiciary identical in form with the joint resolution which passed the Senate at the last session?

Mr. NORRIS. It is not identical in form. It is the same in substance.

Mr. ROBINSON. Can the Senator state the differences?

Mr. NORRIS. The difference is in section 3. That was not contained in the former joint resolution. The committee found on investigation of other parts of the Constitution that section 3 of the present amendment was necessary. There is another place in the Constitution which says that if the election of a President is referred to the House of Representatives on account of the electors not having elected a President, if the election does not take place by the House before the 4th day of March—the words "the fourth day of March" being used in the Constitution"—then the Vice President elected by the Senate shall become acting President. The fact that we change the beginning of the term from March to January makes it necessary for us to change that part of the Constitution also, which we have done in section 3. It only carries out the purpose of the original joint resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON. I feel justified in asking that the joint resolution go over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not want to be placed in the attitude of objecting to the consideration of the joint resolution. My recollection is that I supported the joint resolution to which the Senator refers.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator did support it in a very able speech when we had it up before.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire, however, to have an opportunity of examining it. I suggest to the Senator that he withdraw his request for the day.

Mr. NORRIS. I will withdraw my request and make this one. Let me see if this will satisfy the Senator from Arkansas and other Senators. I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business we take up this joint resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall be unable to be present to-morrow.

Mr. NORRIS. Would Saturday suit the Senator?

Mr. ROBINSON. I will ask the Senator to make it a special order for some day early next week.

Mr. NORRIS. Then I request that on Monday next, immediately after the completion of the routine morning business——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from Nebraska that there is a unanimous-consent agreement governing the action of the Senate on Monday.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Nebraska is taking care of that. His proposal is that this special order shall take effect immediately after the disposition of the bill which has already been, in a way, made a special order for that day.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me inquire of the Chair whether an agreement has been made that will do away with morning business next Monday?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That all depends upon whether the Senate adjourns or recesses on Saturday.

Mr. NORRIS. We will try to adjourn. If I should request that immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business on Monday we shall take up this joint resolution, that will not interfere with the unfinished business, because we will not take until 2 o'clock to conclude it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business on Saturday, it take an adjournment until Monday at 12 o'clock——

Mr. OVERMAN. How will that affect the memorial services on the late Senators NELSON and NICHOLSON?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business on Saturday it take an adjournment until Sunday at noon, and at the conclusion of the memorial services scheduled for Sunday that the Senate adjourn until Monday at 12 o'clock, and that at the conclusion of the routine morning business on Monday the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 174, Senate Joint Resolution 22, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States fixing the commencement of the terms of President and Vice President and Members of Congress, and fixing the time of the assembling of Congress. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. I have no objection to that, but I want to give notice to the Senator that on Monday the bill of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] will be up for consideration.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but this proposed agreement applies only to the morning hour. Of course, if we do not get through before the conclusion of the morning hour, nothing will be accomplished; but I feel so confident that the joint resolution will not take any great length of time that I am willing to take that chance. It will not, of course, interfere with the morning business. At 2 o'clock the unfinished business will be laid before the Senate.

Mr. KING. I want to state to the Senator that if there should be a disposition to discuss at some length on Monday the bill to which I have just referred some of that discussion might take place during the morning hour.

Mr. NORRIS. It is possible, I will concede, that Senators who may think the time is going to be short will avail themselves of the privilege of talking about that bill when this joint resolution is up. Let me change the request.

Mr. KING. I suggest making it Tuesday.

Mr. NORRIS. I will change the request to Tuesday instead of Monday. Then there certainly will be no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business on Monday next it take an adjournment until Tuesday, and that at the conclusion of the routine morning business on Tuesday the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 174, Senate Joint Resolution 22. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I heretofore and again this session introduced a joint resolution proposing to amend the Constitution so that the President shall be elected to serve for six years and be ineligible thereafter for reelection. I offer that joint resolution now as an amendment to the Norris resolution. It is before the Judiciary Committee, of which the Senator from Nebraska is a member; and I ask that it may be considered when the Norris resolution is considered. I also ask that it may be considered pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be received and lie on the table.

COINAGE OF MEMORIAL 50-CENT PIECES.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 684, Order of Business No. 206. If it leads to any discussion whatever, I shall not ask the Senate to give consideration to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 648, Order of Business No. 206. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Let it be read first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The reading clerk read the bill (S. 684) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the commencement on June 18, 1923, of the work of carving on Stone Mountain, in the State of Georgia, a monument to the valor of the soldiers of the South, which was the inspiration of their sons and daughters and grandsons and granddaughters in the Spanish-American and World Wars, and in memory of Warren G. Harding, President of the United States of America, in whose administration the work was begun, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in commemoration of the commencement on June 18, 1923, of the work of carving on Stone Mountain, in the State of Georgia, a monument to the valor of the soldiers of the South, which was the inspiration of their sons and daughters and grandsons and granddaughters in the Spanish-American and World Wars, and in memory of Warren G. Harding, President of the United States of America, in whose administration the work was begun, there shall be coined at the mints of the United States silver 50-cent pieces to the number of not more than 5,000,000, such 50-cent pieces to be of the standard troy weight, composition, diameter, device, and design as shall be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, which said 50-cent pieces shall be legal tender in any payment to the amount of their face value.

SEC. 2. That the coins herein authorized shall be issued only upon the request of the executive committee of the Stone Mountain Confederate Monumental Association, a corporation of Atlanta, Ga., and upon payment by such executive committee for and on behalf of the Stone Mountain Confederate Monumental Association of the par value of such coins, and it shall be permissible for the said Stone Mountain Confederate Monumental Association to obtain said coins upon said payment, all at one time or at separate times, and in separate amounts, as it may determine.

SEC. 3. That all laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or striking of the same, regulating and guarding the process of coinage, providing for the purchase of material and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of coins, for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting, for security of the coin, or for any other purposes, whether said laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage herein authorized: Provided, That the United States shall not be subject to the expense of making the necessary dies and other preparations for this coinage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POST OFFICE AND TREASURY DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the pending appropriation bill, H. R. 6349, be laid before the Senate and proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6349) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. I would like to have the bill read, as some few of us have not had a chance to see it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the bill, and the reading was continued to page 2, line 19, the last paragraph read being as follows:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

Salaries: Secretary of the Treasury, $12,000; three Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, and other personal services in the District of Columbia in accordance with "The classification act of 1923," $163,780; in all, $175,780: Provided, That in expending appropriations or portions of appropriations contained in this act for the payment for personal services in the District of Columbia in accordance with "The classification act of 1923," the average of the salaries of the total number of persons under any grade or class thereof in any bureau, office, or other appropriation unit shall not at any time exceed the average of the compensation rates specified for the grade by such act: Provided, That this restriction shall not apply (1) to grades 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the clerical-mechanical service, or (2) to require the reduction in salary of any person whose compensation is fixed, as of July 1, 1924, in accordance with the rules of section 6 of such act, or (3) to prevent the payment of a salary under any grade at a rate higher than the maximum rate of the grade when such higher rate is permitted by "The classification act of 1923," and is specifically authorized by other law.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be called from the Chamber in just a few moments, and I ask the Senator in charge of the appropriation bill to permit the first proviso on page 2, from line 3 to line 10, inclusive, to go over, so that I may offer an amendment in regard to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WADSWORTH in the chair). The Chair will state that if there is any amendment which the Senator from Tennessee may desire to offer it will be in order after the committee amendments are disposed of. It is not necessary that it should be offered now.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

BACK TO THE PEOPLE AMENDMENT.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I now discuss Senate Joint Resolution No. 4, introduced by the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], who now temporarily presides over the Senate, and who always presides well.

The Judiciary Committee struck from the joint resolution section 2 and added in lieu thereof the following:

ARTICLE —.

The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, upon the application of two-thirds of the legislatures of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of this Constitution when ratified by a vote of the qualified electors in three-fourths of the several States, said election to be held under such rules and regulations as each State shall prescribe, and that until three-fourths of the States shall have ratified, or more than one-fourth of the States shall have rejected, a proposed amendment, any State may in like manner change its vote: Provided, That if at any time more than one-fourth of the States have rejected the proposed amendment, said rejection shall be final and further consideration thereof by the States shall cease: Provided further, That any amendment proposed hereunder shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution, as provided in the Constitution, within six years from the date of submission hereof to the States by the Congress: Provided further, That no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate.

It is not my purpose this morning to discuss all the features of this joint resolution as reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. I reserved the right in the committee to act in the Senate respecting this joint resolution as I deemed best, but I now address myself to that provision which provides that hereafter amendments shall be ratified by the qualified electors in three-fourths of the States instead of by the legislatures of the States.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. As I understand, there is no conflict between this joint resolution and Senate Joint Resolution 22, introduced by the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ASHURST. There is no conflict.

Mr. FLETCHER. Unless it may be that if the resolution the Senator is discussing is passed first, then it might affect the other.

Mr. ASHURST. No; this particular joint resolution could not affect any other proposed amendment until this resolution shall first be ratified by three-fourths of the States as now provided.

The point to which I shall speak this morning is that portion of the reported Senate Joint Resolution 4 which provides that hereafter the qualified electors of three-fourths of the States, and not the legislatures thereof, shall hereafter be the eligible authority for ratifying constitutional amendments.

Several important features are incorporated in this Senate Joint Resolution No. 4, but I shall give them only a passing reference now. For instance, the joint resolution proposes that under a particular submission the States must act within six years. In my opinion that is a valid exercise of the powers of Congress. The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Dillon v. Gloss (256 U. S., at pages 368 et seq.) held that Congress had the power to limit the time within which the States might act under a particular submission, and I ask that that decision be incorporated into the RECORD as an appendix to my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

[The decision appears at the close of Mr. ASHURST's remarks.]

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I just came into the Chamber, and I would like to know if the Senator is discussing the so-called Wadsworth joint resolution.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. ASHURST. I have just secured permission to include in the RECORD as an appendix to my remarks a copy of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Dillon v. Gloss, reported in volume two hundred and fifty-six, United States Reports, holding that the limitation of time within which a State may act under a particular submission is a valid exercise of the powers of Congress.

Another feature of this resolution is as follows:

And that until three-fourths of the States shall have ratified, or more than one-fourth of the States shall have rejected, a proposed amendment any State may in like manner change its vote.

Another feature is:

Provided, That if at any time more than one-fourth of the States have rejected the proposed amendment, said rejection shall be final and further consideration thereof by the States shall cease.

Of course, the joint resolution means that further consideration by the States shall cease under that particular submission.

It is my opinion, after considerable research, that a State may at any time change its vote upon a ratification of a proposed amendment provided the vote which it previously cast was not determinative of the result. In other words, three-fourths of the States, or 36 States, must vote favorably to ratify a proposed amendment. Assume that State "A" was the thirty-fifth State to ratify a particular amendment, but before the thirty-sixth State or the necessary number ratified, State "A," the thirty-fifth to ratify, changed its vote from yea to nay, State "A" under such circumstances would have that power, but it would have no power to change its vote if its vote were the determinative vote upon the particular question.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BAYARD. Is it not the practice for the several States when they ratify proposed amendments to the Constitution to certify that fact to the Secretary of State of the United States, which becomes a matter of permanent record?

Mr. ASHURST. That is true.

Mr. BAYARD. How can a State withdraw its ratification and destroy that matter of permanent record?

Mr. ASHURST. I have great respect for the opinion of the Senator from Delaware. When the first 10 amendments were ratified, the Secretary of State of the United States made no promulgation of the fact that the 10 amendments were ratified. Judicial notice was taken of the ratification. But beginning with the eleventh amendment the various Secretaries of State of the United States made announcements of the fact that a sufficient number of the States had ratified the amendment to make the same a part of our fundamental law.

The governors of some of the States have dropped into the habit of approving the ratification of constitutional amendments. The governors of the States have no power to approve or to disapprove a resolution of ratification on an amendment. The governor's signature to such a resolution is a brutum fulmen; it is a harmless thunderbolt. It adds nothing to the resolution and takes nothing therefrom.

I grant that if a ratification by a particular State were conclusive and determinative of the result, if it were the thirty-sixth State, that State could not thereafter change its vote; but I perceive no reason in policy, and certainly no reason in law, why a State may not alter its vote when such vote at the time of its change or alteration is not determinative of the result; and I need not say to Senators that in the ratification of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments some States withdrew their ratifications. Oregon withdrew a ratification on one of the amendments.

New York withdrew a ratification upon an amendment. Ohio did likewise. I arose, however, to discuss the "back to the people" part of this amendment which has been reported.

Mr. President, if this proposed amendment should be ratified and thus become a part of the Federal Constitution, it would mean that thereafter neither the legislatures of the various States nor conventions therein would be eligible to ratify proposed amendments to the Federal Constitution and that the qualified electors themselves would be the only authority eligible to ratify proposed amendments to the Constitution of the United States. This is simply a back-to-the-people amendment. Nineteen amendments to the Constitution have been ratified to this date.

I will herein treat the first 10 amendments, the Bill of Rights amendments, as a part and parcel of the original Constitution, because when the Constitution was ratified it was upon the implied, in some cases express, understanding that these Bill of Rights amendments would be proposed and ratified. Therefore the First Congress, on the 15th of September, 1789, submitted 12 proposed amendments. The third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth, tenth, eleventh, and twelfth thus proposed were ratified by the required number of States within exactly two years and three months. But No. 1 and No. 2, submitted in 1789, are still pending, and on the 15th day of last September had been pending 134 years.

Amendments have come by "amendment epochs." The eleventh and twelfth amendments were adopted in the 10-year period between 1794 and 1804; the eleventh was brought about by the decision of the Supreme Court (2 Dallas), which held that a State could be sued by an individual citizen of another State; the twelfth was brought about by the unfortunate tie in the Electoral College between Thomas Jefferson and Aaron Burr. Call that the first amendment epoch. Then, notwithstanding that many score of amendments were introduced in Congress and two were submitted between 1804 and 1804, no amendment was adopted; thus there was a 60-year period of immobility with respect to amending our Federal Constitution.

Then came the second amendment epoch, which began in 1865 and lasted until 1875. In that 10-year period the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments were proposed and ratified.

Then came nearly 40 years of immobility, and then came the sixteenth, seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth amendments—the third amendment epoch, 1909 to this date—showing that these amendments move in cycles.

The Federal Constitution conserves and protects all that real Americans hold precious; it should not be changed by legislative caucus.

There is not a State in the Federal Union whose constitution may be amended by the State legislature. The State of Delaware is an apparent but not a real exception, as Delaware requires that an amendment to the State constitution must be proposed by at least two-thirds of one legislature, then there must be notice to the electors for a certain period before the next election, so that if they desire, they may express their will at the polls upon the proposition; then the amendment must be ratified by a second legislature by a two-thirds vote, which gives the people an indirect vote.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. BAYARD. I would suggest to the Senator that he should note there that it requires that a succeeding legislature should ratify the act of the first one.

Mr. ASHURST. That really gives the people at least an indirect vote, so that the various State constitutions may be amended only by the electorate of the State. How utterly archaic, therefore, it is, to deny an electorate an opportunity to express an opinion upon proposed changes in our fundamental law. If the consent of the voters in every State be required and they are actually required to alter and amend a State constitution, a fortiori the vote of the citizens should be required to amend the Federal Constitution.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. BRUCE. Would the popular vote be taken entirely under State laws, or would there be a Federal enactment to provide for it?

Mr. ASHURST. Let me read to the Senator the provision in the proposed amendment:

> Such election to be held under such rules and regulations as each State shall prescribe.

It is vital to our American system that the voter should have an opportunity to say at the ballot box under what form of government he desires to live.

If you are not willing that the State legislatures should choose United States Senators, for a much stronger reason the State legislatures should not change your fundamental law.

Every argument in favor of the election of Senators by a direct vote of the people is a stronger argument in favor of consulting the people on constitutional amendments.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am very much interested in the Senator's discussion. Will he allow me to interpolate a remark?

Mr. ASHURST. I am delighted to have the compliment now paid to me by the attention which the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee is giving.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is not such an unusual thing for the Senator to have my attention when he is speaking. The Senator has drawn attention to the fact that the constitution of no State can be amended without having the proposed amendment ratified by the people of the State as well as by its legislature, and that the present system of amending the United States Constitution is not in accordance with that plan, because the present Constitution provides that the amendment, when approved by both branches of Congress and then by three-quarters of the State legislatures, becomes valid as an amendment to the Constitution, not having been submitted to the people at all.

I wanted to interject this remark in relation to that feature, which I think is quite important: If the States consider their own electors competent to amend their constitutions and consider it necessary to give them a veto power, so to speak, against the legislature amending it, it is equally important that the people should have a voice in amending the Constitution of the United States, and they do not now and can not now.

But inasmuch as the people will not allow their own State constitutions to be amended without reference to the electors of their own States the present system of amending the United States Constitution vitiates that precaution, because when we amend the United States Constitution without going to the electors of the States, but only to the legislatures, the United States Constitution having been amended, ipso facto it amends the constitution of every State; so that indirectly the States are now allowing their own constitutions to be amended in ways which they themselves have prohibited.

Mr. ASHURST. I regard it a powerful argument that the Senator has presented, and I am grateful for the contribution.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to a question?

Mr. ASHURST. With pleasure.

Mr. ROBINSON. What, in the opinion of the Senator from Arizona, would be the effect with respect to the difficulty of effecting amendments to the Constitution if the proposal of the Senator from New York, which the Senator from Arizona is now discussing, should be agreed to? Would it be more difficult or less difficult to secure an amendment to the Constitution?

Mr. ASHURST. Replying to the question of the able Senator, I am of opinion that it would not become more difficult.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not say that it is not desirable to make more difficult amendments to the Constitution of the United States. There is a feeling which has been growing throughout the country that the Constitution now is too easily amended, and that some amendments have been adopted that might very well have been deferred; but if in the future the method of amending the Constitution shall be that an affirmative majority vote of the electors of the respective States shall be required before that State shall be construed as having ratified the amendment, the business of amending the Constitution of the United States will be pretty nearly ended.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the able Senator for his remarks.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. SHIELDS. My view of the inquiry presented by the Senator from Arkansas is that the amendment would make it more difficult to railroad through an amendment to the Constitution, as has been done in the past, by having the legislatures alone pass on it. It would make it easier to get an amendment through or one rejected in accordance with the will of the people expressed at the ballot box.

Mr. ASHURST. I am grateful to the Senator from Arkansas and to the Senator from Tennessee for their contributions.

Mr. SHIELDS. The history of the past will bear out the truthfulness of what I have said in regard to the matter. I believe that all amendments ought to be made by the same authority that originally adopted the Constitution—that is, by the people. They did not act directly, as we are now proposing by the amendment, but through their representatives in convention elected for the special purpose of either ratifying or rejecting the constitution that was presented by the Constitutional Convention and then by the Congress to the several States.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me again?

Mr. ASHURST. With pleasure.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think there is no doubt that to adopt the proposal of the Senator from New York would make much more difficult all efforts to amend the Constitution of the United States. In one State with which I am somewhat familiar the constitution provided that before amendments should be considered as ratified they should be affirmatively voted for by a majority of the electors participating in an election. Experience showed that a great many voters did not familiarize themselves with the propositions for amendment and that they neglected to vote on the subject. The effect of their failure to do so was a vote against the amendment. While that provision was in force I think only one amendment to the constitution of that State was adopted out of more than 10 submitted.

Mr. ASHURST. At this juncture I am oppressed with the belief that I have unwittingly done the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] an injustice. He could not answer because he is at present in the chair. I ought to have said that the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York provided that amendments hereafter should be ratified by the legislature, one branch of which was chosen after the submission, and that the Judiciary Committee struck out that provision and inserted in lieu thereof a provision that the amendment should be ratified by direct vote of the people.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator described in part the original amendment. It is true that the original proposal contemplated that no legislature may ratify unless the members of at least one house shall have been chosen subsequent to submission, and thereafter the people of any State shall have the right to confirm the action of their legislature.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WADSWORTH. So the people under the original proposal, which has now been changed by the Committee on the Judiciary, would have the same right that they would have had under the amended amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. Under the proposal as reported by the Committee on the Judiciary the legislature would not in any way be eligible authority to ratify or reject a Federal amendment. It would have to be ratified by the qualified electors.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt again just at that point?

Mr. ASHURST. With pleasure.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Under the proposal of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], who just spoke, a legislature would have a veto power against the change if the people wanted to make the change.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; that is quite true.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That ought not to be the case in a democratic country in which majority rule of the people is to be maintained.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. In view of the suggestion that was brought out by the Senator from Arkansas as to the failure of the people to get out and vote, does not the Senator think that it would be wise to have a provision that any proposed constitutional amendment should be acted upon first either by convention or by the legislature, and then ratified by the people?

Mr. ASHURST. I think the question suggested by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] would answer the Senator from Washington. Somewhere, some place, some time, the American citizen should have a right to say under what form of government he wishes to live and whether or not he wishes that fundamental law changed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is what I thought.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I want to suggest to the Senator also, in reply to a remark of the Senator from Arkansas, that it seems to me if a constitutional amendment is submitted for the opinion of the people and the majority of them do not care enough about it to vote on it, it could not be an amendment which would very vitally concern the liberty and the happiness of the people, because they would turn out and vote for or against something which was a real issue.

Mr. ASHURST. Of real seriousness is the question of absentee voters. It occurs in the Senate. It occurs in every parliamentary body. There is always a percentage of persons who for various reasons do not vote. But I do not perceive how that can affect the principle that under a government like ours—a democratic Republic—the citizen at some time must be given in some place an opportunity to say what is his opinion as to a proposed change of the fundamental law.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. As I understand, it is not necessary under existing provisions for State constitutions to be submitted to the electorate at all.

Mr. ASHURST. There is no State in the Union that permits its constitution to be altered without giving the people an opportunity to express themselves on the proposed alteration.

Mr. BRUCE. But there are States in the Union which have adopted entire constitutions without submitting them to the people.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct. Some have proclaimed their constitutions.

Mr. BRUCE. The State of Mississippi is one.

Mr. ASHURST. Now, let me summarize.

According to the data of the year 1919, the aggregate membership of the legislatures of the States is 7,406 members.

Thus a mere majority of the membership of the legislatures in three-fourths of the several States which would aggregate about 4,600 men—plus two-thirds of the 531 Members of Congress—being about 5,000 men in all, may and do submit and ratify amendments to the Federal Constitution.

Five thousand men could change the structure of our Government to any form their fancy suggested or the lobbyist dictated and the people would have no opportunity to approve or reject the proposed amendments.

Our American system and public right should not be at the disposal of legislative caucuses but should be guarded by the free ballot of all the citizens.

Constitutional amendments should be ratified by the entire electorate and not by the legislatures of the States.

The able Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] spoke about proposed amendments being railroaded through the State legislatures. I read a graphic account of transactions surrounding the ratification of the fifteenth amendment. I read from a paper written long ago by Mr. A. Caperton Braxton, of Staunton, Va.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. Braxton was a schoolmate of mine.

Mr. ASHURST. The able Senator from Maryland states that Mr. Braxton was a schoolmate of his.

I think the reading of this article will be a more powerful argument in favor of giving the people an opportunity to vote on proposed constitutional amendments than any argument I could make. The article preceeds:

If the passage of this amendment—

The fifteenth amendment—

through Congress was unseemly, its ratification by the State legislature was, in several instances, at least, nothing short of scandalous.

The amendment passed the Senate rather late Friday night, February 26, 1869. The next morning, as soon as the enrolled resolution was signed by the Presiding Officer, it was telegraphed by Congressman Sydney Clarke to the Legislature of Kansas, then on the point of adjournment. His telegram, entirely unofficial, was received by the legislature during its afternoon session, and that very evening, in less than 24 hours after the amendment had passed Congress, long before it had been certified to the States for action, and before anyone in Kansas had even seen it (other than Clarke's telegraphic copy), the legislature of that State ratified it. The people of Kansas, at the polls about a year previous, had voted against negro suffrage by a majority of 2 to 1.

Senator Stewart, of Nevada, was, if anything, more anxious than Congressman Clarke, of Kansas, to obtain action by existing legislatures before the people could make themselves heard. The State of Nevada had very recently adopted a constitution which restricted suffrage to "white" men. The people of that State, like those of California and Oregon, were overwhelmingly opposed to an extension of the elective franchise to any but white men—not so much for fear of the negro as of the Chinese vote. It was generally conceded among the radical press that Nevada would certainly reject the amendment, but they underrated the resources of their own generals. Late Friday night, as soon as the Presiding Officer had announced that 39 votes was two-thirds of a Senate of 66 Members, Senator Stewart, impressed with the fact just stated by him to the Senate that the legislatures were waiting to ratify the amendment, and that if it was not done by them, and at once, the whole thing would be lost, caused the Secretary of the Senate, without even waiting for the resolution to be enrolled or signed, to telegraph it to the Legislatures of Nevada and Louisiana, to which telegrams he and three others added a message urging the immediate ratification by the legislatures.

This remarkable dispatch did not reach Nevada till the next morning, Saturday, when the legislature at once endeavored to comply with its instructions, but they were not quite so docile as in Kansas and did not succeed until Monday morning, March 1, 1869, when they ratified the amendment against a strong written protest of the minority, including Republicans and Democrats. This protest insisted, among other things, that the amendment had not received the constitutional two-thirds majority in the Federal Senate; that the Legislature of Nevada had as yet no official knowledge of the proposed amendment (the telegraphic report of it being, as it afterwards transpired, materially incorrect); that the people of Nevada should be given an opportunity to be heard upon it; and that the people, by voting the Republican ticket for President, had just within a few months past ratified the declaration of the Republican platform of May, 1868, that the control by loyal States of their suffrage laws should not be interfered with. But all this was as baying at the moon, and Nevada was recorded as the second State ratifying the fifteenth amendment.

The records of the Legislature of Missouri fail to show how that body was informed of the passage of the fifteenth amendment in Congress; the newspapers of the day said some one heard of it by telegram.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ASHURST. I will.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator agrees, then, with Francis P. Blair—General Blair, of Missouri—who stated right here on the floor of the Senate at the time that the fifteenth amendment was adopted by fraud and duress?

Mr. ASHURST. I do not think that any impartial, accurate historian would question that statement.

Mr. SHIELDS. It was to the fifteenth amendment which I was especially referring when I stated that constitutional amendments were railroaded through.

Mr. ASHURST. I was reading about the ratification of the fifteenth amendment.

Mr. SHIELDS. The fact is, as the Senator from Arizona knows, that the amendment really never was ratified by a sufficient number of States when the Secretary of State proclaimed that it had been ratified.

Mr. ASHURST. The ratifications by some of the legislatures were under duress.

This was enough; accordingly that legislature, early Monday morning, March 1, 1869, suspended their rules and ratified what they thought was the amendment, but it turned out, after they had adjourned, that the thing they ratified was not the amendment at all, and so they had to ratify all over again when they next assembled.

APPENDIX.

Dillon v. Gloss, deputy collector of United States internal revenue. Appeal from the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of California. Volume 256, United States Reports, pages 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 375, 376, and 377.

Mr. Justice Van Devanter delivered the opinion of the court.

This is an appeal from an order denying a petition for a writ of habeas corpus. (262 Fed. Rep. 563.) The petitioner was in custody under section 26 of Title II of the national prohibition act, chapter 85, 41 Statutes, 305, on a charge of transporting intoxicating liquor in violation of section 3 of that title, and by his petition sought to be discharged on several grounds, all but two of which were abandoned after the decision in National Prohibition Cases, 253 United States, 350. The remaining grounds are: First, that the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution, to enforce which Title II of the act was adopted, is invalid because the congressional resolution (40 Stat. 1050) proposing the amendment declared that it should be inoperative unless ratified within seven years; and, secondly, that, in any event, the provisions of the act which the petitioner was charged with violating, and under which he was arrested, had not gone into effect at the time of the asserted violation nor at the time of the arrest.

The power to amend the Constitution and the mode of exerting it are dealt with in Article V, which reads:

> "The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments of this Constitution, or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress; provided that no amendment which may be made prior to the year 1908 shall in any manner affect the first and fourth clauses in the ninth section of the first article; and that no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate."

It will be seen that this article says nothing about the time within which ratification may be had—neither that it shall be unlimited nor that it shall be fixed by Congress. What then is the reasonable inference or implication? Is it that ratification may be had at any time, as within a few years, a century, or even a longer period; or that it must be had within some reasonable period which Congress is left free to define? Neither the debates in the Federal convention which framed the Constitution nor those in the State conventions which ratified it shed any light on the question.

The proposal for the eighteenth amendment is the first in which a definite period for ratification was fixed. Theretofore 21 amendments had been proposed by Congress and 17 of these had been ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States—some within a single year after their proposal and all within four years. Each of the remaining four had been ratified in some of the States, but not in a sufficient number. Eighty years after the partial ratification of one an effort was made to complete its ratification and the legislature of Ohio passed a joint resolution to that end, after which the effort was abandoned. Two, after ratification in one less than the required number of States, had lain dormant for a century. The other, proposed March 2, 1861, declared:

> "No amendment shall be made to the Constitution which will authorize or give to Congress the power to abolish or interfere, within any State, with the domestic institutions thereof, including that of persons held to labor or service by the laws of said State."

Its principal purpose was to protect slavery and at the time of its proposal and partial ratification it was a subject of absorbing interest, but after the adoption of the thirteenth amendment it was generally forgotten. Whether an amendment proposed without fixing any time for ratification, which after favorable action in less than the required number of States had lain dormant for many years, could be resurrected and its ratification completed had been mooted on several occasions, but was still an open question.

These were the circumstances in the light of which Congress in proposing the eighteenth amendment fixed seven years as the period for ratification. Whether this could be done was questioned at the time and debated at length, but the prevailing view in both Houses was that some limitation was intended and that seven years was a reasonable period.

That the Constitution contains no express provision on the subject is not in itself controlling; for with the Constitution, as with a statute or other written instrument, what is reasonably implied is as much a part of it as what is expressed. An examination of Article V discloses that it is intended to invest Congress with a wide range of power in proposing amendments. Passing a provision, long since expired, it subjects this power to only two restrictions: One that the proposal shall have the approval of two-thirds of both Houses, and the other excluding any amendment which will deprive any State, without its consent, of its equal suffrage in the Senate. A further mode of proposal—as yet never invoked—is provided, which is that on the application of two-thirds of the States Congress shall call a convention for the purpose. When proposed in either mode, amendments to be effective must be ratified by the legislatures, or by conventions, in three-fourths of the States "as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress." Thus the people of the United States, by whom the Constitution was ordained and established, have made it a condition to amending that instrument that the amendment be submitted to representative assemblies in the several States and be ratified in three-fourths of them. The plain meaning of this is (a) that all amendments must have the sanction of the people of the United States, the original fountain of power, acting through representative assemblies, and (b) that ratification by these assemblies in three-fourths of the States shall be taken as a decisive expression of the people's will and be binding on all.

We do not find anything in the article which suggests that an amendment once proposed is to be open to ratification for all time, or that ratification in some of the States may be separated from that in others by many years and yet be effective. We do find that which strongly suggests the contrary. First, proposal and ratification are not treated as unrelated acts but as succeeding steps. In a single endeavor, the natural inference being that they are not to be widely separated in time. Secondly, it is only when there is deemed to be a necessity therefor that amendments are to be proposed, the reasonable implication being that when proposed they are to be considered and disposed of presently. Thirdly, as ratification is but the expression of the approbation of the people, and is to be effective when had in three-fourths of the States, there is a fair implication that it must be sufficiently contemporaneous in that number of States to reflect the will of the people in all sections at relatively the same period, which, of course, ratification scattered through a long series of years would not do.

These considerations and the general purport and spirit of the article lead to the conclusion expressed by Judge Jameson "that an alteration of the Constitution proposed to-day has relation to the sentiment and the felt needs of to-day, and that, if no ratified early while that sentiment may fairly be supposed to exist, it ought to be regarded as waived, and not again to be voted upon, unless a second time proposed by Congress." That this is the better conclusion becomes even more manifest when what is comprehended in the other view is considered; for, according to it, four amendments proposed long ago—two in 1789, one in 1810, and one in 1861—are still pending and in a situation where their ratification in some of the States many years since, by representatives of generations now largely forgotten, may be effectively supplemented in enough more States to make three-fourths by representatives of the present or some future generation. To that view few would be able to subscribe, and in our opinion it is quite untenable. We conclude that the fair inference or implication from Article V is that the ratification must be within some reasonable time after the proposal.

Of the power of Congress, keeping within reasonable limits, to fix a definite period for the ratification we entertain no doubt. As a rule the Constitution speaks in general terms, leaving Congress to deal with subsidiary matters of detail as the public interests and changing conditions may require; and Article V is no exception to the rule. Whether a definite period for ratification shall be fixed so that all may know what it is and speculation on what is a reasonable time may be avoided, is, in our opinion, a matter of detail which Congress may determine as an incident of its power to designate the mode of ratification. It is not questioned that seven years, the period fixed in this instance, was reasonable, if power existed to fix a definite time; nor could it well be questioned considering the periods within which prior amendments were ratified.

The provisions of the act which the petitioner was charged with violating and under which he was arrested (Title II, secs. 3, 26) were by the terms of the act (Title III, sec. 21) to be in force from and after the date when the eighteenth amendment should go into effect, and the latter by its own terms was to go into effect one year after being ratified. Its ratification, of which we take judicial notice, was consummated January 16, 1919. That the Secretary of State did not proclaim its ratification until January 29, 1919, is not material, for the date of its consummation, and not that on which it is proclaimed, controls. It follows that the provisions of the act with which the petitioner is concerned went into effect January 16, 1920. His alleged offense and his arrest were on the following day; so his claim that those provisions had not gone into effect at the time is not well grounded.

Final order affirmed.

(256 U. S. Repts. 370–377.)

CRITICISM OF REPUBLICAN POLICIES.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, on the night of February 12, in the city of New York, the President of the United States delivered an address in which, among other things, he said:

Character is the only secure foundation of the state. We know well that all plans for improving the machinery of government and all measures for social betterments miserably fail and the hopes of progress wither when corruption touches administration. At the revelation of greed making its subtle approaches to public officers, of the prostitution of high places to private profit, we are filled with scorn and indignation. We have a deep sense of humiliation at such gross betrayal of trust, and we lament the undermining of public confidence in official integrity.

Mr. President, every right-thinking American citizen applauds those sentiments. Reputation is something dearly bought, paid for only in right living, and is to be admired. No one should attack another's reputation unless he has good cause. Charges should never be made unless they can be proven, and when men high in public favor stoop to corrupt actions, of course they destroy the confidence of the people not only in the particular individual but in the whole Government.

If our institutions are to be preserved and this Government is to be safeguarded, it must be through the faith of the people in public officials; and yet, Mr. President, I notice in the morning newspaper that the National Republican, the organ of the Republican National Committee, issues a statement and asks the press of the country to use it, hoping that it will be carried in every neswpaper throughout the country, its sole purpose being to undermine public confidence in men who are upon committees investigating charges.

I called the attention of the Senate and the country some 10 days ago to the National Republican and the propaganda that was being published in that organ and carried throughout the country in an effort to minimize this awful scandal, and to assert indirectly that the leases which were made to Doheny and Sinclair were legal. It sought to whitewash the charges that had been made against Fall and Doheny and against everybody else connected with this affair. I find in the newspapers this morning a statement—and I have a copy of the original here—that was given to the country yesterday by the National Republican.

I have heretofore called attention to the fact that the men who direct and control the policies of the National Republican are the chairman of the Republican National Committee, Mr. John Adams; George Lockwood, secretary of the Republican National Committee; John W. Weeks, Secretary of War in the present Cabinet; and other national committeemen from various States. They are the men presumed to be closest to the President and who in large part direct the policies of the present administration.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Did I understand the Senator to say that Secretary Weeks is a member of the Republican National Committee?

Mr. HARRISON. No; the Senator did not understand me correctly. I said that the official organ of the Republican Party, known as the National Republican, is controlled by various stockholders and that Mr. John W. Weeks, as disclosed in the investigation made in 1920 by the Kenyon committee, owned $5,000 of stock—I believe it was—in the National Republican. So it must be conceded that this organ is the one which directs the policies and circulates the propaganda for the Republican Party. Indeed, in this investigation it is shown that Mr. Hays, who was then the chairman of the Republican National Committee, so stated. A letter is incorporated therein from the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], one of the Republican leaders, to the same effect; another one from Will Wood, who was chairman of the congressional campaign committee of the Republican Party, to the same tenor and effect. So it can not be denied, it is not denied, that the National Republican is the official organ of the Republican Party.

Now, I desire to read what the men who direct the policies of this organ said yesterday in this statement:

A CHRONOLOGY OF THE DAUGHERTY CASE.

1. Senator WHEELER, then United States district attorney for Montana, is tried by the Montana State Council of Defense during the World War for close affiliation with I. W. W. and other seditious elements in the State of Montana, and for refusal to prosecute them for acts of violence, and after a five-day hearing by a council composed of both Democrats and Republicans, is unanimously found guilty and recommended to President Wilson for dismissal.

2. WHEELER becomes a candidate for Governor of Montana on the Nonpartisan League-Democratic ticket and is defeated.

3. WHEELER becomes a candidate for United States Senator, and after a heavily financed campaign, with the united support of all I. W. W., Communist, Socialist, and radical elements, is elected.

4. Following interviews favorable to Soviet Russia, WHEELER goes to Russia for an extended stay as a guest of the Soviet Government, and returns to give out statements comparing the American Government unfavorably to that of Soviet Russia.

5. Attorney General continues vigorous prosecution of plots against the Government by I. W. W. and communist elements, refuses under heavy pressure to recommend release of the more flagrant war-time seditionists, and when the Moscow Government calls upon the American Government for evidence of Bolshevist plots in the United States, furnishes information to Secretary Hughes to confirm his statements, including the full report of the Michigan meeting of I. W. W.'s and communists broken up by agents of the Department of Justice. The Senate demands this information, but is refused by Attorney General Daugherty on the ground that it would endanger the lives of informants.

6. Following a barrage of attack by Senators impugning by wholesale the integrity of Government officials and speeches calculated to undermine the faith of the American people in their Government, Senator WHEELER introduces a resolution attacking the Attorney General and providing an investigation of his office. Opposition Senators, thrown into a political panic, demand the resignation of the Attorney General, who, supported by the President and the Republican national chairman, declines to resign under fire and welcomes the investigation.

The object, the sole intent, of this propaganda upon the part of the Republican National Committee or its officers is to create in the public mind the impression that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is allied with the I. W. W. and the soviet, thereby trying to destroy the effectiveness of this investigation. Is that sound policy? Is that fair, Mr. President? And they do not stop at hat. They go further, and in the eighth paragraph they say:

8. The Senate passes the Wheeler resolution for an investigation of the Attorney's General's office, and selects as head of the committee Senator BROOKHART, of Iowa, another recent guest and eulogist of the Russian Soviet Government.

They are the only two men who are placed upon the committee who are selected by these men who control the destinies of the Republican Party as objects of attack in order to destroy the faith and confidence of the people in their work.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WADSWORTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BROOKHART. I should like to inquire of the Senator what the Republican says about the 66 Senators who voted for the resolution?

Mr. HARRISON. I was just coming to that.

Mr. President, with the American people stirred as they have never been stirred before by the infamous Teapot Dome scandal, with the Senate of the United States by unanimous vote directing these men to investigate these charges and try to restore confidence to the American people, we find that these leaders of the Republican Party are trying to undermine confidence in the committee and cast aspersions upon these honorable men. Why do they select WHEELER? Why do they print all of this stuff about him? Has he not been honored by the people of the great State of Montana? He is a young man, with a brilliant future, and his whole record shows him to be imbued with the highest motives. No finger of suspicion as to his honesty has ever been pointed at him. He started out in life, I dare say, with but few friends and few of them leaders of great influence; but because of his exceptional ability as a lawyer, because of his humane qualities of fighting for the under dog at all times and not allying himself with the big interests of Montana he won public favor against obstacles that few men have ever been able to overcome; and yet the leaders of the Republican Party try to destroy him, not because they care anything about WHEELER, but because they want to create in the country the impression that the committee is stacked so that whatever recommendation it may make will have little weight in the country.

There is the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] who is attacked by the leaders of his own party in the same way, not because they care anything about BROOKHART, but because they want to create the impression that he is not fit to sit on this committee, that he is unworthy of public confidence, that he can not give this matter a fair and impartial hearing. Why do they say it? The chairman of the Republican National Committee lives in the State represented in part by the distinguished junior Senator from Iowa and, if I recall correctly, in that State in the last election the junior Senator from Iowa came here by one of the largest majorities ever accorded any candidate in that State.

I do not know what the figures were, but, if I recall correctly, they were around 160,000 majority. If I am not wrong, I think he carried about 94 out of 97 counties. He had the confidence of those people. Why? Not because he had around him some influential Republican leaders of reactionary tendencies, but it was because when he was younger than he is now and serving his people as a prosecuting officer, he saw fit to resign his office and go to Cuba and fight in the service of his country and win laurels. It was because, too, in the late Great War, while others in his State were preaching pro-Germanism and receiving the criticism and condemnation of their fellow citizens for their pro-German views, the Senator who is now attacked by his own party leaders joined the forces of this country, went across, and became the chief inspector of the whole Army in marksmanship. He served his country with distinction. Has any finger been pointed at him throughout his record as being dishonest? No, Mr. President. Whatever has been said about him and Mr. WHEELER, though they have been charged with radical views and progressive tendencies, the people have always thought that they were fair, that they were impartial, that they were forward looking, that they were broad visioned, and that they were progressive. The Senate evidently did not believe, when they were placed upon this committee by the unanimous vote of every Republican and every Democrat here, that they were not honorable men, that they were not men of the highest integrity, that they would not give Mr. Daugherty a fair investigation; and I submit that since this committee was named with these two men on it, the committee has progressed along lines that evince its determination to conduct a fair and an impartial investigation.

It matters not what views these two Senators may entertain, or how dishonest they may be according to the expressions of the leaders of the Republican Party through their organ. This committee is made up also of other men. Here is the distinguished senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]; here is the distinguished senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], and the distinguished senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]—all men of the highest character and exceptional ability. This committee was selected in a way somewhat different from the way in which committees have been selected in the past because the Senate did not want the impression to go out to the country that there was any stacked committee or that the findings would be anything else than fair and just findings; so the Senate of the United States voted for the selection of these men. They are an exceptional investigating committee, and, so far as the RECORD shows, they are the choice of every man in the United States Senate.

I have seen it stated that the committee are going to allow Mr. Daugherty's attorneys, ex-Senator Chamberlain and Mr. Howland, to appear before the committee and even to cross-examine witnesses, so anxious are they to see that all the facts are disclosed and that justice is done in this investigation. There is not a Senator here who wants to see any packed committee investigating anybody. I do not know whether the charges against Mr. Daugherty are true or not. I want to see them go to the bottom and follow every avenue and every channel and bring in their report after the fullest kind of an investigation; and I have such faith in the integrity and the honesty of the members of the committee that whatever their findings are I will give them great weight.

It has been said that this is a jury trying a man. It is not a jury; it is an investigation of all the facts, and the Senate can take whatever action it chooses after the findings are all made.

But, Mr. President, this remarkable document of yesterday goes further than that. With all the charges that have been made, with all the confessions of these men that have been published in the papers—and you know what they are—in letters to Senators and otherwise, we find this clause in this circular. We can read in the papers to-day and to-morrow and last week that the President of the United States is going to request the resignation of his Attorney General. The reporters of the big newspapers rely upon the statement they get from the White House as to what is coming, and it goes to the country, and the country is led to believe that the President sits there carefully and cautiously weighing this matter before he comes to his conclusion to request the resignation of Mr. Daugherty. Not satisfied with what he learned from the speeches delivered upon the floor of the Senate by my distinguished friend here, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] nearly two years ago, while the present President sat as the Presiding Officer of this body; notwithstanding the fact that he had heard the eloquent speech of the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] over two years ago; notwithstanding the fact that he sat in conferences and in Cabinet meetings and read the newspapers and had his political advisers to tell him what was happening, and knew as few men in this whole country knew of every rumor that is afloat, we get the impression from the papers that he sits there "cautiously and carefully" awaiting the proper time, the psychological moment, to request the resignation of Mr. Daugherty.

Yet Mr. Adams, John W. Weeks, the Secretary of War, and George Lockwood, the secretary of the Republican National Committee, know what is in the President's mind. I do not care what the newspapers publish; these men are on the inside. They know what the President is thinking about. He is assisting them in creating propaganda and establishing their policies, and here is what Adams and Lockwood, these men who direct the policies of the Republican Party and control the National Republican, said only yesterday, to be published this morning—and it was published. This is what they said about it:

> Opposition Senators, thrown into a political panic, demand the resignation of the Attorney General, who, supported by the President and the Republican national chairman, declines to resign under fire and welcomes the investigation.

There are some traits in Harry Daugherty that I greatly admire. Whatever may be said about him, he is a fighter, and as long as he was here he made these fellows come up to the lick log, and he put the fighting spirit in them. As soon as he left to go to Florida we found that his cause was growing weak. But this morning, as the papers say, when the President is about to reconsider and to request his resignation, we read that Daugherty is on his way back. Yes, he is coming back, and he will beard you again in your den. He will face you here upon the floor of the Senate, and some of you whose arms have been strong in the past will grow weak—they will wither at the sight of him. This pamphlet shows that the President is behind the Attorney General.

Who else is behind him? The distinguished senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is not behind him, nor is the distinguished senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] behind him. Who is behind him with the President? The chairman of the Republican National Campaign Committee. That is stated in this pamphlet, issued under the direction of the chairman of the Republican National Campaign Committee, John Adams.

It was a blast that Mr. Adams gave out. He it was who sounded the tocsin call to Republicans over the country to come to the rescue of Daugherty. At that time he was almost single handed and alone fighting for him, but since that day the President has been his right-hand man, and to-day, I care not who may assail Daugherty, Coolidge and John Adams will defend him. They stand to-day defending Daugherty as the Siamese twins.

Who is meant by this circular when it speaks of the "opposition Senators being thrown into a political panic"? What is in the minds of Adams and Lockwood and Weeks and the national committeemen who control the National Republican? There is not a Senator here but who knows whom they are speaking of.

"Opposition Senators thrown into a political panic." It was the distinguished leader of the Republican Party in the Senate, Mr. LODGE; it was the distinguished senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER], who, after a conference among Senators on the other side, went to the White House. I do not know how many were in the conference, but probably they were expressing the views of all the Members over there. They were dispatched to the White House to tell the President what they thought was good politics and right in the premises, and they went up there and did speak to the President. They told him that Mr. Daugherty should resign, and that if he held on to him he would make a great political mistake; that it would hurt the Republican Party in the country, and if it came to a vote in the Senate, the Senate would pass a resolution demanding his resignation.

But they did not get much comfort out of the President. They came back and reported. I think probably my good friend from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] advised him also; and his advice is worth something touching political matters. He not only advised the President within the close confines of the White House to drop the Attorney General but he came out in a public statement, aye, he spoke it upon the floor of the Senate, saying that the Attorney General should resign. Yet those who control the Republican Party in the national committee to-day say that "opposition Senators, thrown into a political panic, demand the resignation of the Attorney General, who, supported by the President and the Republican national chairman, declines to resign."

I do not know why the President takes that position. I do know that the American people have lost confidence in many of the men who to-day occupy high places in the Republican Party. They are losing confidence in their Government, and they will lose more confidence if the highest official in this land, the President, holds on to any man who fails to discharge his public duties, and whose conduct casts suspicion upon his office.

It may be that the President has taken the advice also of Ned McLean in this Daugherty matter. He perhaps took it in the Denby matter; I do not know. Perhaps he was given it in the Roosevelt matter; I do not know about that. But I know this, Mr. President, that when the American people read the revelations of this morning before the committee investigating this oil scandal, find out that there were not only telegrams sent in secret code by men in the Department of Justice to Ned McLean and others down at Palm Beach, but even that messages went signed by the President of the United States to Ned McLean at Palm Beach, it will cause them further to shudder, to tremble, and lose confidence—my God—in this Government of ours.

It is bad enough when men employed at the White House send messages to Ned McLean, when he admits openly, by his confession, that he has deceived the American people, misrepresented facts—aye, even that he has lied about the matter. It is bad enough when messages, I say, go to McLean from employees at the White House when all this is breaking, when the teapot is boiling over. It is bad, too, when secret-service codes, known only to the officials of the Department of Justice, are employed by Ned McLean and the employees of the Department of Justice in communicating with each other. But when the facts are revealed that Ned McLean, while all this is being heaped upon him, seeks the President of the United States for information and for consulation—here are the messages:

January 12, 1924—

Mind you, it was January 11, 1924, one day before this message was transmitted, that Ed McLean confessed that he told a falsehood when he said he loaned to Fall the $100,000. The papers were full of it. He was a self-confessed liar. Yet the very next day, over the private wires that led from the White House, in which the American people place all their confidence, a message goes to McLean down at Palm Beach. This is the message:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 12, 9 p. m.

EDWARD B. MCLEAN,
Palm Beach, Fla.:

Prescott is away. Advise Slemp with whom I shall confer. Acknowledge.

(Signed) CALVIN COOLIDGE.

I hope that some real explanation can be made by the President. With the country at fever heat as it is to-day, it is incumbent on the President to give a statement to remove the suspicion that attaches to that telegram, not that Bascom Slemp, the Secretary of the President, shall give out a statement, but that the President of the United States shall himself give all the facts touching it.

I am aware that already there has been sent out or given out from the White House two or three lines making some kind of an explanation of it, they think, but that is given out by Bascom Slemp. Bascom Slemp is the man who was appointed by the President after it was shown in the other House that he accepted money from applicants for appointment as postmasters, and he said he turned it over to the Republican National Committee to help pay the deficit. All that scandal was published. Yet, in the face of that the President appointed Bascom. Bascom is the man who went to Florida, and who a dozen times in Florida, as shown by the testimony, ate with Ned McLean, and Fall was present practically every time.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. DILL. I wanted to suggest to the Senator if it would not be interesting for the President to inform the country why he asked Mr. McLean to ask Mr. Slemp, the President's private secretary, instead of asking Mr. Slemp directly. What is the relationship that Mr. McLean should be the go-between between the President and his own private Secretary?

Mr. HARRISON. I can not understand it at all, and I sincerely hope for the good of the country and in the interest of restoring public confidence that the President will feel that he should give out a statement over his own signature—and I pray that it will be plausible and that it will be thorough—in explanation of this whole transaction.

My God! I love my country better than any political party, and as an American citizen I hate to see men high in public places being smeared with such a scandal as this, because, my friends, when the people lose confidence in them they lose confidence in all public officials, and I am sincerely sorry that the President saw fit to communicate with Ned McLean in Florida in the circumstances.

AGRICULTURAL DIVERSIFICATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (S. 2250) to promote a permanent system of self-supporting agriculture in regions adversely affected by the stimulation of wheat production during the war, and aggravated by many years of small yields and high production costs of wheat.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I noticed that statement on the calendar this morning, but it does not, I think, state the true condition of affairs. That bill was made a special order for Monday next at a given hour. The Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. LADD] laid it aside awaiting the hour to arrive when it would be taken up again. The Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill was taken up and became the unfinished business, and should have been reported this morning as the unfinished business. Otherwise I should not have asked consideration of it in the small remnant of the morning hour. But under any circumstances it now practically becomes the unfinished business, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived.

Mr. LADD. That is true, Mr. President. The agricultural diversification bill was temporarily laid aside, to be taken up on Monday at 3 o'clock, and the Senator from Wyoming, in charge of the appropriation bill, was to have the right of way until that time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, as one Member of the Senate I did not understand that as the agreement. The agricultural bill was temporarily laid aside and then a unanimous-consent agreement was entered into with reference to debate after the hour of 3 o'clock on Monday. That bill could be temporarily laid aside now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The understanding of the Chair was that the bill which the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] has in charge was temporarily laid aside. No other disposition was made of it. It is the duty of the Chair at 2 o'clock to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is that bill. The understanding is that when laid before the Senate it shall again be temporarily laid aside from time to time until Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock if other business intervenes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, notwithstanding a member of the Appropriations Committee seems to regard it as peremptory that I have called up the appropriation bill—and judging from the debate that has been had since I called it up, it does not matter much when it is brought forward. We might as well take up the other bill as any other, I suppose, as prolonged debate seems probable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has before him the language of the RECORD.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think it ought to be said that the Senator from Wyoming is laboring under the impression, as I understand it, that he can make something the unfinished business by unanimous consent. That is not what makes anything the unfinished business. The agreement, which he himself said was put into effect yesterday, is undisputed, but it did not make the appropriation bill the unfinished business. That would have been an impossibility.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has so stated.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the understanding has been that when the unfinished business was laid before the Senate to-day the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] would ask unanimous consent that it be temporarily laid aside, in order that the Senator from Wyoming might proceed with the consideration of the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator in charge of the bill, I take it from his language, has rather rebuked me for the attitude I took.

Mr. WARREN. Not at all. I simply stated the difficulties under which I attempted to take up the appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations, but I understood the request on yesterday to be to temporarily lay aside the unfinished business for the purpose of bringing up the appropriation bill. I did not anticipate that there would be any trouble in keeping the bill before the Senate until it was disposed of or until next Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock. Of course, I understand, and I understood it when the agreement was made, that if any Senator desires to discuss the bill which is the unfinished business, he will have a perfect right to do it even to the extent of calling up that bill for the purpose. While, of course, he could discuss any subject that he desires while the appropriation bill is before the Senate, yet it would not be out of order for any Senator at any time to ask to have the Agricultural bill laid before the Senate for the purpose of considering it. Of course, there is no trouble about having the Agricultural bill temporarily laid aside now and the appropriation bill called up.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that we may proceed to the consideration of the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6349) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed at line 20, page 2, and continued to the bottom of page 3.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee with reference to a number of the items without enumerating them particularly. The Senator is aware of the fact that during the war when appropriations of the Government were much larger than they are now—brought about, of course, by reason of heavy expenditures on account of the war—the number of Federal officials in the Treasury Department was increased. I do not mean by that that the number was not increased in other departments. Since the war the appropriations necessarily have been reduced, but should be much less than they now are. In comparing the appropriations for the Treasury Department for the next fiscal year with the appropriations made in 1918, 1919, and 1920, I do not find any material reduction.

There ought to have been, it seems to me, an enormous reduction in expenses of operating the Treasury Department, but we find here millions and tens of millions of dollars as expenses for the Treasury Department. For instance, on pages 4, 5, and 6, and extending for 20 or 30 pages, there is a large number of items, aggregating tens of millions of dollars. I would like to ask the Senator why there have not been greater reductions in these items and in the appropriation bills generally than may be shown?

May I say before the Senator replies that the report which has been prepared by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], accompanying the bill, shows that the amount carried by the bill as it passed the House was $729,959,970.25. The Senate has increased this amount by nearly $7,000,000, so that the aggregate amount reported by the Senate Committee on Appropriations is $736,867,380.25. The amount of appropriations for the fiscal year 1924 was only $711,381,567, so that the appropriation for the next fiscal year exceeds the appropriation for the present fiscal year by nearly $25,500,000.

Our Republican friends, and I say this in no critical spirit, promised great reforms and a reduction in taxation, as well as greater efficiency in the departments, and yet in this bill alone we find an increase of more than $25,000,000 as between the present fiscal year and the next fiscal year.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the war is over and the clean-up following the war, of course, brings to us matters for settlement that have been neglected or deferred during the war. The post-office business is considerably increased. As the Senator knows, there is some part of the nearly $700,000,000 appropriation that comes back during the year, all, perhaps, except $30,000,000 or possibly $40,000,000. The post-office business has tremendously increased, as have many lines of business. The post-office business last year increased something like 17 per cent, as I recall it—not only the letter mail but the parcel-post business—so that there is a very large increase there that really does not involve so very much of an increase in the expenses of the Government, but we must arrange to encompass the great additional amount of business that is to be handled meantime.

As for the Treasury Department, there has been right along from year to year reductions from the peak, and very considerable reductions, but in that department there is a very considerable line of business that must be taken care of. We started at the end of the war with about $27,000,000,000 indebtedness, a part of which was provided for by the issuance of bonds, other parts by notes and certificates. In the meantime many of the bonds which were issued have had to be taken in because they had become due. Others have been exchanged largely for new issues. Hence a large amount of work is demanded and must be taken care of by experienced, able employees.

The Senator would more particularly note this if he would look at the hearings which were held before the House and Senate subcommittees. There are several scores of pages there that explain very fully the situation. I think the Senator would agree with me, after an examination of the hearings with his usual acuteness and detail, that we can not well reduce in the present year more than has been done. I ask the Senator to notice that we have not increased an item contained in the House text in the first 16 pages of the bill. So far as we are concerned, we became satisfied that the items in the House bill were reduced as much as it was safe to shave them, and we have not increased them at all.

The Senator spoke of the amount carried by the bill. This is the first time, of course, that two bills have been grouped under one head. Here we have in one bill the appropriations for the Post Office Department and for the Treasury Department. There is a matter, for instance, of between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000 involved in the one item of collection of customs.

Now, it appears that in the collection of customs duties, which are very greatly increased, as the Senator knows, being now almost $500,000,000 a year, there is such great pressure upon the present force of employees that there are a great many articles which have to be passed practically without examination.

Then, again, the House of Representatives shaved very closely the appropriations for the Internal Revenue Bureau. It might strike one, perhaps, on first observation that because the amount of taxes collected is smaller than in previous years, consequently less help would be required, but the bureau is necessarily three years behind in dealing with various delinquents and cases of incorrectly returned taxes. A good many employees have been placed on that work, and I will say to the Senator that they have not only collected great amounts of back taxes greatly exceeding the sum of their salaries but they have gotten the body of taxpayers into the position where they should be, where they can make out their own returns and not undertake to escape taxation or any part of their liability. We found the collection of back taxes ran up into many million dollars above the expense of collection. So we have allowed the bureau to keep for a longer time the men whom they now have in order that they may clean up the remaining business.

Of course, as the Senator knows, collections for the year 1917 dragged along and there had to be suits commenced for the collection of back taxes. It was suggested that waivers might be made in order that the statute of limitations would not run against such suits. The bureau is now working on the returns of individuals and corporations for later years. Many of these cases are being straightened out up to and including the returns for all years except last year.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in January last I addressed the Senate and discussed an editorial, printed by the Saturday Evening Post, entitled "Cut yourself a piece of cake." Subsequently I received a letter from Mr. P. S. Collins, general business manager of the Curtis Publishing Co., in which he asserted that I had—inadvertently, of course—made some error or had done an injustice.

Mr. President, I try to be fair, and I think that principle is what should guide a man. So, out of a spirit of fairness, I ought now to ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD a letter, under date of January 11, 1924, from the general business manager of the Curtis Publishing Co. If the Senate wishes the letter read it may be read, but it is three pages in length and I ask that it may be included in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. I wish to ask if that was the article in behalf of the Mellon plan?

Mr. ASHURST. In January of this year I delivered a speech in the Senate in which I criticized the article in the Saturday Evening Post entitled "Cut yourself a piece of cake."

Mr. CARAWAY. I imagine that he was not complaining about cutting himself a piece of cake, for he seems to be willing to take the whole cake.

Mr. ASHURST. I made the charges here, and so this would be the proper place to print the reply. Therefore, if there is no objection, I ask that the letter of Mr. Collins may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

JANUARY 11, 1924.

HON. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR ASHURST: We note a newspaper reference to an address recently delivered by you in which it is stated that "Senator ASHURST assailed the Saturday Evening Post" in connection with an alleged deficit to the Government arising from carrying the Saturday Evening Post in the mails.

Judging from the newspaper report referred to, that the statement attributed to you was prompted by an editorial which appeared in the Scripps-Howard newspapers, we venture to quote from a letter recently written to Mr. William B. Colver, editor in chief of those papers, in that connection:

MR. WILLIAM B. COLVER,
Editor in Chief the Scripps-Howard Newspapers,
1322 New York Avenue NW., Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: We have before us clipping of an editorial entitled "Cut yourself a piece of cake," which appeared in Scripps-Howard newspapers.

In the clipping referred to Representative RAINEY is quoted as having in 1917 made the statement that at that time the cost to the Government for carrying the Saturday Evening Post in the mails was $780,000 per year, and, further, that "the subsidy they now receive from the Government is as large as it was in 1917."

Even if the first statement was correct at the time it was made (though anyone familiar with transportation and delivery costs will hardly believe that there existed in the Post Office Department such inefficiency as such condition would indicate), and even if now, as then, virtually the entire edition of the Saturday Evening Post was sent by mail, the magazine ought to be paying its own way now, for the present postal rate on magazines of national circulation, such as the Saturday Evening Post, is about four times what it was then.

The fact is, however, that because of the present excessive postal rates, over 70 per cent of the entire edition of The Saturday Evening Post does not now enter the United States mails at all, and further that even of the remaining 30 per cent about one-half is not transported from Philadelphia by mail, but is handled by the Government only for local delivery.

Actually up to this time nobody knows what it costs the Government to handle any one class of mail. Various governmental commissions and committees who have in the past investigated the matter have all so stated.

As a field for guessing contests, that of postal costs has up to this time offered unlimited opportunities for imagination. For example: You may recall that former Postmaster General Burleson, during the latter part of his administration, called attention to the alleged material profit arising from the carriage of parcel-post matter, which to-day constitutes more than 60 per cent of the entire weight of the mails; while his successor in office a little later stated that it resulted in a tremendous deficit. This, as you know, is only typical.

The greatest sufferers from the present excessive postal rates are actually the many valuable publications of comparatively small circulations, some of which have been forced out of existence, and not such publications as The Saturday Evening Post, the overwhelming part of the editions of which is not now carried by mail, but by other transportation agencies, which are doing it at a cost far below that charged by the Government, and incidentally doing it at material profit to themselves.

Very truly yours,

THE CURTIS PUBLISHING CO.,
P. S. COLLINS,
General Business Manager.

Whenever the question of mail rates is under discussion, The Saturday Evening Post (presumably because of its large circulation) is almost always referred to by somebody as being peculiarly responsible for an alleged deficit in the handling of second-class mail matter. As stated in my letter to Mr. Colver, 70 per cent of the edition is distributed entirely outside of the mails, and one-half of the remainder is only handled by the Government for local delivery. But the limited portion which does go through the mails, actually pays a rate to the Government which, in proportion to the Government's expense, is equaled by very few publications in the country.

To illustrate: I have before me a copy of a small Philadelphia periodical, weighing 10 copies to the pound, and 5 per cent of the space in which is devoted to advertising. For transporting 10 copies of this periodical to Arizona and delivering them by carrier to 10 separate addresses, the Government receives a total revenue of about 2 cents (1 pound of magazines; 10 deliveries—2 cents). On the other hand, one copy of the Saturday Evening Post, which averages 1 pound, sent to one of the same addresses, costs the publisher 6½ cents (1 pound of magazines; 1 delivery—6½ cents).

I am sure you will agree that, if one is endeavoring to prove that the carriage of second-class mail matter results in a deficit to the Government, the Saturday Evening Post is not a happy selection.

The existing system of charges for second-class mail is, in fact, the only instance of which I know in the transportation world in which the rate is so devised that the shipper whose goods are handled by the carrier at the lowest cost pays the highest rate.

Very truly yours,

THE CURTIS PUBLISHING CO.,
P. S. COLLINS,
General Business Manager.

Mr. KING. Before the Senator from Arizona takes his seat I should like to ask him if the statement which he made is not substantially true, namely, as I recall the statement, that the Curtis Publishing Co., as well as others, are getting their publications transmitted through the mails at a very much less cost than the actual cost to the Government.

Mr. ASHURST. That is what I charged.

Mr. KING. And is not that a fact?

Mr. McKELLAR. Do they deny the Senator's statement?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Arizona that I think evidence which has been adduced before various committees and presented to the Senate shows that the $70,000,000 deficit a few years ago in the Post Office Department resulted from the Government carrying through the mails the large publications containing pages of advertisements, which resulted in great profit to the publisher but great loss to the Government?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am not retracting what I said, but I do say I am now seeking to give to the person or the publication, against which I inveighed, an opportunity to have the contrary views placed into the RECORD.

Mr. CARAWAY. I thought perhaps the Senator was going to have the communication contributed to the column which is devoted to humorous sketches.

Mr. ASHURST. No; I am in perfect good faith in the matter. It is my philosophy of life that the other side to a controversy should have an opportunity to make its statement.

Mr. CARAWAY. As I understand, the Senator is of the same opinion as before, but merely wishes that everyone shall have his day in court?

Mr. ASHURST. That is my view of life.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator puts the letter in the RECORD, then there will appear only one side of the controversy. We have not heard his side, and how is the public going to know what is his side and that what he so frankly says is true?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I could resurrect the speech which I delivered, in which I made the reference to the Saturday Evening Post. I will tell the Senate how the matter arose. In January, 1924, the furious drive was on for the Mellon plan of taxation, and I made the observation that Mr. Ford, in October, had in a most vicious way opposed Secretary Weeks and was opposed to Mr. Coolidge, but that later Mr. Coolidge sent a telegram to Mr. Ford saying, "Be patient and everything will come out to your satisfaction." I was inveighing against Mr. Ford and inveighing against Mr. Mellon for their furious drive in behalf of the Mellon plan, which would give Mr. Mellon a reduction annually of over half a million dollars in his taxes, and would give Mr. Ford a reduction annually of over a million dollars in his taxes. Then, I said this drive was supported in an editorial in the Saturday Evening Post, entitled "Cut yourself a piece of cake." I then said that the Saturday Evening Post each week "cut itself a piece of cake," the frosting of which was put on by the Government, and that the Saturday Evening Post licked its chops as it swallowed the cake; that the cake consisted of the fact that each time it sent its publication through the mails it did not pay to the Government anywhere near the amount of money which the Government had to expend in transporting the publication. That was the charge.

Now, Mr. P. S. Collins, the general business manager of the Curtis Publishing Co., wrote me that I was in error, and he quotes some correspondence with other parties. It is a perfectly proper letter, which he had a right to send to me. He did not offend me; but I think, after having made that charge, that his letter ought to have a place in the RECORD, and I think every man will agree with me.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, he knows it all has to do with the Mellon plan and that the Literary Digest is conducting a poll to get everybody to vote for the Mellon plan.

Mr. NEELY. And to vote against the bonus.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course against the bonus; they are twins, as the Senator knows. I happen to have in my hand a postal card sent to an attorney in my State by the Literary Digest, which constitutes the third invitation sent to him to vote. He had filled in two, and then they came back and wanted a third. I was just curious to know how many times anybody was entitled to vote on this Mellon plan. If one is for it, I presume he can stuff any ballot box on earth, and it will be within the law.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have recently examined the returns of the balloting conducted by the Literary Digest, and why the result is not unanimous I can not understand. According to the way the Mellon plan and the referendum are stated by the Literary Digest, I am unable to ascertain how any citizen could vote otherwise than in favor of the Mellon plan. My astonishment is great that there should be any votes upon the other side, in view of the way the Mellon plan is there stated. The Literary Digest has a right to conduct a referendum, but when the Literary Digest pretends to ask for a referendum it ought at least to be fair enough to set forth properly the subjects that are referred to a vote. I have endeavored to secure permission to print the letter of Mr. Collins because I did not want to be so grossly unfair as the Literary Digest has been. I want the question as stated by me to be fairly stated, and I want the opposition to have equal opportunity to state its views. That is why I rose, because if I were to withhold the statement I would be as guilty as the Literary Digest has been guilty of unfairly stating a question.

Mr. CARAWAY. I think the Senator is too hard on himself, but let that go.

Mr. President, while this matter is pending let me say that there appeared in the morning newspapers a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon, addressed to me, answering questions touching his activity and the activities of his friends and business associates in connection with the propaganda that is being organized against the soldiers' bonus.

There is nothing at all improper with reference to the publication of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, and I have no objection to it appearing, but inasmuch as it is now in print I have some documents which I wish to submit along with the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury. I rather imagine that after he has read them, if he ever does me the honor to do so, he will discover that he was mistaken in some of the answers that he made in his letter bearing date of the 4th instant. I do not think intentionally the Secretary would misrepresent any fact within his knowledge; personally, I have for him a very high regard; but I do want to publish his letter and the letters and affidavits dealing with the question about which he undertakes to set out the activities of himself and his business associates in this matter.

Therefore, Mr. President, as a part of my remarks, if there is no objection, I wish to publish the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury and either the original letters or photostatic copies of letters and an affidavit of Mr. Allen, who was the original organizer of the Ex-service Men's Antibonus League. They show that instead of being supported by the activities of ex-service men now, it is supported by the activities of men of large means, who hope that by contributing a small sum to a propaganda they may escape taxes to pay an adjusted compensation to ex-service men. I think I can so arrange these papers that they will make a story that will need no comment. Therefore I ask unanimous consent to publish, along with my remarks, the letters and affidavits mentioned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, March 4, 1924.

DEAR SENATOR CARAWAY: I have received your letter of the 1st instant, in which you ask me questions with reference to certain charges that have been made by the commander of the American Legion, Mr. Quin, and I comply with your request, as follows:

"First. Is it true that H. B. Rust, president of Koppers Co., and George S. Davison, official of the Gulf Oil Co., contributed substantial sums to the Anti-Bonus League?"

Answer. I have no knowledge as to whether or not Mr. Rust or Mr. Davison contributed any sums to the Anti-Bonus League.

"Second. Would you mind telling if you are interested in the corporations mentioned, or have you business relations with the two gentlemen mentioned?"

Answer. I am interested as a stockholder in each of the corporations mentioned in question 1, but I have no official connection with either of these companies nor business relations with the two gentlemen excepting as a stockholder in the companies in which they are officers.

"Third. It is charged that employees of the Chicago Bi-Product Coke Co., a subsidiary of the Koppers Co., were commanded or requested to write letters to the Members of Congress opposing adjusted compensation. Do you know whether this is true or not, or have you taken any steps to ascertain whether it be true?"

Answer. I have no information whatever as to whether or not employees of the Chicago Bi-Product Coke Co. were commanded or requested to write letters to Members of Congress opposing adjusted compensation and have taken no steps to ascertain whether that is true.

"Fourth. These charges have been made by the commander of the American Legion, Mr. Quinn. They are also supported by an affidavit by Mr. Allen, and they purport to show that you had advised and counseled, and possibly contributed, either through yourself or your business associates or companies in which you are interested, to this activity. Will you tell me whether this is true?"

Answer. Your letter and that which I have read in the daily papers is the only knowledge I have had of charges having been made by Mr. Quinn of the American Legion with respect to the subject matter in questions 1, 2, and 3. I do not know who Mr. Allen is, to whom you refer, nor what his source of information may be upon which he relies for making the affidavit mentioned. I have not been consulted with, nor contributed, personally, to this activity. I have no knowledge of what my former business associates or their companies may have done in the matter.

"Fifth. Particularly I would like to know if you authorized or cooperated with Mr. Davison in raising a fund, the ultimate amount of which was said to be, or was to have been, $20,000? The purpose of said fund was that it was to be used in propaganda against the soldiers' adjusted compensation measure."

Answer. I have never authorized nor cooperated with Mr. Davison or any other person in raising any fund whatever that had for its purpose any propaganda against the soldiers' adjusted compensation measure, or any other measure that has been before the Congress during the time I have occupied my present office.

I believe the foregoing answers cover the information which you have requested. No doubt Mr. Davison and Mr. Rust, if called upon, will respond promptly to any inquiries on the subject which you may desire to make of them.

Sincerely yours,

A. W. MELLON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Capt. KNOWLTON DURHAM,
President Ex-Service Men's Anti-Bonus League,
19 West Forty-fourth Street, New York, N. Y.

MY DEAR CAPTAIN DURHAM: Your letter of November 9 was found here on my return to Pittsburgh yesterday.

I heartily approve of what you are doing in this matter, and my first impulse was to send you my personal check, but I took the matter up in a quiet way and found that my friend, Mr. George Davison, was raising some funds for you, and he wanted me to make my contribution through him. I saw Mr. Davison again last night and told him I felt time was the essence of this plan and that he should hurry his contributions to you. I am going to see him again on Monday and hope to make through him a substantial contribution to your cause, in which, as I have said above, I am most thoroughly in sympathy.

I think you are doing a great work for the country and for all the world. I agree with your position on the matter 100 per cent.

Very truly yours,

H. B. RUST.

AMERICAN LEGION LEGISLATIVE HEADQUARTERS,

COMRADES: I am inclosing two form letters which this corporation is distributing to its employees in wholesale quantities. The fact that the antiadjusted-compensation faction has stooped to this is sufficient proof of the hole in which they find themselves. You will note that in the inclosed letter, in which instructions are given as to exactly what is to be written, the employees are commanded to tell their representatives in Congress certain things, and it will require no exhausting stretch of the imagination to visualize what would happen to the employee (and his family) who disregarded the command. I have personally seen scores of the letters which are the fruits of this campaign, as they are collected and brought to the main office where stenographers are worked far into the night typewriting them.

I hope these will reach our legislative committee in Washington where they may be used to advantage. Inasmuch as I am dependent upon my salary from this corporation while supporting my wife and myself and educating myself, you will readily understand that it will not be to my advantage to have my connection with this matter become public. I have no doubt that other corporations throughout the country are stooping to like methods.

Respectfully,

FLOYD F. APPELL,
Colon-Couch Post No. 831, Clayton, N. Y.

CHICAGO, ILL., December 11, 1923.

Hon. ——— ———,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I have been thinking about the tax-reduction matter as proposed by Secretary Mellon, and want to urge that you support this measure. It would seem evident that everyone is anxious for anything that spells tax reduction.

I would also urge that you heartily support any effort leading to better care and relief of all crippled or afflicted ex-service men. There is no question that everything should be done to assist and care for such men, and that we abandon, once and for all, the idea of a bonus or general distribution of money among our soldiers. Such a tax burden would be but a temporary expedient and react to their disadvantage, due to the hardship such a tax would place upon the business of the country. We can not do too much for those who have been afflicted, but a tax for the purpose of giving a few hundred dollars to able-bodied men would do them no ultimate good as compared with the disadvantages they would experience.

Yours very truly,

——— ———.

CHICAGO, ILL., December 11, 1923.

Hon. ——— ———,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN:

1. Tell your Congressman that you are in favor of his supporting the passage of bill to effect tax reduction as proposed by Secretary Mellon.

2. Tell your Congressman that you are in favor of his supporting every activity that looks to better care and relief of crippled ex-service men, but that you do not approve of a bonus which would tax the country at large and bring on a reaction that would do the ex-service men more harm than good.

3. Tell him that it is self-evident that a reduction in taxes will stimulate business and increase employment, and that such a condition would benefit ex-soldiers more than the payment of a small cash bonus.

4. If you are an ex-service man simply state that you served in the war without stating your rank.

——— ———.

AFFIDAVIT.

I, Edward L. Allen, a resident of New York City, N. Y., do hereby declare under oath that, to the best of my knowledge and belief, the following statements are true and correct.

I founded the Ex-Service Men's Antibonus League (Inc.) in the deep belief that at least a large minority of the former service men shared with me the ideals upon which it was built and would welcome such an opportunity to express, through organization, their opposition to the principle of adjusted compensation. Though time has proven that belief to be somewhat in error, it has not altered or changed my personal convictions in the matter. It has, however, implanted an even deeper conviction in my mind that the payment of a bonus to World War veterans is in no way related to any other problem or project of the Government. It is either right or wrong in itself.

For 14 months I was the directing executive of the league. During that time the annual membership dues were $1. During my tenure of office approximately 250,000 pieces of literature inviting membership were distributed throughout the Nation. The number of members enrolled in that time was a few over 1,400. Of this number, some four hundred and odd members paid their $1 membership from their own pockets, dues for the remainder being either paid by others than those enrolled or carried on the books as memberships due. Eighty per cent of the total were former officers.

Last November the tendencies of the executive committee to divert the league from its foundation principles became so pronounced, despite my most earnest opposition, that I felt called upon to resign.

The tendencies referred to became manifest immediately following the advent into the league of one Bronson Batchelor, a publicity man and propagandist, who was brought into the league through the influence and at the suggestion of its president, Knowlton Durham. The membership fee was abolished, a statement issued that the league would disband upon defeat of the bonus, and other steps were taken involving activities far removed from the securing of members an honest, open, opposition to the bonus on principle, and the advocacy of adequate legislation for the disabled, the charter purposes of the league.

Shortly after said Batchelor was employed he told me that he had secured an appointment to see Andrew W. Mellon, through his intimate acquaintance with John T. Adams, chairman of the Republican National Committee. A few days later he advised me that he had gone to Washington and kept his appointment with Mr. Mellon. Where they met he did not say. At the same time he stated to me that Mr. Mellon had given his complete approval to certain plans (not explained to me) that he had submitted to Mr. Mellon. He proposed a trip to the Middle West to secure funds, and intimated that leads to men in that section who would subscribe funds to carry out the plans had been furnished him by Mr. Mellon. Owing to this action and other indications of his too great interest in tax-reduction matters, I discharged said Batchelor shortly after this incident. I understand, however, that he was reemployed by the executive committee of the league immediately after my resignation, at a salary of $250 per week.

Maj. Richard S. Buck, a member of the executive committee of the league, and a consulting engineer for the Brooklyn Cities Railway, stated to me that he was intimately acquainted with Mr. George W. Davison, of Pittsburgh, Pa., whom, Major Buck also stated, was very close to the Mellon interest of the same city.

Buck told me that Davison had talked to him while on a trip to New York and that he would undertake to raise money for the league in Pittsburgh. On two different occasions Buck told me that he had talked to Davison on the telephone regarding the raising of money; the last phone conversation being held one Saturday afternoon immediately after Mr. Davison had been in conference with Mr. Andrew W. Mellon in Washington. Major Buck told me that upon that occasion Mr. Davison told him that he had up to that time raised $7,500 for the league and that the balance of $20,000 would be forthcoming shortly after his return to Pittsburgh. None of this was turned into the league while I was in office.

There was a like fund of $20,000 to be raised for the league by a joint committee of the New York Chamber of Commerce and the New York Merchants' Association to which I have evidence that contributions were made. None of this fund reached the treasury of the league while I was in office.

I sincerely believe that both these funds were duly raised as planned and wholly or partly spent with no entries being made on the books of the league to show from where it came or how it was spent. I am of the opinion that the officials of the league will deny any knowledge of these funds. The proper authority of lawful jurisdiction could quickly determine the matter. I am confident that not only is the man Batchelor being paid from this joint fund but that part of it was and is being used to promote and finance the operations of the recently formed National Citizens' Tax Reduction Committee, headed by Maj. Gen. John F. O'Ryan. I believe that Benjamin F. Castle, of the Irving Bank-Columbia Trust Co., and treasurer of the league, is the man who is holding and disbursing this secret fund. Miss M. E. Durning, formerly secretary to Colonel Castle, is assistant treasurer of the league and handles the books of the league.

The last meeting of the executive committee of the league prior to my resignation was held, at the call of the president, in board of directors' room of the Irving Bank-Columbia Trust Co. The last meeting of the national administrative board of the league was also held at the Irving Bank-Columbia Trust Co.

The annual meeting of league members was called to meet in Washington, D. C., January 31, 1924. Upon that date a delegation, supposedly representing the league, called upon President Coolidge. The delegation consisted of some 25 men. Eighteen of them were paid employees of the league.

In closing this affidavit I state that I am still opposed to the principle of a bonus to able-bodied ex-service men, but I just as frankly state that I am glad to offer the foregoing in the hope that it may be used in effective protest against what I believe to be unfair, unjust, and un-American methods of seeking to mislead the public mind and Congress.

EDWARD L. ALLEN.

Subscribed and sworn to in the city of Washington, D. C., this 21st day of February, 1924.

Mr. SAMUEL T. MOORE,
732 Woodward Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MOORE: I find that I made a slight error in the affidavit I gave you, and will ask that you correct your copy as noted.

I stated that some 25 members were present at the annual meeting of the league on the day the delegation called on the President. As a matter of fact, there were only 21 present, but only 11 of them were paid employees. Following is a classification of those present:

Three officers of the league, 3 members of national administrative board, 11 paid employees of league, and 4 members of league.

I have photo of all present and evidence of a member of the board who was present to corroborate above.

Sincerely, EDWARD L. ALLEN.

602 WEST ONE HUNDRED AND NINETIETH STREET,
New York City, February 14, 1924.

Memorandum to the members of the national administrative board and the national advisory council of the Ex-Service Men's Antibonus League.

GENTLEMEN: When I recently resigned from both the league and its national administrative board I quite naturally presumed your president would comply with my request to forward each of you a copy of the letter containing my reasons for so doing.

As I am informed this was not done, and as it is due me that you be fully informed in the matter, I take advantage of the publication in full of my letter by the inclosed magazine to place it before you.

A point not touched upon in my letter of resignation, for the reason that I had no wish to bring in personalities, but which may nevertheless be of some interest to you, is that twice after my resignation as executive director I called upon your president in person and offered a protest at the trend of league management. Upon my last call, about January 20, I told him that if he and the one or two others who were running things would abandon the course they were following I would gladly get in harness again and go out on the road organizing units in States not then having any, to the very necessary end that we have at least one organized voice in each State of the Union. I volunteered to do this work for my expenses, but my offer was refused.

Regarding the names of contributors to the league, whose names appear in the same article with my letter, I wish to state that I did not supply that information. The editor of the paper had been supplied the names published by a former employee of the league, but when asked if the names and the amount quoted were correct, I, of course, admitted they were and gave permission to be quoted to that effect.

In conclusion I wish particularly to bring to your attention a point worthy, I believe, your careful thought. There were two funds raised for the work of the league, which, I am informed, have never been turned into the treasury of the league—one by Pittsburgh interests and one by joint committees of the Merchants' Association and New York Chamber of Commerce. I have conclusive evidence that contributions were made to these funds in the belief by the contributors that they were contributing to the league. The point for consideration is that these funds could not have been diverted to tax-reduction propaganda or for any other purpose whatsoever without the full knowledge, consent, and willingness of a majority of your executive committee of whom your president and treasurer are members.

The matter is thus called to your attention, and if you fail to take the necessary action, the result of your inaction, whatever it may be, will rest on your shoulders alone.

Very truly yours, EDWARD L. ALLEN.

THE BROOKLYN CITY RAILROAD CO.,
Brooklyn, N. Y., October 2, 1923.

Mr. GEORGE S. DAVISON,
Frick Annex Building, Pittsburgh, Pa.

DEAR MR. DAVISON: This will introduce to you Mr. Edward L. Allen, executive director of the Ex-Service Men's Anti-Bonus League, and I earnestly hope that with such counsel and assistance as you can secure for him he may inaugurate a strong and effective branch of the league in Pittsburgh.

My conviction is that unless we can make the vast silent army of antibonus veterans vocal, and that quickly, the threatened bonus bill will be passed even over the President's veto. The plan Mr. Allen will present, I believe, is the only one on which we can pin any hope of blocking this.

Very sincerely yours,

R. S. BUCK.

P. S.: If you deem it advisable, I would like you to introduce Mr. Allen to Mr. R. B. Mellon, and get the personal views of the latter as an out of New York banker on this whole proposition of the antibonus fight, viewed through the light of information Mr. Allen will give.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in connection with the publication of the letter offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], I call attention to one paragraph of it:

The fact is, however, that because of the present excessive postal rates, over 70 per cent of the entire edition of the Saturday Evening Post does not now enter the United States mails at all, and further, that even of the remaining 30 per cent about one-half is not transported from Philadelphia by mail, but is handled by the Government only for local delivery.

That is just another way of saying that when it pays the Saturday Evening Post to send its papers by freight it does so, and when it pays it to send them by mail it likewise does so.

The truth is, Mr. President, as all of those of us know who have served on the Post Offices and Post Roads Committee of the Senate for a number of years, that the transportation of second-class mail matter, even at present rates, costs the Government an enormous sum of money. It takes all the profit made on first-class mail matter to overcome the deficit that is even now, with the increased rates, incurred on second-class matter.

There are still inequalities in second-class railway mail rates that probably ought to be straightened out, but those inequalities do not affect the Saturday Evening Post or periodicals of that kind that are now shipped through the mails in carload lots, and even trainload lots, I am informed.

If we had permitted the rates to continue that existed prior to 1919, when they were raised, the deficit resulting from carrying periodicals like the Saturday Evening Post and others of like character that were then carried as second-class mail matter would have amounted each year to over $100,000,000. It amounted at that time to something like eighty-nine or ninety million dollars.

The statement here that there are excessive rates on second-class mail matter, such as the Saturday Evening Post, is wholly in error, and is indefensible.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have hastily examined the appropriation bill now before us. It carries hundreds of millions of dollars. Not being a member of the Appropriations Committee, and having been constantly engaged in the work of other committees upon which I am serving, I have not had the opportunity to examine the measure before us or the hearings before the House and the Senate committees. The bill, however, seems to contain items that ought to be expunged and appropriations which ought to be materially reduced. In my opinion it does not redeem the pledges of the party in power in behalf of economy and efficient administration. I have been amazed since coming to the Senate at the apparent indifference not only of the public but of Congress to the mounting appropriations and to the enormous burdens which are being placed upon the people. There is much talk of the Mellon tax bill, and appeals are made to support it upon the theory that it will diminish taxes. It is refreshing to find any evidence in favor of diminishing the burdens of taxation. Most appeals addressed to Congress are in favor of appropriations. Apparently the petitioners for increased appropriations see no relation between appropriations and taxation. Many who appeal for contributions from the Federal Treasury seem oblivious to the sources from which such appropriations come. There are measures pending before Congress which call for at least $6,000,000,000 in appropriations for the next fiscal year. Where this stupendous sum is to be obtained does not excite that interest which its importance demands.

Even the Senate seems indifferent to appropriation bills. Seldom are there more than a dozen Senators present when appropriation bills are being considered though they may carry hundreds of millions of dollars. The bill under consideration seeks to take $700,000,000 out of the Treasury, and yet there is but a handful of Senators in the Chamber and not more than half a dozen who evince any interest in the bill.

We are called upon to appropriate in this bill more than the value of all the property of the State from which the chairman of the committee comes. Indeed, as I recall the assessed valuation of the entire property of a number of Western States, this measure asks for more than the combined value of all the property, real and personal, to be found within two, if not more, of such States. And this is but one of the many appropriation bills which will be enacted into law before Congress adjourns.

Mr. President, no question is of more importance than that of taxation. Thrones have been lost and nations destroyed because of oppressive taxes and exactions wrung from an oppressed people. Prosperity and oppressive taxation do not go hand in hand. Public economists and statesmen interested in the public weal seek to diminish the burdens of taxation and to free commerce and industry from a paralyzing bureaucracy and a deadening system of taxation. The vigor and vitality of a State are determined in a large measure by the freedom of the people from governmental exactions. The early days of this Republic found the taxes to be exceedingly light.

The savings of the people were thus increased and made available for investment and industrial development. Senators know well what history teaches, and how important it is that industry be released from the chains and bondage of oppressive taxes. Light governmental burdens result in individual and national prosperity. Federal taxation assumes a more oppressive and despotic character as it is imposed for illegitimate purposes or to execute policies which are in derogation of the rights of a State and violative of the principles of local self-government.

A careful examination of the budgets of the Federal Government for a number of years past will demonstrate that the increasing burdens of taxation have been brought about largely as the result of the creation of new Federal agencies, many of which were wholly unnecessary, and some of which find no justification for their existence, either in the Constitution, or in the public welfare, or under any system of political morality. These unnecessary Federal creations multiply the Federal personnel and bring a long train of abuses which are always the concomitant of bureaucracy and of governmental usurpation.

In every age the struggle has been to repress the centralizing manifestations and to prevent that consolidation of authority which destroys personal liberty and impairs the capacity of the people for local self-government.

Republics manifest the same dangerous symptoms and exemplify the same maladies which are found in monarchical or despotic governments. Students of our Republic and of democratic governments have oftentimes marveled at the insidious growth of bureaucracy within such governments and the almost unobstructed movements which have diminished local independence and personal liberty, and transferred the authority and power of the people into the hands of autocratic power. It would seem as if the people, whose fathers fought for liberty and to be freed from tyrannous taxes and unwarranted exactions, did not prize their rich inheritance and desired to surrender dearly won liberties, and to return to conditions which led brave and heroic men to rebel.

Anyone familiar with our country must admit that the centralizing forces are very powerful in the United States and that a considerable part of the American people are supporting socialistic policies and the adoption of measures which in the end would reduce the States to shapeless and devitalized forms. Some writers contend that socialism and autocracy go hand in hand. Without discussing the political and philosophical questions that might suggest themselves, by reason of this view, it is sufficient to say that socialism restricts the activities of the individual, limits his independence, and augments the power of the Government, or the agencies which it sets up. It, therefore, contributes to a despotic rule and abridges the power and authority of local political organizations.

Socialism, whether of the moderate form or of the Marxian type, contemplates the transfer of all property to the Government, although euphemistically it is to be transferred to the people. There are demands made in our own country that the Federal Government take over many activities which are purely individual or private in character. The railroads and the ships and the mines and a multitude of other things are to be owned and operated by the Government. The Federal Government is to go into the States, take over their police powers, and through the Federal organization, bureaus, and other instrumentalities, and with an army of Federal employees, perform the duties and responsibilities which rest upon the people or the political subdivisions of the various States. And Congress is responding to many importunities and is creating Federal organizations and multiplying the number of Federal employees.

But, Mr. President, I did not rise to deliver an address, except to call attention briefly to one or two provisions of the bill and to invite attention to the appropriations; that is, the probable aggregate amount of appropriations that will be made by the present Congress. The Senator from Wyoming has just stated that this bill carries an amount to cover a deficit of approximately $40,000,000, which will result in the next fiscal year in the operation of the Post Office Department.

In other words, notwithstanding the hundreds of millions of dollars provided in the pending measure to meet expenses of the Post Office Department, it is necessary to add to the same $40,000,000 additional because the receipts from the Postal Service will be less by $40,000,000 than the cost of operation. Of course, wisdom would dictate that we either retrench and inaugurate reforms in the Postal Service or increase the rates in some branch of the service to cover the expenses. It is unfair to tax the people to meet a deficit created by the beneficiaries of the postal system. The department should be self-supporting and increased rates should be imposed upon second-class matter, and the parcel-post system should be modified so that this great deficit would not occur. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] have just informed us, as I interpret their remarks, that the deficit results, in part, if not wholly, from the abuse of the second-class mail privileges and the abuse of the parcel-post system. We know that in many States freight is hauled by the Government entailing enormous loss which the Treasury is compelled to meet. Coal, flour, lumber, and commodities of various kinds are transported as mail matter or as proper articles to be carried under the parcel-post provisions of the law. This is such a gross abuse of every principle of justice and of the spirit of the law, if not the letter, that Congress ought promptly to provide against the continuation of such an unfair and unjust practice.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I want to say to the Senator that so far as the Post Office Department is concerned, an investigation is being had, and it is almost completed—we hope to have a report by the 1st of July at the latest—showing the exact cost of the various classes of mail matter and the exact deficit. We have some experts in the department, who have long been in the department, who are ascertaining the exact figures. In other words, we can tell exactly what the deficit, if any, is on second-class matter such as magazines, newspapers, and other classes of second-class matter, parcels post of all kinds, first-class matter, and every other class of business carried by the Post Office Department.

I think the Senator is right when he says that we ought to know exactly what it costs. The Senator knows, of course, that the Post Office Department in a general way is self-sustaining. There will be a deficit this year of something like $30,000,000, which, in comparison with the whole amount of some $700,000,000, is not very great; but it is believed by the postal authorities that under present rates this deficit will be entirely wiped out by another year. I am rather inclined to think that that will be true. The business of the department is increasing enormously.

I have not the figures here before me, though I am sure the chairman of the committee has them, because we had them before the committee, showing the general rate of increase, which is about 10 per cent a year; perhaps 11 per cent, as I recall. I will get the exact figures and put them in the RECORD. So that hereafter I am quite sure that we will have more accurate information before us when these bills come up. I regret that we have not the exact figures now, so that we can tell the Senate and the country exactly what each class of matter costs, and exactly what profit is made on each class, or exactly what deficit there is on each class.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, more than 20 years ago, when I had the honor to represent my State in the House of Representatives, investigations of the character just referred to by the Senator were being made for the purpose of correcting the injustices which it was conceded existed; and my recollection is that there has been scarcely a session of Congress since then but that some investigation has been made for the purpose of ascertaining just exactly where the deficits were, in order that by remedial legislation the wrongs might be righted. Two years ago and four years ago and six years ago there was a great deal of talk about investigations by the Post Office Department in order that the evils just alluded to by the Senator might be corrected.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me again?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. That was the time when these investigations were begun, under the provisions of the law passed at that time, and they are just about completed. The officer in charge reported to the committee recently that he expected to have a complete return on the 1st of July, and it will be laid before the Senate immediately. That is after two years of search.

Mr. KING. That is quite reassuring; but, from my knowledge of the subject, I can promise the Senator now that that report will not be at all conclusive. It will not be definite. Further reports will be called for, further examinations will be required, and no relief will be granted to the taxpayer.

Mr. President, as I understand the Senator, his view is that there will be a deficit of but thirty-odd millions for the next fiscal year. He does not take into account that there are bills pending in Congress to increase the compensation of tens of thousands of employees in the Post Office Department, nor other measures which will greatly increase the operating expenses of the department; nor does he take into account the post offices which will be built or the important repairs which will be made; nor do these figures contemplate the appropriations which will be required for pensions and to meet the provisions of the compensation act. And as I understood his position, sufficient consideration is not given to the additional cost resulting from increased personnel of the service.

Mr. President, there are many factors which I feel sure will enter into the final arithmetical calculation which will materially increase the deficit.

The increase in taxes, both Federal and State, during the past few years has been most extraordinary. In 1895 the taxes of the Federal Government were but $492,000,000. In 1900 they amounted to $698,000,000; in 1910 they reached the billion-dollar mark; in 1916 they had risen to $1,114,000,000. I pause to remark that during the four years of Democratic administration before the war, notwithstanding the important legislation enacted and the far-reaching policies inaugurated by the Government, the increase in taxes and appropriations amounted to but $114,000,000.

In 1917, the year of the war, the appropriations, of course, were increased and totaled $1,628,000,000. In 1918 and 1919 the burden of the war had to be met. Loans were made to the Allies amounting to tens of billions of dollars. In 1920 the appropriations amounted to $7,000,000,000—I am not giving the fractional sums. In 1921, $4,070,000,000 were appropriated, and in 1922 the appropriations totaled $4,177,000,000. In 1923 they were approximately $4,000,000,000, and for the present fiscal year more than $3,760,000,000 were appropriated. The deficits for the year will amount to several hundred millions, so that the costs of the Federal Government for the present fiscal year will exceed the $4,000,000,000 mark.

Mr. President, these sums are so huge as to be incomprehensible to the average mind. It is important to learn who pay these taxes and the extent of the burden upon those who are actually engaged in productive activity. As I recall, the number of persons gainfully employed in the United States, as shown by the Census Bureau, is 41,000,000—11,000,000 are engaged in agriculture, over 12,000,000 in manufacturing, those engaged in clerical work are more than 3,000,000, those employed in transportation exceed 3,000,000, and in the professions more than 2,000,000, and those employed in our mining activities are approximately 1,000,000.

In a recent publication which I have just seen, by the National Industrial Conference Board, entitled Tax Burdens and Exemptions, there are some important figures which reveal the growing volume of taxation and the increasing burdens which are being placed upon the people both by the Federal Government and the States and their political subdivisions. In 1903 the Federal taxes amounted to but $521,000,000, the State taxes $155,000,000, and local taxes $706,000,000. In 1913 all taxes aggregated $2,194,000,000; in 1919, $8,034,000,000; in 1921, $8,363,000,000; and in 1922, $7,061,000,000. In 1903 the national income was but twenty and one-half billion dollars and the taxes amounted to 6 per cent of the entire national income.

The reports from 36 States, comprising 86.1 per cent of the entire population of the entire United States and more than 74 per cent of the total area of continental United States, shows that there was collected for the fiscal year ending in 1922 8.4 per cent of the national income, and an investigation of all local governments in 34 States embracing 66⅔ per cent of the total area of the United States and 75 per cent of the total population shows an increase of 4.1 per cent in taxes in 1922, as compared with 1921. The increase in taxes is much greater than the increase of population. The taxes imposed by Federal, State, and local governments, as I have indicated, were more than $7,000,000,000 in 1922 and but $2,194,000,000 in 1913. The per capita total taxes in 1922 amounted to $64.63, as compared with $22.78 in 1913 and $17.07 in 1903.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator from Utah is doing a splendid service in his work in cutting down all appropriations wherever it is necessary to cut them down. It is one of the crying evils in our Government that we are spending too much money, that we are extravagant. The Senator is right about that, and I am not here to gainsay what he has stated. But I want to say, in so far as the Post Office Department is concerned, that I have some figures here which I think will be encouraging to the Senator from Utah, and to all others who are interested in an economic administration of the Government.

The increases provided for in this bill, if allowed just as the Senate committee has reported them, will make the appropriation amount to about 2 per cent more than what was appropriated for 1924. While the increase in expenses is 2 per cent, the increase in business is 9.54 per cent.

I ask at this point that the figures to which I call attention be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[1] Decrease.

Mr. McKELLAR. On pages 88 and 89 of the hearings before the Senate Committee on Appropriations the Senator will find a statement showing the enormous volume of business in a large number of cities, and tremendous increases, increases in the postal receipts ranging from 22.8 per cent in the case of some little Long Island city down to about 7 per cent, an average of 9.54 per cent.

There is one thing that can be said about the Post Office Department of the United States: It is a very effective and, as I believe, a very honestly administered department of the Government. As I said before, it is essentially self-sustaining, in ordinary years. There was a deficit in 1924 because of the increase in salaries, as the Senator recalls. The Postmaster General, a former Member of this body—and a very competent and efficient officer of the Government he is—states that in his judgment there will be no deficit for the year after the one for which we are appropriating.

I call the Senator's attention to those figures for the purpose of encouraging him in his fight for cheaper and more effective and more efficient government.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator asked me a question as to the shortage in the earnings of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year 1923, and I stated that it probably would be nearly $40,000,000. I have before me a statement for the last year of which we have any report, and it shows the figures to be $37,995,307.16. In testifying before the committee the Postmaster General said:

> The estimated receipts for the first six months of the current fiscal year, based on reports from the 50 largest offices, indicate that the revenues for the present fiscal year will be about $568,630,000. The estimated expenditures for the fiscal year 1924 are $596,853,313.67, leaving an estimated deficit of $28,223,313.67.
> It is estimated that revenues for the fiscal year 1925 will show an increase over the current fiscal year of about 7.5 per cent. The committee is of the opinion that the service can be conducted efficiently during the next fiscal year with the amount appropriated in this bill. On this basis the estimated deficit for 1925 would be slightly over $2,000,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not accept those figures as at all accurate, nor do I believe that the department has the data on which to base a report which will give us any reasonable idea of the deficit that will result in the operation of the system.

Moreover, Mr. President, I invite the able Senator's attention to the fact that within the next year or two there will be large sums appropriated for additional buildings and equipment. Those items will have to be taken into account in determining the expenditures and, of course, will have to be considered in determining the deficits.

Then, as I have indicated, the number of employees will be greatly increased, and undoubtedly in many departments or branches of the service the salaries will be raised, so that I make bold to assert that the deficits in the Post Office Department will not decrease, but in all probability will materially increase; certainly this will be true unless important changes are made in the administration of the Post Office Department and some of the existing laws, particularly those relating to second-class mail matter and parcel post, are modified.

I assent to the compliment paid by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] to former Senator New, the present Postmaster General. I desire also to say that Mr. Burleson, who held the same position for eight years, was one of the most efficient public servants this Government ever had. I did not agree with some of his policies, but even his enemies were compelled to admit that he gave to the country a most economical administration of the department. During the war, when other departments were increasing their personnel and multiplying their expenditures, his department made no appeals for enlarged appropriations or for additional employees.

Mr. President, in view of the statements made by my friend from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], I feel constrained to further comment upon the efforts which have been made, and are still being made, to convert the Post Office Department into a common carrier for the transportation of freight and all kinds of commodities. Several years ago an effort was made to establish a truck transportation line to carry freight as a part of the postal system of the United States. The project would have cost the Government hundreds of millions of dollars. It would have called for the purchase of thousands of trucks and automobiles, the employment of tens of thousands of mechanics and chauffeurs, the erection of garages, repair shops, filling stations, and the many accommodations imperatively required in connection with a nation-wide truck system of transportation.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] has a proposition now before us which, while not so ambitious as the one just mentioned, contemplates, if I understand it, the establishment of a nation-wide transportation system, by which the products of the field and farm and ranch may be carried to market. And of course, if the Government shall transport agricultural products, there is no reason why it should not transport all other products. The execution of this plan would result in paralleling in some places railroad lines, steam and electric, and in duplicating transportation systems now in existence. There will be other plans suggested, to expand the functions of the Post Office Department, and to further introduce the Government into the broad and infinite activities of common carriers. I might add that such a perversion of the functions of our postal system would involve the erection of freight depots, hundreds of huge storage plants and buildings, freight yards, and necessitate the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars annually in furtherance of such plan.

Mr. President, the Post Office Department will not, in our day, be self-supporting. Indeed, we will be fortunate if the annual deficits are not larger.

But, Mr. President, I return to the question I was inviting attention to when interrupted by Senators. In considering the burdens of taxation, it is important to inquire into the incomes of the people. The annual income of all of the American people, or that part who receive more than $1,000 annually and who make income-tax returns, was, for the calendar year 1921, reported to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue at $24,000,000,000.

The income for 1917 and 1918 approximated this same aggregate, so that we may say that the normal annual personal income reported to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is $24,000,000,000 a year.

The total debt of the Federal Government is approximately $22,000,000,000. The national debt therefore equals nearly the entire annual income of the people of the United States whose annual incomes are $1,000 or more. I might say that the annual interest charge upon this debt exceeds $1,000,000,000.

But that is not the entire story, Mr. President, of our public debt. The total debt of the State governments for 1922 as reported by the Bureau of the Census was more than $10,250,000,000. That would bring the aggregate public debt of the United States and the States and their political subdivisions to more than $32,500,000,000. In the 10 years between 1912 and 1922 there was an increase in the State debts of more than 163 per cent, and in the Federal debt the increase was more than 670 per cent. Considering the annual interest on the public debt at 4½ per cent and the sinking fund, these charges would exceed $1,800,000,000. This situation should challenge the serious attention of Members of Congress whether at the other end of the Capitol or in the Senate.

Mr. President, the debts of the world to-day will probably never be discharged. The United States has not paid its Civil War debt. England still owes the obligations contracted in the Napoleonic wars. As the debts of various governments mature they will be refunded; perhaps some will be repudiated. Not in our lifetime will the United States discharge its public debt, nor will the States and municipalities of our country pay off their enormous indebtedness within this century. Unfortunately, the borrowing mania possesses States and their political subdivisions. It would be a blessing, the benefits of which would be lasting and incalculable, if there could be exorcised from the minds of the American people the spirit which is leading them into governmental extravagance and the constant augmentation of their public indebtedness.

We need to-day financial reformers. They are needed in the business affairs of the people. They are needed in the executive and legislative departments of the Federal Government as well as in the administration of the affairs of the States and their local subdivisions. There should be a demand, an insistent and peremptory demand, for lower taxes, and there should be a demand which can not be denied for drastic cuts in the expenditures by the Federal Government and by all of our States and their political subdivisions. The economist in public affairs is not looked upon with much favor; indeed, opposition to appropriations brings condemnation by executive departments and criticism from legislative associates and condemnation from the people. A wise friend of mine, who has studied deeply public questions and national and State legislation, stated that he could demonstrate that public officials who had favored and secured great appropri. tions had earned the greatest applause at the hands of the people and had been honored by longer service than those who had stood for economy and condemned profligate waste, enormous expenditures, and inefficiency in the executive departments of the Government.

I shall not attempt to controvert this statement; indeed, I am not sure that its accuracy can be challenged. I do know that those who obtained money from the Federal Treasury or from State depositories for their various localities are greeted effusively by their constituents and commended as faithful servants and statesmen of great renown.

Mr. President, the bigness of our country may have something to do with the magnitude of our demands for public appropriations. Moreover, notwithstanding the economic vicissitudes encountered since the war, the spending mania then developed is still in our blood and controls our conduct. An appropriation bill calling for $700,000,000 excites but a passing glance and provokes no criticism and but little interest. And yet as late as 1878 the entire appropriations of the Federal Government were only $291,000,000. It seems, Mr. President, that Congress as well as the legislatures of our States are being driven headlong by the importunities of the people or by an indefensible lack of consideration of official responsibility to fasten intolerable burdens and charges upon the American people. And the effects of this indifference is being manifested in increased costs of living, in high rents, high interest rates, higher service charges, and other things about which the public makes complaint, but the real and primary cause of which is unparalleled expansion of governmental extravagance and wasteful expenditures by which a wholly improper proportion of the earnings of the people are turned into nonproductive uses, which in no way stimulates industry or reproduces these immense values in commodities for the use of the people. This situation results in the consumption of public appropriations without adding a dollar to the wealth of the country. This condition would be bad enough if these extravagances were paid out of current taxes, but when they are fastened upon the public in the form of funded debts there is a constant contribution of interest without any return or use to the public.

As stated, in addition to these tremendous funded burdens upon the wealth and industry of the country, taxation has been pressed to the extreme limit and we are faced with the fact that, in 1922, the State governments and their municipal subdivisions took from the public in the form of taxes a total amount of $4,229,000,000, and for the same year the Federal Government took nearly four billions. The aggregate amount so wrung from the people amounted to nearly $70 per person in the country. Of course, the average per capita charge upon the average taxpayer is many times this sum. If his burden were distributed upon ten millions of people, the per capita charge would be $743. State taxes have been increased 115 per cent in the 10 years between 1912 and 1923, and in the same time Federal taxes have been increased 380 per cent.

Another significant fact is that these annual tax charges of more than seven billions of dollars amount to over 31 per cent of the annual personal income of $23,913,000,000 reported to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. I repeat, that reduction in taxation is imperative and there must be drastic cuts in the expenditures of the Government and the States in order that there may be reduction in taxation. We are face to face with this problem with every appropriation bill presented.

May I direct attention to the fact that the cost of administration of the executive departments of the Federal Government, including the District of Columbia, has risen from $447,000,000 in 1900 to $2,240,000,000 in 1923; an increase of 500 per cent in 23 years.

Mr. President, referring to the publication Tax Burdens and Exemptions, which I have mentioned, I find that the national income in 1922 was $58,500,000,000, compared with fifty billions in 1920. I recall that political economists have stated that the income of the people of the United States before the war was approximately $35,000,000,000; that is to say, the aggregate earnings of all the people of the United States amounted to $35,000,000,000. In the production of this sum, $30,000,000,000 were expended or consumed. That left but five billions as the net earnings or savings of all the people of the United States for the year. This was the fund from which investments were made. Indeed, it was the only fund available for industrial or other investments. By reason of the increase in the prices of commodities, the national earnings, based in dollars, are larger now than at the time referred to by these economists. However, the amount available for investments at the present time will not, in my opinion, exceed seven or eight billions of dollars annually. If the burdens of taxation continue, if extravagance shall run riot in our public administration and governmental activities, obviously the amount which will be available for investment will be diminished. It is apparent that our prosperity is measured by our savings, by the net earnings of the people.

From these savings our business blocks and residences are erected, our railroads constructed, our manufacturing plants built, and the wheels of industry made to revolve. In other words, these savings are capital. They are not hoarded in vaults but are sent out through the land as life-giving currents to stimulate industrial activity and to bring prosperity to the people.

Senators will recall the able speech of the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE] a few days ago when he remarked that his State welcomed the investment of capital. He said Maryland would be glad to see new plants, more railroads, and greater industrial activity. Mr. President, what we need is more capital for investment, more manufacturing plants, more houses, more railroads, greater production in the manufacturing centers of our country, and increasing business activities to furnish employment to a larger number of people. This will result in increasing the demand for the products of the farmers. Senators who are desirous of aiding the farmer must appreciate more and more that agriculturists must find an increasing home market for their products.

Our farmers for many years have produced greatly in excess of the demands of the American people. Foreign markets are needed for their surplus products. I do not desire to be partisan, but I can not refrain from stating that Republican legislation has greatly reduced and restricted the markets of the American farmers.

European nations have looked to the United States for cereals and livestock products as well as other agricultural products; have discovered that the party controlling in the Government to-day is hostile to the American farmer and has evinced a calloused indifference to the interests of the consuming public in the United States. It is perceived that tariff laws are written in behalf of the American manufacturer, and that the result of such a policy, if persisted in, will culminate in a practical destruction of the foreign markets formerly enjoyed by the agriculturists of the United States. Accordingly, the people of Europe are addressing themselves to the task of producing commodities which were formerly purchased in the United States. Within a few decades, if Republican policies shall triumph, the American farmer will be restricted almost entirely to the home market for his products. Russia, which is now staggering under the incubus of Bolshevism, will sooner or later emancipate herself, and the millions of peasants will produce for export enormous quantities of grain and flax and sugar and other agricultural products which will find a market in European countries which formerly obtained from the United States their needed food supplies.

But I shall not pursue this thought further. I repeat that we must increase our savings in order to have capital for the development of our enterprises. Increased taxation and a persistence in the extravagant and unnecessary appropriations which have characterized State and Federal Governments will subtract from the capital so vitally needed for industrial development.

Recurring to the publication above referred to, it is stated the taxes for 1922 represented 12½ per cent of the entire national income in 1922.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does that mean Federal taxes or both Federal and State, city, and county taxes?

Mr. KING. It means the entire taxes levied. In other words, we have been collecting for a number of years past from 12 to 17 per cent of the entire earnings of the people for tax purposes. It means that for every dollar earned by the people—and that does not mean net earnings—from 12 to 17 cents must be paid for taxes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. The startling figures which the Senator quotes of course include State, county, city, and school taxes?

Mr. KING. Yes; I have so stated.

Mr. WARREN. I shall not attempt to figure the exact proportion, but are not several times more taxes exacted by the States and their political subdivisions than are exacted by the Federal Government? The State governments make the laws assessing those taxes irrespective of any legislation which may be passed by Congress.

Mr. KING. Certainly, of course. Mr. President, I concede that a large percentage of these taxes is imposed by the States. However, the increase in taxes by the Federal Government between 1910 and 1922 was 672 per cent, and of the States and the political subdivisions of the States it was only 163 per cent.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. Has the Senator any information as to what the per capita tax is in the United States?

Mr. KING. The per capita tax for those who are engaged in gainful occupations amounts to more than $91 per annum; that is to say, against every man, woman, or child engaged in gainful occupation who earns a dollar there is levied a tax amounting annually to $91.

Mr. President, these staggering burdens of taxes inevitably will affect the industrial progress of our country. The Senator from Wyoming alluded to the fact that a part of the burdens of which I have been speaking are imposed by the States and their local governments. That is true, and they are subject to criticism because of the enormous expenditures which they are making. However, I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the responsibilities of the State government are very much greater than those of the Federal Government, and in the exercise of their duty a larger burden of taxation is legitimately called for. The Federal Government's field of activity is limited. Its duties are national and not local. Unfortunately, neither Congress nor the people always differentiate between the Federal and the State governments, nor do they preserve that clear line of demarcation which separates the two governments. We assume——

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. Let me finish the sentence. We assume that the Federal Government has plenary power over all matters, including the subject of taxation; that there are no limitations whatever upon the power of Congress to deal with any matter which is cognizable by a Government charged with the entire duty and responsibility of legislation upon national as well as local and domestic affairs. We are forgetting that the Federal Government's powers are limited; that the States are sovereign, or at least have sovereign powers, and that to preserve our dual form of government is necessary if the work of the fathers is to be preserved.

Mr. WARREN. My attention was diverted when the Senator gave the percentages which he has quoted. Will the Senator kindly repeat his statement with reference to them?

Mr. KING. I do not at the moment put my eye upon the percentages.

Mr. WARREN. Then I shall not now make the observation which I had intended to make.

Mr. KING. My recollection is, though, that this research organization shows that within the period to which I have referred——

Mr. WARREN. What was the period?

Mr. KING. My recollection is that between 1912 and 1922 the increase in taxation by the Federal Government was 672 per cent and by the States was 163 per cent.

Mr. WARREN. Very well. Considering the matter in that way makes the comparison a very unfair one, because in 1912 the Government was taxing nothing of consequence direct against the people; it provided its resources otherwise; but the States, counties, and other subdivisions were running along, if not with large, certainly with their ordinary expenses, so that in the percentage of increase which the Senator cites there is no reasonable relation whatever between the Federal Government's percentage of increase in taxation, starting with 1912 at a mere nothing and coming up to date, and the percentage of increase of regular annual supply State taxation. As a matter of fact, the Senator could go back to a period when practically not a cent of direct taxes was imposed by the Government.

Mr. KING. I do not quite agree with my friend's deductions. He admits that we will be called upon this year—and when I say this year I mean for the coming fiscal year—to provide for at least $4,000,000,000, and if bills now before Congress shall be enacted into law, as some of them may be, we will be called upon to provide perhaps for six or eight billion dollars.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Wyoming does not quite concede the accuracy of that statement. It is true, perhaps, that the total expenditures, including those which are reimbursable and which are returned to the Treasury, will amount to nearly $4,000,000,000, but the net expenditures will probably be a little less or a little more, one way or the other, than $3,000,000,000. That, however, does not affect the statement I made that percentages are not applicable in fairness to the difference between the taxes now collected by the Federal Government and the taxes collected by the Government 10 or 12 years ago.

Mr. KING. I do not agree with my distinguished friend.

Mr. WARREN. Nor does the Senator seem to take into consideration the great reductions in Federal taxation and expenditures which have been brought down from $9,000,000,000 and $7,000,000,000 until now, when they are only a little over $3,000,000,000. The Senator approves of that reduction, does he not?

Mr. KING. I approve any reduction in taxation, if it is only $1.

Mr. WARREN. And the Senator approves of the intention to reduce expenditures in the present fiscal year below what were allowed last year? We are on the downward grade in that respect.

Mr. KING. I am not sure that the Senator is right. I hope that he is; but I can tell the Senator better when the gavel falls at the close of this session and I can tell him with greater assurance when the gavel falls on the 4th of March of next year just what the expenditures for the next fiscal year will be. In my opinion the Senator, with all his ability and with all his patriotism and his efforts to bring about reforms in expenditures, will find himself grievously disappointed and will be coming to Congress with bills asking for millions and tens of millions of dollars to cover deficits.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. I merely wish to say that if this bill is an index, instead of being on the downward grade we are going up at a rapid rate.

Mr. KING. Yes; I have called attention to the fact that this bill carries more than $25,000,000 for these two agencies above the amount provided for the present fiscal year.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr FLETCHER In respect to the question of taxation, let me suggest, furthermore, that it is estimated that the Fordney-McCumber tariff law is costing the people of this country something like $4,000,000,000 annually, and perhaps $6,000,000,000, while there flow into the Treasury of the United States only about $450,000,000 from that source.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida has opened up an inviting, indeed an alluring field, into which, if time permitted, I should be glad to enter, namely, the effect of the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill upon the American people and the enormous increase in prices charged to the consumers for the commodities produced by the beneficiaries of the tariff. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. JOHNSON] yesterday, in a rather humorous but forceful way, called attention to the fact that the beneficiaries of the tariff found "pockets in which to put their hands," but he was disturbed because he could not "find a pocket in which the farmers could put their hands."

I am very glad to see the Senator from Minnesota and other Senators on the other side of the Chamber opening their eyes to the evils of the present tariff and to the heavy burdens which it places upon the consuming public and particularly the agriculturists of the United States. However, we will discuss the tariff upon some other occasion.

Mr. President, I was in error in stating a few moments ago that the increase in Federal taxes between 1912 and 1922 was 672 per cent, while the increase of the taxes levied by the States and their municipal subdivisions was but 163 per cent. I was confused by the Senator's questions. I stated that there had been an increase during the 10 years between 1912 and 1922 in the Federal debt of 672 per cent, while within the same period the State debts had increased but 163 per cent. The Federal appropriations for the year 1912 were $1,022,000,000, whereas in 1924 they were, as I have heretofore stated, $4,177,000,000. The State taxes in 1913 were $307,000,000 and the local taxes were $1,219,000,000. In 1922 the State taxes were $846,000,000 and the local taxes $331,000,000. The Federal taxes for 1922 were approximately $4,000,000,000. The Senator can easily figure the increase and the ratio of increase between the Federal Government and the State and local governments. However, the disparity would not be as great as would be indicated by the figures of 672 per cent for the Federal Government and 163 per cent for the State government.

But I repeat, Mr. President, the Federal Government's field of activity is restricted. It has nothing to do with schools and the police powers of the States and the important duties and responsibilities which rest upon the States and their municipal subdivisions. Comparisons are often made between the work of the Federal Government and the scope of governmental activity by the Parliament of Great Britain or by Germany or other governments which do not have a republican and a dual form of government. Our fathers wisely reserved to the States the exclusive power to deal with the broad field of local self-government and the entire subject of local and domestic affairs. I regret that there are some who would have the States shirk these responsibilities and transfer to the General Government the control of these questions. Mr. President, I am afraid of powerful governments. Their appetites are never satisfied. The more they gain, the more they desire. And it is a dangerous symptom in a republic such as ours when the people are willing to surrender the powers and prerogatives of the States and to crown the Federal Government with the glory which belongs to the States.

Mr. President, permit me to call attention briefly to the enormous increase in the number of Federal employees as well as those within the States. In 1913 there were 435,000 persons in the employ of the Federal Government. That did not include those in the Army, Navy, and the Marine Corps. During the war the number was greatly increased, and at the time of the armistice there were approximately 900,000 Federal employees.

In 1915 there were only 430,000 persons upon the Federal pay roll. In December, 1922, there were more than 542,000. This number, Mr. President, will be increased, because we are now multiplying the number of Federal agencies and increasing the personnel in many of the departments and bureaus. The number of active and inactive persons on the pay roll of all governments in this country number approximately 3,500,000, and the annual cost of maintenance amounts to about $4,000,000,000. The bill before us reveals enormous appropriations for employees in the Treasury Department alone. I have not had time to examine each item and to total the various items, but I venture the assertion that $75,000,000 are carried in this bill to meet the compensation of the employees of the various bureaus, agencies, and organizations that come under the jurisdiction of the Treasury Department. I observe here that there is a large increase in the personnel of the Coast Guard Service, and an increase in the appropriation for that branch of more than three millions of dollars. In my opinion, the appropriations for the Treasury Department—that is, for the administration of that department—are entirely too great. During the war the taxes collected were perhaps 100 per cent greater than those now collected. Obviously, the number of employees then required was greater than the present requirements. The cost of collecting the taxes is entirely too great. The appropriation for the field service is too large, and the amounts required to meet administrative expenses in the District of Columbia exceed by several millions of dollars any fair and just sum which should be required.

The able Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] has, by resolution, challenged attention to the inefficiency in the Treasury Department, and the corruption or the opportunity for corruption in the administration of the activities and responsibilities of the internal revenue branch of the Government; and he asks for an investigation to determine what steps shall be taken to purge that department and to secure efficiency and economy in the Treasury Department of the Government.

I am sure that that investigation, if the Senate shall vote in favor of it, will bring some revelations, if not startling, at least exceedingly interesting, and in my judgment they will furnish a basis for remedial legislation that will correct some of the transgressions of that department, and also improve the system of administration.

If we combine the officials of the Federal Government and those of the States and their political subdivisions, we find that there are approximately 4,000,000 persons on the pay roll of the National and the State Governments, at an annual cost of approximately $4,000,000,000. The publication to which I have referred contains this statement:

> When it is appreciated that 1 in every 12 persons 10 years of age or over who was gainfully employed in 1920 is on the public pay roll, the time should appear to be propitious for inquiring whether the community is receiving a full return for the outlays involved. The total amount disbursed annually on account of personal services in behalf of Federal, State, and local governments represents 6.5 per cent of the entire national income in 1922, and 46 per cent of the amount paid out in wages by all the manufacturing plants of the country the value of whose products exceeded $5,000 in 1921.

Of course, these observations will not change the course of the Senate. We will continue to vote these enormous appropriations, increase salaries, multiply offices, and augment the number of Federal agencies; and in 10 years from now, the way we are going, instead of $4,000,000,000 being paid out in wages to Federal employees and State employees, the total will be three or four times that amount.

It was said before the war that in Germany each wage earner carried a soldier on his back. It may soon be said of the United States that every wage earner bears a tax eater upon his back. Think of paying 6.5 per cent of the entire income for the salaries alone of the employees of the State and Federal Governments—6.5 per cent! Every man who pays a dollar in taxes knows that 6.5 per cent of it will be taken to pay the salaries of employees. Then follow the other expenses of the Government that have to be paid, so that we must add to that sum 8 or 10 per cent more, and he will pay 17 cents out of every dollar to meet the expenses of the Government. Yet we sit here complacently and permit these great appropriation bills to pass without comment, without criticism, without objection.

Mr. President, I wish we could recommit this bill with instructions that it be reduced $100,000,000. If this course were pursued with this and all other appropriation bills, the Appropriations Committee would cut down the expenditures of the Government for the coming year to a point at least $500,000,000 less than the aggregate amount of all of such bills. Of course, this will not be done, and when we adjourn in June and add up the appropriations made we will find that they exceed $4,000,000,000. I include in this amount direct and indirect appropriations. When we adjourn next March we will find other items added to the general list which will increase the total amount several hundred millions of dollars more.

This Congress will adjourn without having remedied evils of which we have cause to complain or having relieved the people of the burdens of taxation which press so heavily upon us.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does not the Senator really think that the Congress should get to work along the lines he suggests upon bills which authorize these appropriations, rather than to place the blame especially upon the Appropriations Committee, which is supposed to confine itself—and I think does confine itself pretty closely—to appropriations for those things that are authorized and required by legislative acts of the Congress?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is possible my remarks are susceptible of the construction, which I did not intend, that a criticism was leveled against the committee. I want here to pay tribute to the faithful services of the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] and the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I have often referred to the faithful labor of the Senator from Wyoming, and I am sure he does not misunderstand my position.

Of course, the remarks made by the Senator from Washington are pertinent and proper. We ought to relieve the committee of the responsibility of being compelled to report some of these appropriations by amending existing statutes, which require them to report given amounts, but what I had in mind was that if we recommit the bill with instructions to reduce the aggregate appropriation carried by the bill then the committee would be constrained, under that admonition, to comply with the direction; or at least they could report the bill back if they saw they could not do that under the existing statute, and then we would be brought face to face with the situation that we must continue these large appropriations or repeal or modify existing statutes which require the committee to report items of appropriation for various purposes.

But there are many items in the bill which are not called for by law. The committee has added over $3,000,000 to the appropriations made by the House for the Coast Guard. There is no law requiring that to be done. So with respect to other items in the bill, the discretion rests with the committee to determine the amount of the appropriation, and where the discretion exists, then, of course, the committee can exercise that discretion, and reduce the amount of the appropriation to such figures as their judgment determines.

Mr. LODGE obtained the floor.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to announce that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] is absent on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is recognized as entitled to the floor.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I was absent from the Senate for a few moments this morning—had gone to lunch, in fact—and on my return was told that my friend the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] had made a severe attack upon the President of the United States.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not want to interrupt the Senator's statement, but the Senator was present in the Chamber when I started out and interrogated me as to one or two matters. I do not know where the Senator went after the close of my remarks.

Mr. LODGE. I was not present when the Senator said what I am about to read. If it is necessary—and it appears to be necessary in all these occasions—I will produce witnesses to my absence from the Senate floor.

Mr. HARRISON. I say to the Senator that I do not doubt he was away, but I say he was here when I started out, as he interrogated me touching one matter while I was making the speech.

Mr. LODGE. I did; when the Senator first began I asked him a question.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator left before I got through?

Mr. LODGE. I had an engagement for luncheon, and I did not hear the rest of the Senator's speech.

I was told when I returned that the Senator from Mississippi had made an attack on the President of the United States. As I did not desire to do him any injustice, I sent for the reporter's notes, which I hold in my hand, and I will read simply what was said about the President.

The text taken was a message, which I believe was read this morning to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, or to one of the many investigating committees at any rate, I do not know which one. It is as follows:

EDWARD B. MCLEAN,
Palm Beach, Fla.:

Prescott is away. Advise Slemp, with whom I shall confer. Acknowledge.

(Signed) CALVIN COOLIDGE.

The Senator then continued:

I hope that some real explanation can be made by the President. With the country at fever heat as it is to-day, it is incumbent on the President to give a statement to remove the suspicion that attaches to that telegram, not that Bascom Slemp, the Secretary of the President, shall give out a statement, but that the President of the United States shall himself give all the facts touching it.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. DILL. I wanted to suggest to the Senator if it would not be interesting for the President to inform the country why he asked Mr. McLean to ask Mr. Slemp, the President's private secretary, instead of asking Mr. Slemp directly? What is the relationship, that Mr. McLean should be the go-between between the President and his own private secretary?

Mr. HARRISON. I can not understand it at all, and I sincerely hope, for the good of the country, and in the interest of restoring public confidence, that the President will feel that he should give out a statement under his own signature—and I pray that it will be plausible and that it will be thorough—in explanation of this whole transaction.

My God! I love my country better than any political party, and I hate to see men high in public places being smeared with such a scandal as this, because, my friend, when the people lose confidence in them they lose confidence in all public officials, and I am sincerely sorry that the President saw fit to communicate with Ned McLean in Florida, in the circumstances.

Mr. President, that is really a perfectly trivial telegram and a perfectly explicable one. Mr. Prescott is the chairman of the Republican committee of the District of Columbia, a very reputable man, as I have been informed, and a respected citizen of the District. The President had talked with him before in regard to District matters. He sent for him that evening to ask him about some District business. He was informed that Mr. Prescott was away.

The matter required prompt action, and the President wished to find out who was here who could take Mr. Prescott's place and give him the information he desired. He knew that Mr. Slemp would know. Mr. Slemp was away in Florida. The President did not know just where he was. He had been moving about, and the President did not have his address. It was in the evening—at half past 9, to be exact—and the President's other secretaries had gone. He did not know whether Mr. Slemp had left Florida or not. He knew that Mr. McLean would know where Mr. Slemp was, because Mr. Slemp had been with Mr. McLean in Florida. The President therefore telegraphed to Mr. McLean in order to reach Mr. Slemp for the purpose of getting from him the name of the man he desired to see in Washington. That is the whole story of the telegram.

Now, Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi refers to that as something smearing the President's reputation, because, I suppose, the telegram was addressed to Mr. McLean. Into that I see no need of going. I am not discussing Mr. McLean's character, but he was known to the President, and it was a very natural way of reaching Mr. Slemp if he were still in Florida. That is the whole thing.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator think it is at all strange that the President should know that Mr. McLean knew of Mr. Slemp's whereabouts all the time, even though the President might not know?

Mr. LODGE. I think it was his impression that Mr. McLean would know. He knew that Mr. Slemp had been with him.

Mr. HARRISON. Then the Senator thinks that the President knew when he left Washington and up to this time that Slemp would see McLean?

Mr. LODGE. He thought Mr. McLean would probably know where Slemp had been or where he was at the moment, if he was still in Florida. That is the whole basis of this attack upon the President.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to say a few words in regard to attacks of this character on a President of the United States. When I first came into the Senate I had been here but a short time when former Senator Tillman, of South Carolina, became a Member of the Senate. Almost as soon as he had done so he made a speech in the Senate confined practically to a ferocious attack on President Cleveland, who at the time was President. Being new to the Senate, I was very much surprised and I spoke to one or two Senators on the other side of the Chamber and said I thought that it ought to be stopped. It did not seem to me an attack of that kind on the President ought to be in order or could be in order. I was informed that there was no rule which protected the President of the United States, whoever he might be, from any attack that any Senator might see fit to make. It seemed to me then that the attack was very unfitting and ought never to have been made. I am happy to say that I do not recall anything resembling it in regard to any President, Democratic or Republican, from that day to this.

I think the President of the United States ought not to be attacked in this body. I think he is entitled to the full respect of the Senate and of all Senators in debate. He is the head of the Government. What the Senator from Mississippi said about respect for men in high office and its importance to the people of the country and as to not injuring or impairing their faith in the head of the Government is of very great moment. I have no sympathy, I will frankly confess, with the kind of debate to which the country has too often been treated in the last six weeks. I am thoroughly in favor of investigating wherever there is good reason to believe that wrong has been done or that corruption has existed. We have committees appointed for that purpose. But we have followed the plan here of discussing all the testimony and every newspaper rumor in addition, day after day, and with the character of that debate I am utterly out of sympathy. I think it is lowering to the character of the Senate to have its time taken hour after hour in villification of all sorts of men, whether guilty or innocent, and in exchanges of personal vituperation on the floor of the Senate among Senators themselves.

I think it is lowering the entire character of this body in the opinion of the people of the United States. Therefore I have no sympathy, in fact I have great dislike, for any such attack as has been made here to-day or any such imputations as have been cast upon the President of the United States at the present time. I wish, for my own part, to make this protest against it.

Not one thing has been discovered of any kind that reflects upon the President of the United States. I have spoken thus far as to office. A word now as to the man. I have known the present President of the United States for many years. I know him well both in private and in public life. His private life, as his public life, has been without spot or blemish. The present scandal of corruption or conduct in office has never come near him. He came into his present great office under the most trying circumstances which can beset a President when he goes into the White House, and that is when he comes there by the death of his predecessor. Mr. Coolidge found himself, of course, with a Cabinet that was not of his selection. He found himself with a number of questions, political questions and all sorts of questions, relating to this great Government which were not his policies—that is, they were not his personal policies—and with which he had had nothing to do officially. The recent charges that have been made and the investigations that have been held have surrounded him with all sorts of difficulties and trying conditions. I think he has borne himself honorably, ably, and well—very well. I do not see how any man could bear himself better. You may be assured that he will be as prompt to punish misdoing in the public service as any man who now listens to me in the Senate. He always has done it. He did it as Governor of Massachusetts. He will do it as President of the United States. He occupies what I think the greatest office in the world. He has done nothing to justify personal attack of any kind. He is entitled to all the respect that the Congress can give him. In all human probability he will be the candidate of one of the two great parties of the country for the Presidency. I believe he will be the next President. I think he should be lifted above the sort of discussion that has been running through the Senate here day after day, based on gatherings of the gutters, on the whispers of the corridors, on what is picked up from the newspapers, on every sort of calumny or falsehood or "rumor painted full of tongues," as Shakespeare has it. Many of those that have come here have been exposed; but still they come.

I so dislike this whole type of attack that I have no thought now or at any time of attacking any Democrat who happens to have been involved in any of these investigations. Such retorts are no pleasure to me and no answer to the situation nor to the attack made upon representatives of the Republican Party.

I have no desire to impugn the motives of any of my fellow Senators. But I think it is little short of an outrage to bring the President's name in here and treat him as he has been treated to-day in a place where he can not speak for himself, where he has to trust to the words of others, and where he is unable to make his own voice heard among those who assail him when the assault is made. He alone knows all the facts in relation to everything that concerns him. He is his own best champion and defender.

He has led, as I have already said, an unblemished life. There is not a thing that can be brought against him privately or publicly. His life has been simple. He is a man of very modest means. He has come here from a farm in Vermont and from a young man's practice of law in the State of Massachusetts. His whole life has been uniform and conforms to the principles which I know he holds. He believes and exemplifies the words of Wordsworth, "plain living and high thinking." I think I can assure the Senate, and I say it with as great confidence as I could say it of any man I have ever known, that "whatever record leap to light, he never shall be shamed." It is not that I fear attack on his account. I am not in the least afraid of any test ingenuity can suggest or malice devise, but I object strongly and I wish to make my objection here in the strongest way, to bringing the President of the United States into the kind of debates which have disfigured the Senate of the United States for the last six weeks. Therefore, I could not allow this beginning of an attack on the President to try to connect him with the wrongdoing of others and injure him in the public eye to pass without at least this word of notice and protest. The American people are honest and fair and they, too, will resent it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I am sincerely sorry that the distinguished leader of the Republican side did not remain in the Chamber this morning to hear my feeble remarks through. He would not style any speech I made this morning as an attack upon the President. If he had done me the kindness to read all of my speech from the stenographic notes, which of course he could not do——

Mr. LODGE. I have read all that relates to the President.

Mr. HARRISON. He would not have said that it was an attack.

Mr. LODGE. That is a question of definition.

Mr. HARRISON. Indeed, the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, even though he might be close to the President personally and politically, has no higher regard for that high station and position than I have. But I deprecate making charges at random about public officials, because I know it undermines the public confidence. No Senator here has held his tongue to a greater extent than I have during this whole controversy. I am sorry that the situation has developed as it has.

Mr. LODGE. I only want to say that I entirely admit what the Senator has just said, that he has not in this debate done that.

Mr. HARRISON. I have not and I will not. I do not believe in making charges that can not be substantiated, because I recognize that if our institutions and this Government are to be preserved they must be preserved by the confidence of the electorate in our high officials. The only time heretofore that I have said anything at length in the discussion was when I tried to answer the official organ of the Republican Party that sought to minimize this whole proposition and to defend the oil leases and to say in substance that nothing wrong had been done, and then, too, at the same time to defend the allegations made in that article that certain Democratic ex-Cabinet members had done wrong, and so on. I would not have spoken to-day had it not been for the fact that the same leaders of the party on yesterday had issued this circular charging the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] and the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] with a whole lot of things that are not true, attempting to undermine public confidence in the members who are seeking to make and will make the investigation.

I made no attack, I say, upon the President. Personally, I like the President. If we have got to have a Republican, I reckon he is about as good as could be found in the country; but, God knows, I hope we do not have to have him again. In my speech this morning I read what had happened in the committee yesterday, what every newspaper in the country had carried. I submitted the telegram which was sent by the President, with his name attached, to Ed McLean at Palm Beach. I could have gone further. I could have said, Mr. President, that the White House had been in constant touch with McLean; that the White House, through its officials, had notified McLean at Palm Beach of almost the exact moment that Slemp, the President's private secretary, had left the White House for Florida; that McLean was kept in touch with Slemp's movements, and so on. But the Senator from Massachusetts after going to the White House, not doing me the courtesy after charging me with making an attack, of listening to my speech and getting at first hand the information, comes back and tells the Senate and tells the country that McLean was in such close touch with the President of the United States that, even though the President might not know where his secretary was, McLean would at all times know; and because the President did not know where Slemp was, when he should have known, that he telegraphed to McLean asking him to advise him about the situation.

Mr. President, I am sorry that the President styles my feeble remarks this morning as an attack. I did not say anything derogatory of the President; but I do say that the telegrams which came from the committee this morning bring the President's name into the oil scandal; that they show that the President was in touch with McLean the very next day after McLean had confessed to the world that he was a liar. He had gone back on what he had previously said, that he had loaned $100,000 to Fall, and on the 11th day of February he said that he had not done so; that he only let him have two checks. Following that news, which was carried in the headlines of all the newspapers, the President sends to McLean the remarkable telegram under his own signature:

> Prescott is away; advise Slemp with whom I shall confer.

And then asked him to acknowledge it. Evidently the newspapers thought it was sufficient; and in my speech this morning, instead of attacking the President, I prayed to God Almighty that the President could give an explanation that would remove the suspicion that attached to him. I appealed to the President that he would not merely allow Slemp—and suspicion does attach to Slemp, for Slemp was down there in company with Fall, eating, I believe, for 12 days at the same table with Ned McLean and with Fall—to give out a statement. Slemp can not give out a statement here that removes the suspicion; but I asked the President of the United States himself to explain. I am glad that the Senator from Massachusetts has seen the President and he has made the statement he has. I hope the country will accept it as true, for I do not want my President, I care not to what party he may belong, to be enmeshed in this awful thing that almost topples down the very pillars upon which this Government rests.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, no President is big enough or tall enough to tower above the pale of legitimate discussion in the Senate of the United States or in the House of Representatives. It is even proper to discuss him, his acts, and his policies in the debating societies of this country. This is supposed to be a Government of the people, by the people, for the people. When did we reach the time when the acts of a President were not matters that could and should be freely discussed by the chosen representatives of the people?

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] seems to be begging the question, and we can infer from what he said that the present President is not capable of taking care of himself and that it is necessary for some Republican Senator to come to his rescue. I submit to the Senator from Massachusetts, to the Senate, to the President, and to the country that when a telegram is sent by a man of Mr. Ed McLean's newspaper staff, Mr. Bennett, saying:

> Saw principal. Delivered message. He says greatly appreciates, and sends regards to you and Mrs. McLean. There will be no rocking of boat and no resignations. He expects reactions from unwarranted political attacks. (Signed) Bennett—

I say again what I said on yesterday, that telegram ought to be explained. If the President can explain these telegrams, all right, and I shall be glad; but the people of the United States are entitled to have them explained.

Why should we go pussy-footing around the Senate when a telegram as plain as that suggests that the "principal," the head of the Government, I think, the Chief Executive of the Nation, says "there will be no rocking of boat." What does that mean? There will be no changes in the Cabinet because of these disclosures; there will be no resignations. It now develops from one of the telegrams that the President himself had sent to McLean, that it was in response to McLean's telegram to him congratulating him for saying that he would not let Denby resign. That, however, is not the first explanation that came from the White House. The first explanation was that it was acknowledging congratulations on the President's speech on Lincoln's birthday, when the fact is that the President had not then made his speech, and, indeed, had not left the Capital. That telegram was sent at 10 o'clock in the morning, I believe, and the President left at 11 o'clock for New York, I understand.

So, after looking into the matter a little further, they say we have discovered that it could not have been that, but it was in response to a telegram which the President had received from McLean congratulating him on his attitude regarding the Senate's action calling for Denby's resignation. That was the telegram which I read on yesterday assuring Ed McLean that there would be no resignations. McLean is pleased and wires back congratulating the President on the stand he has taken. I have heretofore adverted to the fact that Denby had stated he would not resign, and it appeared from an article in the Washington Times that the President had stated that he would not let him resign. Now comes this telegram from McLean's agent here, "I have seen the principal and he says there will be no resignations," and the telegram from McLean informs the President that his action in the matter of ignoring the Senate and refusing to let Denby resign meets with his hearty approval.

Who is McLean? Is he the head of the Republican Party now, its chief spokesman? The President wired him thanking him for his congratulations for not letting Denby resign on the day following McLean's repudiation of himself, when he practically said that he had told a falsehood to protect Fall. He had been connected with the Teapot Dome scandal and had been thoroughly discredited, and it was the day after all that came out in the newspapers that the President wired him and thanked him for his congratulations and reminded him how considerate he, McLean, had always been of him, the President.

Oh, Mr. President, I know that all this is exceedingly unpleasant to the able Senator from Massachusetts, the leader of the Republican Party in the Senate. I am thinking of what he would be doing and saying now if all this terrible crime and scandal had come when a Democrat was in the White House and Democrats were in control of Congress and members of the Cabinet were being knocked down and out like tenpins by an investigation that involved their honor and integrity while in office. We would not then hear the Senator from Massachusetts appealing to Senators not to discuss the President. He would criticize in caustic, bitter fashion everything connected with the Democratic administration. The way to prevent such discussions here is for the public officer to so conduct himself that he can not be thus assailed.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to my friend from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. When Woodrow Wilson was President of the United States and was being attacked here in the Senate, does the RECORD show that the Senator from Massachusetts came to his defense?

Mr. HEFLIN. On the contrary, he was leading the charge against him; he was right in the forefront of the fight. I wish to say in this connection that when that master mind was in the White House nobody had to get up here and sound forth an appealing note for him on the ground that he was not able to take care of himself and that he ought not to be assailed. When he took his pen in hand and his brilliant mind began to work he had his critics shivering in their shoes. But now Republican Senators back off in a corner and say, "Lay off; do not criticize our President." What are we going to do when telegrams like these are disclosed in the Capitol? The President ignored the request of the whole United States Senate, which passed a resolution saying, "Denby has done an act born in corruption and fraud; he has violated the law of the land; he has overturned a fixed policy of the Government, and we ask you to call upon him to resign." He answers, in effect, "Away with your Senate; I will show you how much respect

I have for your opinion, expressed in a resolution unanimously passed, and I will not only not ask Denby to resign—I will not permit him to resign." He said he would not let Denby resign. I read from the Washington Times here where he said it, and no Senator ever denied that he had said it. Then McLean wires him thanking him for saying it. If that does not connect them up I do not know what it takes to connect up transactions such as these.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator recall in 1919 the vicious, mean, determined attacks by Senator Lawrence Y. Sherman, of Illinois, charging President Wilson with almost every offense in the calendar, and did the Senator hear the senior Senator from Massachusetts or any other Senator on the Republican side get up and object to Senator Sherman's tirades against President Wilson?

Mr. HEFLIN. Not once. I was not in the Senate at that time, but I never heard of the Senator from Massachusetts or any other Republican coming to the rescue of President Wilson during that long and bitter tirade against him.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was in the Senate at that time, and I heard the meanest, the most vicious, and the most insulting attacks that ever I heard fall from mortal lips directed by Senator Sherman, of Illinois, against the then President of the United States, and not a word of rebuke was ever uttered by any Senator on the other side of the aisle.

Mr. HEFLIN. No, Mr. President; it makes a lot of difference whose ox is being gored. The shoe is on the other foot now. Here is a candidate for high office, seeking to succeed himself, and it is said that he is a past master in the art of politics—and he must be, for he has Ed McLean helping to manage his campaign, it seems, even while he is away in the sunny land of Florida. "Mr. McLean, you say there is nothing wrong in these connections? Mr. McLean, who is your private-wire operator?" "Mr. Smithers." "Who is the White House operator?" "The same Mr. Smithers." "Have you any connection with the Department of Justice, Mr. McLean?" "I am an agent of the Department of Justice." "And you have the Government's secret cipher code?" "Yes, sir." "And you are down in Florida?" "Yes, sir." "And when Mr. Coolidge's private secretary, Mr. Slemp, leaves for Florida one of the officials in the White House wires you that Mr. Slemp is on his way to Florida?" "Yes, sir." "And then the President wires you himself and asks you to see his secretary and find out who he, the President, shall advise with here regarding political appointments in the District of Columbia?"

What does that mean? Does it mean that Mr. Ed McLean controls the patronage in the District of Columbia, the Capital of the Nation? It would seem so. I think it is a proper inference that Mr. Ed McLean is the dispenser of Republican patronage in the District of Columbia. And who is he?

He is the man who admitted to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] that he had not told the truth about a transaction that involved the bribery of a Federal official, a Republican Cabinet officer, and the squandering of hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of the public domain. That is who he is. Who is he? He is the man that the President himself is sending a friendly telegram to the day after the newspapers had carried all this discrediting information about him. There is no denying the fact that the President was exceedingly cordial to him in that message.

I said some time ago in a speech here that we had trailed this thing up toward the White House; we had carried it as far as the back yard; and if they did not look out we would trail it into the White House. Now, let us see what the facts disclose. The telegraph operator for the White House and McLean's private-wire operator is one and the same man. The further you go the worse it gets. Next we find Mr. Slemp going to Florida. For what purpose? I do not think he told the committee for what purpose he went. I do not think that he told the committee what he knows. That is plain talk, too; but I think it is the plain truth. I think Slemp went on a mission; that he was sent to see McLean. Am I within the bounds of parliamentary debate when I draw that conclusion from what I know? The President says to McLean, "See Slemp." He does not wire Slemp to see McLean, but he wires to the big boss with the Government's secret cipher code in his pocket and armed with his commission as an agent in the Department of Justice, a dispenser of Republican patronage in the District of Columbia, and the President's warm friend, it seems—he wires and asks him to "See my secretary, and advise with whom I should confer back here."

No, Mr. President; we are simply intelligent human beings. And we are the trusted representatives of the greatest Government on the globe. Every one of us would be false to his oath and untrue to his country if he did not cry out against crookedness and corruption in public office. I think we ought to be encouraged in doing that. All of those who have clean hands in this Teapot Dome scandal will come out with heads erect and the light of conscious innocence upon their faces. Those who are connected with it, who excuse it or condone it in any way, ought to be branded and made to suffer for their part in it, I do not care who they are. It does not concern me whether they are United States Senators, Cabinet officers, or the President of the United States. Our business is to let the truth be known.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator there?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to my friend from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. Before we get away from that, the Senator from Massachusetts suggested that the President communicated with McLean in order to reach his secretary, Slemp. I believe the record will show that Slemp swore that when he left Washington he did not expect to see McLean, and that his meeting with him was purely accidental. I do not like to see Mr. Slemp left in such an embarrassing situation, and I hope somebody will explain his testimony.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is my recollection of it, and if that is not the testimony I wish some one would correct me here and now. Yes; he went down to Florida on a pleasure trip. I believe I recall also that he was just down resting for a few days looking after his health, and I suppose Ed McLean must have been his physician, and he was going to treat Bascom Slemp while he was down there.

It is strange that the President did not wire some hotel and ask: "Is my Secretary registered there?" But instead of doing that he wires to McLean, this now high muckamuck of the Republican Party, this dispenser of patronage, and mysterious financial friend of Fall. He is down there, and the President says to him in substance: "Get in touch with my Secretary," and keep in mind that a White House official wires McLean that Slemp is leaving for Florida. Why should the White House notify McLean that Slemp was on his way to Florida if he was just going down on a pleasure trip?

Mr. President, the more you analyze this thing and the more you turn the light in on this thing the worse it looks. Just one other thing and I shall have no more to say this afternoon. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] says we are criticizing the President here where he can not be heard. He can be heard through a message directed to the Senate. He can be heard in the same way in the other branch of Congress. He can be heard through the columns of the newspapers of the country. If they will not let him have the front page, if he will see Doheny, he, I am sure, will arrange it, because Doheny gets the front page to abuse and curse Democrats because they have interfered with him and his colossal and lucrative game.

Republican Senators should not moan and groan because we criticize the public acts of the Republican President. Let them stand up here and answer our arguments. If we are wrong, show the country wherein we are wrong. The country wants the truth and the whole truth.

I want to close with this statement. The truth ought to come out; it must come out. It makes no difference whether it involves Democrats or Republicans, United States Senators, Members of the House, Cabinet officers, or the President of the United States. This Government belongs to the people. Those of us who have been honored by them with commissions to come here and represent them ought to see to it that the truth, and the whole truth, comes out; and I close as I did a day or so ago, by saying turn on the light.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, if the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] will remain, I should like to say a word with respect to what he said here a few minutes ago.

I have no disposition to enter into this discussion touching the President of the United States, and I sympathize very keenly with the admonition of the Senator from Massachusetts against the extravagance in debate which sometimes, in the zeal that actuates Senators, characterizes the discussion of questions here. The Senator ought, however, to have observed more carefully his own advice and caution.

The Senator told us that the debate which has engaged the attention of the Senate for some six weeks past has been disgraceful in its character; that the ideals of the Senate have been lowered thereby; and that, altogether, it is to be viewed with regret and reprehension. That debate, Mr. President, as my recollection goes, was precipitated by the speech of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], worthy, I venture to say, of the best days and the best traditions of the United States Senate. I contributed to that debate myself at some length on three different occasions. The senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], who always speaks in conformity with the traditions of this body, addressed the Senate in the course of that debate. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] contributed a very valuable discussion upon the constitutional aspects of some of the questions that were presented. The Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] engaged the attention of the Senate for at least several hours in the course of that debate. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], whose power and eloquence as a Senator is surpassed by that of no Member of this body, discussed the matter at some length.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] discussed the matter here one day in a very Senator-like manner. Last, but by no means least, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] felt that it was an occasion worthy of his own eloquence and of his great talents, and contributed to that debate; and to-day we are told that this is a debate that has disgraced the Senate and lowered the traditions of this body.

Of course, Mr. President, everybody understands what is the trouble. The debate has been a serious matter. It has been, in general, a recital of revelations made by the Public Lands Committee that have shocked the country, and, of course, have distressed the Senator from Massachusetts, and now he seeks to utilize the just reverence that the people of the United States have for the office of the President of the United States, and the respect they have for the present incumbent, to minimize the effect of the revelations and the disclosures made in the debate in this body with reference thereto.

Mr. President, I think the debate has not been at all disgraceful. I think it has not been below the level of the debates that have taken place in this body at any time since I have been here; and I think the Senator from Massachusetts, on being better advised about the matter, will be pleased to withdraw at least that part of his remarks on the floor of the Senate this afternoon.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I am expressing no opinion as to the propriety or impropriety of a Senator attacking the President of the United States. I did not hear the speech of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to-day, and I do not know whether he attacked the President or not. However, I heard the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] refer to my predecessor, Senator Tillman, with reference to some remarks he made in regard to President Cleveland. Those two gentlemen were Democrats, and each in his day could take care of himself. Neither needed a guardian. No doubt each thought he was right, and believed in the position he took.

It occurs to me, Mr. President, that it would have been in better taste for the Senator from Massachusetts not to have uncovered the grave. If he was looking for a precedent under which one Senator, or Senators, could attack or did attack a President of the United States, he would not have to go further back than the last few years, when he and a great many of the Senators on his side of the Chamber most cruelly, unjustly, and outrageously criticized former President Wilson. They were unrelenting here for several years in their efforts to discredit that high official, the greatest man of modern times. Propriety should have restrained him from going back for precedents beyond our own term of service in this body.

Some of the Senators on the other side who are now dead made some of the most vicious assaults upon the former President of the United States, Mr. Wilson, but I will not mention their names. We need not look further than to the senior Senator from Massachusetts for such outrageous and unjustifiable conduct.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, merely as one of the more moderate statements of former Senator Sherman, of Illinois, a member of the Republican Party, I want to read a paragraph from one of his speeches made in the Senate in 1919. At the time he made that speech all the world was in turmoil; the questions about which we had armed and equipped 4,500,000 men were not settled; the treaty ending the war had not been ratified by many of the countries who participated in its making; that was a time, if there ever was a time, when tolerance and patience and forbearance should have been exercised. The Senator from Massachusetts doubtless participated in the discussion, but there is no record of any rebuke he administered to his colleagues on the Republican side, although he was then, as he now is, the leader of his party in the Senate. Here are some of the less offensive things Mr. Sherman said. I am reading from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 5, 1919, on page 4885:

> Certain foreign powers have ratified or approved the treaty with Germany, so that the same is now binding upon the several governments. Some of such governments require no act save that of the king, monarch, or other executive authority. The treaty-making power of the United States Government is not entirely vested in the President. It is a joint exercise of that power by both the Senate and the Executive. No negotiated treaty is binding upon the American people or their Government until the treaty has been approved or ratified by both such joint powers. Next month, we are notified, the President proposes to assemble in this country the representatives of various countries under the labor articles of a treaty unratified by our country. It is his declared purpose to convene on American soil a meeting of alien governments with our own regardless of whether the treaty has become the law of this Republic or not. Limiting the laborers of this country to the narrow definition of the President even, there is no land in which the rights of labor are so liberal and cared for as our own. This paragraph of the President's address is 100 per cent demagogical. It is an appeal to the lawless, a covert invitation to the ever-present dissatisfied, restless element to demand what they will. The President has already played with firebrands sufficiently to have informed him of the danger. He has yoked himself up with revolutionaries so frequently as to know he can not check their mad race to the goal of lawlessness. His open declaration that he proposes to convene on American soil radicals as well as others from foreign countries under the labor articles of the treaty unratified, either by the American people or their Government, is a proclamation of lawlessness and contemptuous disregard of the United States Government. Again we have one who declares "I am the State." Have the American people quit electing Presidents and begun to elect kings? Public officials have been impeached for less flagrant violation of the laws of their country than this.

The Senator from Massachusetts entirely approved that, I take it, because from 1919 until this day, in 1924, he has never complained of or condemned or criticized or apologized for that attack upon the President of the United States.

That is not all. To show that the same spirit ran through all Republican action, I have here a resolution introduced in 1919 by a Republican in the other House, in which this language appears:

> A carload of European gifts to President and Mrs. Wilson has been received at the White House. The shipment is in about 40 large boxes and will not be unpacked until the Wilsons return; and
> Whereas it is the grave constitutional duty of the House of Representatives to ascertain whether any or all of such gifts or presents were received and accepted by the President of the United States in violation of the Constitution and laws—
>
> Therefore be it resolved—

And so forth.

It asked to investigate, to have people summoned and sworn, to ascertain whether Mrs. Wilson, forsooth, had accepted a brooch or a hair net that might have been given to influence the President of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wanted to call the attention of the Senator and the Senate to the fact that almost immediately after that resolution was offered in the House Senator Lawrence Y. Sherman, of Illinois, rose in his place on the other side of the Chamber and reiterated every one of those charges——

Mr. LODGE. I did?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; the Senator from Illinois, Mr. Sherman, iterated and reiterated every one of those charges against President Wilson in this body, and without a word of protest on the part of anyone on the other side of the aisle.

Mr. CARAWAY. I recall, if reading the public prints may be trusted, that the then Senator Albert B. Fall assailed the President of the United States in the most vicious language, and that the Senate appointed him, a known enemy of the President of the United States, to go to the President's sick chamber and turn back the covers to see whether Mr. Wilson was feigning illness; to learn whether he was capable, mentally and physically, of exercising the duties of President of the United States; and the Senator from Massachusetts never rose in his place to criticize, condemn, or complain about that sort of conduct.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield again?

Mr. CARAWAY. In just a moment. And now, when a Democratic Senator calls attention to the fact that the new President of the United States, Mr. Coolidge, is in communication with a man who everybody knows is trying to protect people who have sold the public resources of this land, the President of the United States has immediately as his defender the senior Senator from Massachusetts, who deprecates, who condemns, who excoriates Senators who dare suggest that the President might at least tell why he should be in communication with the man who was the go-between between Fall and Doheny, who helped Fall to concoct a lie so as to conceal the truth from the Senate of the United States. I now yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as I recall the facts—and if I am wrong the Senator from Massachusetts can correct me—on the occasion to which the Senator from Arkansas refers, when Senator Fall went to the White House to see the condition of the ill President at that time, Senator Fall was a member of a committee of two, consisting of himself and former Senator Hitchcock, of Nebraska, who were appointed by the Foreign Relations Committee, of which the Senator from Massachusetts was the chairman at the time. They were sent there, and, as I recall it, reported back that Mr. Fall took the cover from over the ill President to see what his condition was. If I am incorrect about that, I hope the Senator from Massachusetts, who is present, will correct me.

Mr. LODGE. I recall nothing of that kind. I know the committee went.

Mr. McKELLAR. The committee was appointed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, was it not?

Mr. LODGE. I do not remember whether it was appointed by the Senate or the committee. I think it was appointed by the Senate.

Mr. CARAWAY. Did the Senator vote for this recommendation that these two Senators should go to see the President?

Mr. LODGE. I do not remember how it was brought up.

Mr. CARAWAY. I presumed that a Senator who goes so far back as Tillman's time to find a Senator who abused the President could remember how much he participated in such a disgraceful act as that, only five years ago. I know what a blessed thing it is to have a memory that recalls only those things we like, and forgets all those things we do not like.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator understands that kind of a memory perfectly.

Mr. CARAWAY. I understand it by hearing the Senator's speech. I understand it by reading McLean's testimony. I know it by Doheny's statement. I know it by Mr. McLean's lie that he let Fall have $100,000, and then said, "I never let him have a cent."

Mr. President, I want to withdraw whatever I said that may be offensive to the Senator from Massachusetts. For him I have a very high regard. But I do not know anybody who is so little justified in lecturing Senators about the sacredness of the President of the United States when everyone knows that Woodrow Wilson sleeps in his grave to-day from the abuse, the unjustified attacks, launched by Republicans against him, as President of these United States, for defending the things for which our country sent across the sea 2,000,000 soldiers, for defending these things for which our soldiers died, he went to his death. Oh, Mr. President——

Mr. STANFIELD. Mr. President, does the Senator think that is any justification for abuse of other people?

Mr. CARAWAY. The question answers itself. I think whenever Senators do that, they have very little appreciation of a situation if they lecture others for doing it. I am not defending either one, but I am simply saying that Senators who have done that, do not very well consider all the facts when they read a lecture to other Senators.

I want to say one thing about Mr. Coolidge; and I am as kind to him as anybody who knows him. I sat here in the Senate with him as Vice President for two years and a half. In all that time he never said a word that I can remember. He gave me the same impression then that a London fog does; and I have it yet. He may be the great President the Senator from Massachusetts says he is. It may be that he has done the best he could; but if he has, I want to deprecate, then, the fact that the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] went to the White House and implored him to do something else. If he was doing the best he could in such a delicate situation, why did they urge him to drop Daugherty overboard? It is a little inconsistent, when a man is doing the best he can to ask him to do something else. I presume nobody will deny that they did that.

Daugherty protested that it was not just to compel him to resign. Thereupon the Senator from Pennsylvania was quoted as saying "that whether it is just or not is not the question. The point is, it is for the good of the party. You have to get out." It reminds one of the time when a man named Jonah was asleep in the bottom of a ship and somebody went down and kicked him and said, "Jonah, you are about to get off." Jonah said, "No." They said, "You are," and then put him off for the good of those in the ship; and if it had not been for a whale, there would have been no chronicle of what happened to Jonah.

Now, I want to say another thing about the President and his telegram. I do not know why it was that everybody, including Burns and Mary and "Duck," who wanted to get in touch with anybody in Florida had to wire Ed McLean. He seemed to be the universal solvent, so far as information was concerned. I think it is the most startling statement I have listened to, that the President of the United States had lost his secretary and could not find him and was compelled to ask Ed McLean where he was.

But that is not all. I say this, and I am not criticizing the President. I am only talking about him. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must admonish the occupants of the galleries that the rules of the Senate are intended at least to prevent manifestations of approval or disapproval in the galleries.

Mr. CARAWAY. I started to say that if the President's message of congratulation was in response to a message that he had received congratulating him for refusing to drop Denby overboard, that very telegram is in existence. He might have produced it and saved himself making an explanation. Another explanation was that McLean was congratulating him on a speech that he had not delivered. But the telegram was congratulating him about a speech he had not delivered and would not deliver for some hours yet, and when that did not suit and would not fit—and I can see how people might have been perfectly honest in it, and I do not want to be misunderstood—they said it was in answer to a message congratulating Mr. Coolidge on keeping Denby. I think that was premature, because before he had sent it Denby had been slid overboard; in other words, he was congratulating the President for keeping a Cabinet officer that he had already determined to drop. Anyway, the telegrams ought to be in existence. It ought to answer some of these inquiries.

The explanation of the other telegram was that he was just trying to get in touch with the Republican committeeman in the District of Columbia. I never knew that McLean was particularly in touch with the Republican organization. I thought he used to afflict himself on the Democratic Party until he got greased with oil, and then turned Republican so he would feel more at home. But I know there must be some kind of a Republican organization in the District of Columbia, not because they expect to deliver any votes, but because they expect to get some appointive officers.

I do know that the President of the United States could have reached the Republican organization in the District and found out how he could get in contact with the Republican chairman other than having to wire to Florida to McLean to hunt up his secretary, who was lost somewhere in the wilds of that State, in order that the secretary might tell him whom he could find in the District of Columbia to talk politics with.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. DILL. Might it not be that he wanted to be sure that the man whom his secretary would suggest he should talk to would be satisfactory to Mr. McLean?

Mr. CARAWAY. That does not strike me as quite probable. I think there is another explanation to that telegram.

Mr. DILL. But that might be one of the explanations.

Mr. CARAWAY. There will be several more, and that explanation I expect is as good as any other that will be given.

All I want to say in conclusion is that it may be bad taste, and evidently it is according to the Senators on the other side of the Chamber, to hold up to public scorn people who have been guilty of betraying their country and selling for a cash consideration their country's resources. It may be bad taste to criticize people who will not tell the truth, who frame answers and try to palm off falsehoods on the Senate in order that the truth may never be known. But I hope, so help me Almighty God, that if the pendulum shall swing around and hit somebody on this side there will be no Senator found in this Chamber to deprecate any criticism that is offered against any man in public office on the Democratic side who shall forget his honor and betray his country. I will not do it. If any Senator on this side of the aisle shall do it I shall feel as indignant as I am inclined to feel about the lecture which has been read to us from the other side of the Chamber.

This is not our little affair. The people are interested in it. They have a right to know, and as long as the discussion is confined to the facts I think that nobody who wants the truth known will complain. If we merely wanted to be critical—there is a man whose name is Homer—whether that is his first or last name I do not know.

Mr. BRUCE. That is his last name.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is the price people have to pay for being great. Evidently somebody named him for Homer of old, and he is apparently a singer of as great myths and wild romances as the blind Homer who lived so many centuries ago. In explaining the telegram that urged McLean to put in a private wire he said, "We want you to put in a private wire so you will be in quick and easy communication with the White House," that he telephoned something about somebody named "Wiley at your house." And now Mary—of course that is a pet name——

Mr. FLETCHER. That is not any worse than "six or eight cows."

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, no. Wahlberg came before the committee and tried to make a liar out of a son of a former President of the United States, who had said that Wahlberg had said he had in his possession $68,000 in canceled checks given by Sinclair to the foreman of Fall's ranch in New Mexico. Wahlberg then said he said six or eight cows, and expected us to believe it. He said: "Oh, no, I just said there were six or eight cows." And now comes the lady who says that Burns called her clear across town in order to take a telegram to Ed McLean, who is one of the operators, or whatever they may be called, in the Department of Justice.

Mr. McKELLAR. An agent.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; he may have to protect cellars, and so we have to have agents. Anyway, she was called across town to send a telegram to McLean, in which it was agreed that the language should be substantially this: "There is an investigation of McLean's bank account and it is important." She said that Burns and she thought that meant a request that Ed McLean should resign. Oh, such imaginations. We are expected to accept these statements, and because we can not stultify our intelligence and believe those things that are told us, the Senator from Massachusetts reads us a lecture.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6349) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] in his very learned speech of some length, protesting against extravagancies of the Nation, made some observations in the line of economy which cause me to ask to have place in the RECORD a statement showing the total appropriations for each of the last 50 years. I observe, in passing, that in 1890, when I first became a Senator, the total expenses were $395,000,000, or something like $50,000,000 to $70,000,000 less than it now costs to support the Veterans' Bureau alone. In other words, the war has caused that expense entirely, and it is liable to be more rather than less. It is not as much now as we owe to those men who have become disabled in the war.

On the other hand, we are spending nearly $50,000,000 annually for the Internal Revenue Bureau, which cost but a trifle up to the time of the war.

I ask that the statement may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. WARREN. I desire also to submit a memorandum with reference to the number of employees in the Government. The question came up as to how many there were and what reductions have been made. The list shows that from November 11, 1918, to July 31, 1920, in something like two years, the reduction was 226,644 employees. After that the reduction in the next one year was 93,634 employees. In the year following the reductions were 36,619, and last year were 12,332. This year the reduction in the number of employees will probably be considerably less than the numbers I have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to have the statement inserted in the RECORD?

Mr. WARREN. That is my desire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection that order will be made.

PUBLICITY OF CERTAIN INCOME-TAX RETURNS (S. DOC. NO. 57).

Earlier in the day the following occurred:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States in response to Senate Resolution No. 180, which was adopted on the 29th of February, 1924, which the Secretary will read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, March 5, 1924.

SIR: The resolution adopted by the Senate on February 29, 1924, requesting me to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to turn over to the Public Lands and Surveys Committee all income-tax returns filed by certain individuals and corporations, I am advised by the Acting Attorney General, can not be complied with by me without violating the rules and regulations prescribed under and by virtue of the revenue act of 1921, which have the force of law.

The President has no power to make the order suggested by the resolution. If, however, the committee desire to inspect these returns, I am willing to cooperate with the Secretary of the Treasury in so amending the rules and regulations as to make it possible for representatives of the committee to inspect them. Under the language of section 257 of the revenue act of 1921 the President is only empowered to authorize inspection, but has no authority to turn over the original documents, as requested by the resolution. Attached hereto is a copy of the opinion of the Acting Attorney General.

Very truly yours,

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

Hon. ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
President pro tempore United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

(Inclosure.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would like the sense of the Senate with respect to the reference which shall be made of this communication and the opinion of the Attorney General which accompanies it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I notice that the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] are not present. I move that the message of the President, together with the attached documents, be referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. The communication and accompanying paper will be printed.

Mr. MCKELLAR subsequently said: Mr. President, this morning the President sent a message to the Senate declining, under the advice of the Acting Attorney General, to turn over to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys the income-tax returns of the gentlemen and corporations mentioned. I understand the message of the President was read and will therefore appear in the RECORD, but the accompanying letter of the Acting Attorney General was not ordered to be printed in the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent to have that letter published together with the President's message.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., March 3, 1924.

Memorandum in re power of Senate to direct the President to transmit to it copies of income-tax-returns.

The Senate, on February 29, adopted a resolution requesting the President to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to turn over to the Public Lands and Surveys Committee of the Senate, "as by law he is authorized to do," all income-tax returns filed by certain individuals and corporations, together with all files, claims, papers, settlements, reports, formal and informal, adjustments, memoranda, and refunds, and all files and data attached thereto or connected therewith.

Section 257 of the revenue act of 1921 provides that returns upon which the tax has been determined by the commissioner shall constitute public records; "but they shall be open to inspection only upon order of the President and under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary and approved by the President."

This provision is followed by two provisos, one authorizing access to the returns of corporations by proper officers of any State, and the other authorizing an examination of corporation returns by stockholders under certain circumstances. Punishment by fine and imprisonment is provided for any stockholder making known in any manner not provided by law any facts disclosed by any such return.

Article 1090 of Treasury Department Regulations 62, relating to the income tax and war profits and excess profits tax under the revenue act of 1921, recites that "the returns upon which the tax has been determined by the commissioner, although public records, are open to inspection only to the extent authorized by the President, except as otherwise expressly provided." The President, by an Executive order, dated January 24, 1922, directed that returns of income should be subject to inspection in accordance with the following regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury:

> "1. These regulations deal only with inspection of returns, as the statutes expressly require the approval of the President of regulations on this subject. For uses to which returns may be lawfully put, without action by the President, are not covered by these regulations." [Italics in original.]

That this Executive order was intended, however, to cover all instances of permissible inspection is indicated by the fact that by paragraph 10 thereof it is provided that the return of a corporation shall be open to inspection "(a) by the officers and employees of the Treasury Department whose official duties require such inspection, and by the Solicitor of Internal Revenue."

Paragraph 12 of the Executive order is the only one dealing with the inspection of income-tax returns by representatives of Government departments other than the Treasury Department, and reads as follows:

> "When the head of an executive department (other than the Treasury Department) or of any other United States Government establishment desires to inspect or to have some other officer or employee of his branch of the service inspect a return in connection with some matter officially before him, the inspection may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, be permitted upon written application to him by the head of such executive department or other Government establishment. The application must be signed by such head, and must show in detail why the inspection is desired, the name and address of the taxpayer who made the return, and the name and official designation of the one it is desired shall inspect the return. When the head of a bureau or office in the Treasury Department, not a part of the Internal Revenue Bureau, desires to inspect a return in connection with some matter officially before him other than an income, profits tax, or corporation excise tax matter, the inspection may, in the discretion of the Secretary, be permitted upon written application to him by the head of such bureau or office showing in detail why the inspection is desired. The reasons submitted for permission to inspect as provided in this paragraph shall be considered by the Secretary and a decision reached by him whether the reasons are sufficient to permit the inspection."

It may be confidently stated that the expression "any other United States Government establishment" refers to the independent commissions and bureaus of the Government, such as the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, etc., and does not include either the Congress as a whole or either House thereof. This results from the juxtaposition of the expressions "executive department" and "other * * * Government establishments" and from the fact that application is to be made by the "head" of such establishment, such a provision being wholly inappropriate in the case of the Congress.

So much for the power of the Secretary of the Treasury with the approval of the President to authorize inspection of income-tax returns. That, it may be noted, both by reference to section 257 of the statute and the first paragraph of the Executive order, is the only subject with respect to which the President appears to have been clothed with any power.

By section 1303 of the revenue act it is provided "that the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, is hereby authorized to make all needful rules and regulations for the enforcement of the provisions of this act." Article 1800 of the regulations, the concluding paragraph, provides that "in pursuance of the statute the foregoing regulations are hereby made and promulgated and all rulings inconsistent herewith are hereby revoked." Therefore authority to make regulations with respect to income-tax returns, other than regulations governing the inspection thereof, is vested in the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and not in the President of the United States.

This distinction has been carefully observed in the promulgation of the regulations. Thus, article 1091, made by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, provides for the furnishing of copies of income-tax returns. This article prescribes that returns, or copies thereof, may be furnished by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to a United States attorney or an attorney of the Department of Justice for use as evidence in a case or in the preparation of litigation. This is the only instance provided in the regulations for the furnishing of returns or copies of returns to officers or representatives of departments other than the Treasury Department. Returns or copies of returns under this article are limited in use to the purpose for which such copy is furnished and "is under no conditions to be made public except where publicity necessarily results from such use."

That the Senate, in adopting the regulation, had in mind the provision of the law charging the President with certain duties with respect to the inspection of income-tax returns is evident, because the resolution as originally introduced recited as follows:

> "Whereas the revenue of 1921, section 257, provides, in part, as follows: 'That the returns upon which the tax has been determined by the commissioner shall constitute public records, but they shall be open to inspection only upon order of the President and under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary and approved by the President'; and * * *."

The foregoing demonstrates that Congress never has clothed the President with any authority whatever for the furnishing of income-tax returns or copies thereof. The law makes a clear distinction between the authority and duty of the President, as stated in section 257, and the authority and duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, as provided in section 1303. Generally speaking, the head of an executive department is but the alter ego of the President, and it would be proper for the Senate to request the President to supply information in the custody of a member of his official family. The situation is altered here, however, by the fact that Congress, in the revenue act of 1921, has made separate and independent conferences of power upon the President and upon the officials of the Treasury Department. Under the act the President clearly has no authority whatever to direct the furnishing of income-tax returns or copies thereof. His authority is limited solely to approving regulations for the inspection of income-tax returns.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the concurrence of the Secretary, has exclusive and plenary power over the furnishing of the originals or copies of income-tax returns. The regulations of the Treasury Department promulgated in accordance with section 1303 of the revenue act have the force and effect of law. This is recognized by section 1314 of the revenue act, providing as follows:

> "That in case a regulation or Treasury decision relating to the internal revenue laws made by the commissioner or the Secretary or by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary is reversed by a subsequent regulation or Treasury decision and such reversal is not immediately occasioned or required by a decision of a court of competent jurisdiction, such subsequent regulation or Treasury decision may, in the discretion of the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, be applied without retroactive effect."

For other provisions recognizing the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as law see articles 1002 (3) and 1005.

The power of Congress to authorize the promulgation of administrative regulations having the force and effect of law was recognized by the Supreme Court in United States v. Grimaud (220 U. S. 506 and 517-522). Also see Intermountain Rate Cases (234 U. S. 476, 480-486).

Of course, the validity as law of regulations made by the Secretary of the Treasury or the Commissioner of Internal Revenue governing the conduct of the Internal Revenue Department, when made in pursuance of a statute, has always been recognized. (Boske v. Comingore, 177 U. S. 459; Stegal v. Thurman, 175 Fed. 813.)

The remaining question is whether, the resolution having been addressed to the Chief Executive, he should refer it to subordinates who have been directly clothed with authority in the matter, or whether he should simply advise the Senate that he has no authority in the matter. It seems to me that since the statute so carefully limits the President's authority to the promulgation of regulations governing the inspection of returns he should advise the Senate to make application to the officers to whom Congress has delegated the authority which the Senate seeks to invoke. The statute authorized the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Treasury, to make regulations which have the force and effect of law. Such regulations have been made, but they do not make provisions for such a request as is now made. To comply with the request properly and necessarily involves an amendment of the regulations—i. e., of the law governing the custody of income-tax returns.

It is, of course, possible and proper for the President to advise the Senate that, in accordance with section 257 of the revenue act of 1921 and the regulations promulgated thereunder, he will cooperate with the Secretary of the Treasury in so modifying or amending said regulations as to permit of the inspection of the income-tax returns in question by the committee. Bearing in mind the distinction already noted between the inspection of income-tax returns and the turning over of income-tax returns, the communication to the Senate should state that the returns will be brought to the committee in the custody of an officer or employee of the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

The question of the possible effect of a compliance with the resolution to embarrass or impede, by granting immunity or otherwise, the prosecution, civilly or criminally, of any of the persons or firms whose income-tax returns are requested is one which should be submitted to counsel especially employed to conduct such prosecutions.

A. T. SEYMOUR,
Acting Attorney General.

Mr. McKELLAR. In this rather labored attempt of the Acting Attorney General to find some possible technicality on which to base a refusal to turn over to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys the information sought in the resolution, he bases it on the ground that the resolution read "turn over" to the Public Lands Committee the income-tax returns when it should have been, under the statute, "open to the inspection of." He makes the distinction and uses all this time and all this work and research to make the distinction between "submitting to the inspection" of the Public Lands Committee and "turning over" to the Public Lands Committee, of course for their inspection. It is upon that ground that the Acting Attorney General advises the President to refuse to comply with the request of the Senate to furnish the income-tax returns to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

Mr. President, in conformity with the very labored opinion of the Acting Attorney General of the United States, whoever that may be—it is an office that I did not know existed. It is not surprising that we have such an officer, because it does not seem that we know there are any officers in the department that really look after the business of the country or of the department.

However, in order to conform to this opinion and to the end that the Public Lands Committee may have the information which they ought to have, I have modified my resolution. There ought not to be any technicality interposed. If I may say so, there ought not to be any quibbling about it, either upon the part of the Acting Attorney General or anyone else. I send to the Secretary's desk the resolution modified so as to read, in the words of the Acting Attorney General—to permit the inspection by the Public Lands and Surveys Committee of the Senate, as by law he is authorized to do, of all income-tax returns—and so forth. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. WARREN. I can not consent to that at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then, I give notice that I shall move to take the resolution up to-morrow. I ask that it be printed and lie upon the table, so that it may be called up to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution (S. Res. 185) will be printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish to ask the Senator from Tennessee, who apparently had the communication of the President in his hand when he spoke, if the President did not say in the communication—I so understood as I heard the communication read this morning—that he was perfectly willing to sign an order that the committee might have access to these returns, but that he did not think under the law he had the authority to remove them from the office and send them here.

Mr. McKELLAR. I stated that if the President is following the Assistant Attorney General, whoever he may be—and it may be proper that the President should follow him—he is doing what the department advised him to do. However, I think that an inspection of the memorandum will show that it is such a labored attempt to find some excuse or technicality to keep from delivering these tax returns that the President should have disregarded it, but that is a matter as to which I am not criticizing him. The Senator from Connecticut is right, for the President said this:

The President has no power to make the order suggested by the resolution. If, however, the committee desires to inspect these returns, I am willing—

And surely the committee have expressed their desire by unanimously reporting the resolution which was adopted by the Senate—

I am willing to cooperate with the Secretary of the Treasury in so amending the rules and regulations as to make it possible for representatives of the committee to inspect them.

Carrying out that suggestion, I have offered the resolution. I wish to say, however, that from my information neither the Secretary of the Treasury nor the President has in the past been so technical in regard to such matters, because I understand that the special committee investigating the Veterans' Bureau requested the same kind of information in reference to a soldier, and it was instantly forthcoming. However, when the Senate unanimously passes a resolution asking for the tax returns of Doheny, Fall, and Sinclair every technicality is interposed by the Department of Justice to the President furnishing the information.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. In the Veterans' Bureau investigation we did want to see the tax returns which had been filed by an individual who had sold land to the Veterans' Bureau. We made the same application which the Senator's committee has made and were met with something like the same answer, but we discovered at that time that there were regulations in the Treasury Department which had been adopted under the law, requiring a number of safeguards, such as showing exactly what information is desired and why it is desired. We complied with those regulations, and when we did so we were very promptly furnished with the information. I believe that the Senator's committee could pursue the same course. I think those regulations are all printed, and there is no difficulty in complying with them.

Mr. McKELLAR. Notwithstanding that, I am maintaining that the opinion of the Acting Attorney General is whimsical and trivial. It ought never to have been interposed, and it ought never to have put a President of the United States in any such position in reference to the matter. I think it is very inconsiderate on the part of the Department of Justice of the President of the United States; but, notwithstanding, that I am modifying my resolution so as to make it conform exactly to what this exceedingly technical official desires it to be.

I have already asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution; and if the Senator from Wyoming would withdraw his objection, I am sure that no other Senator would object, and that the resolution would pass immediately, because it calls for information which everyone realizes should be furnished. I assure the Senator from Wyoming that the resolution will not consume a moment, and I again ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I gave my word that I would allow a matter of a personal nature to be considered if it would occasion no debate, and hence I can not at this time withdraw the objection. If the Senator will wait a moment, I think that matter may be disposed of.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well. Then I will renew my request in a moment.

ADDITIONAL CLERKS TO SENATORS.

Mr. FESS. Out of order, I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee to Control and Audit the Contingent Expenses of the Senate Resolution No. 161, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. WARREN. If it will involve no debate, I shall offer no objection to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not think it will lead to any debate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the resolution be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read as proposed to be amended.

The reading clerk read the substitute reported for the resolution (S. Res. 161) submitted by Mr. REED of Pennsylvania on February 15, 1924, as follows:

Senate Resolution 161.

Resolved, That to each Senator (other than chairmen of committees to which additional clerks have been assigned) from a State having a population in 1920 of more than 8,000,000 persons there shall be allowed a special assistant clerk, to be paid at the rate of $2,400 per year. The salaries of such clerks shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate. Such clerkships shall continue during the Sixty-eighth Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] has asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not exactly understand the resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi object to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HARRISON. I think the resolution had better go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection to the consideration of the resolution is heard.

Mr. HARRISON. I may say in this connection that in the matter of clerks for Senators there should not be any distinction made.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to say in reference to the matter, if the Senator will excuse me, that I am a member of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and I am quite sure the resolution was unanimously reported by the committee. I know I supported the resolution in committee for this reason: The States of New York and Pennsylvania have enormous populations, and we all know the burdens which are placed upon Senators coming from the large States. There is now a distinction made between Senators who are chairmen of great committees and other Senators. The chairmen of those committees have an additional clerk, and it should be so. Therefore, I am willing, as a matter of right, to recognize the fact that a Senator from Pennsylvania or a Senator from New York or a Senator from any other extraordinarily large State should be furnished with a sufficient number of clerks.

If their constituents write to them in the same proportion that my constituents write to me, I am sure an additional clerk will be none too many.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I agreed when I asked unanimous consent that if the resolution led to debate I would withdraw the request for present consideration, but may I say to the Senator from Mississippi that the resolution applies only to three Senators, each of whom represents in part a State of over 8,000,000 population. It is not for our sake, but it is for the sake of the young women in our offices who now are working far into the night in the effort to keep up with the correspondence, and they are beginning to break down; that is the plain truth about it.

Mr. OVERMAN. How long will the additional clerks hold under this resolution?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. During the present Congress only. I hope the Senator from Mississippi will not press his objection.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this is a matter that is new; the clerks contemplated have not been provided heretofore. There are very few Senators present, and it seems to me that the resolution ought not to be brought up here and acted upon at the last moment of the day's session. I ask that the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the resolution goes over.

PUBLICITY OF CERTAIN INCOME-TAX RETURNS.

Mr. McKELLAR. Now, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I have submitted. I have amended the original resolution which the Senate has heretofore adopted in order to make it conform to the opinion of the Acting Attorney General.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution for information.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 185) as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the inspection by the Public Lands and Surveys Committee of the Senate, as by law he is authorized to do, of all income-tax returns filed by H. F. Sinclair, the Sinclair Consolidated Oil Co., the Mammoth Oil Co., the Hyva Corporation, the Selah Corporation, E. L. Doheny, E. L. Doheny, jr., the Securities Investment Co., the Mexican Petroleum Co., the Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co., and A. B. Fall, together with all files, claims, papers, settlements, reports, formal and informal, adjustments, memoranda of refunds, and all other files and data attached thereto or connected therewith.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6349) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Customs Service," on page 15, line 8, to increase the appropriation for collecting the revenue from customs, and for the detection and prevention of frauds upon the customs revenue, including not to exceed $15,000 for the hire of motor-propelled, passenger-carrying vehicles, from "$13,680,140" to "$16,180,140."

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I think it is time to adjourn now or to take a recess.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, we have now reached a point in the consideration of the bill where there are found a number of amendments involving rather large amounts and which may require some discussion. Therefore I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, March 7, 1924, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 6, 1924.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Give ear unto our words, O Lord, and consider our meditations. In Thy light may we see light and in Thy strength may we get wisdom. We are grateful to Thee that we are still folded in Thy loving memory. We praise Thee as our Creator and Heavenly Father. We thank Thee for the tides and certainty of the sunrise of this day. Overrule our weaknesses and failures in accordance with Thy plan and for our good. May our national ideals and standards be realized and bless our citizenship and free institutions throughout the length and breadth of our land. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CORRECTION.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to correct an error which I made in some remarks in the House on January 24 last, upon the subject of freight rates. I understood from my informant, Mr. Hulse, that he was speaking of freight rates, when as a matter of fact he meant express rates. The rate Mr. Hulse paid as express was $1 per bushel on grain he shipped. I am very glad to insert as a part of my remarks the letter which follows.

The letter referred to is as follows:

CHICAGO, BURLINGTON & QUINCY RAILROAD CO.,
OFFICE OF VICE PRESIDENT,
Chicago, January 31, 1924.

Hon. JOHN N. TILLMAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In the debate in the House Monday, January 21, you made the following statement, as it appears on page 1239 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

> "Now, as to freight rates. John Hulse, a Republican, living near Prairie Grove in my county, told me last summer that he bought 6 bushels of rye in Kansas, not the kind prohibited by Volstead, but the kind you sow in the fertile fields around that garden spot known as the Prairie Grove Valley. He said he paid 60 cents a bushel for the rye in Kansas, a short distance away, and the transportation charges were $1 on each bushel. Write John and ask him what he thinks of the Republican legislation that made this outrage possible."

Probably all who heard you understood your statement to mean that the railroads are charging $1 per bushel for transporting rye and similar farm products "for short distances." You omitted to state the exact distance, which is an important omission where accuracy is desirable, because freight rates are based upon distances.

From Prairie Grove, in your county, north to the north line of Arkansas is about 50 miles, and, as you say this shipment was "for a short distance," I have taken 182 miles, which is the distance from Prairie Grove to Parsons, Kans., and both Parsons and Prairie Grove are on the line of the St. Louis-San Francisco Railroad. That is not a "short distance."

I have asked the freight department of the Frisco Road to give me their regular established published rate on the shipment of rye from Parsons to Prairie Grove, and they inform me that it is 13 cents per bushel, and is not $1 per bushel, as stated by you. Grain rates are quoted per carload, because the grain practically all moves in that way, and the rate from Parsons to Prairie Grove is 23½ cents per 100 pounds, and as there are 56 pounds of rye per bushel, the freight rate is 13 cents per bushel.

This is confirmed by the published rates in Illinois and Iowa; in Illinois the same rate on rye for that distance is 9 cents per bushel, and in Iowa it is 8 cents per bushel. The Arkansas rate quoted is slightly higher between those Kansas and Arkansas points, because of the very small volume of grain moving that way and the increased costs of operation in that region. These are all rates approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

One can only conjecture where Mr. John Hulse got the freight rate of $1 per bushel. It is possible that he bought seed grain, and shipped it on a passenger train by express, or at some class rate that was equal to express rates.

The point of principal interest to your colleague in the House, and to the country generally, is what is the burden of freight rates upon rye and other grains to the western farmer. For distances of 182 miles this average burden is about 8 cents per bushel; that is, the average freight charge in the West for transporting a bushel of rye or similar grain 182 miles does not exceed 8 cents per bushel, as it moves almost exclusively at carload rates. If freight rates are reduced 25 per cent, it would mean a reduction of 2 cents per bushel in the rate, but that would not necessarily benefit the farmer to the extent of 2 cents per bushel in the price he receives for his grain. To-day's Chicago price for cash rye is 72 cents per bushel, and the price fluctuates sometimes as much as 2 cents per bushel in one day, so that a reduction of 2 cents in the freight rate might be entirely wiped out in a single day by a fall in the price caused by poor demand from Europe, or a change in the customs tariff, or a slump in grain prices generally, or a stringency in the money market, or some other reason entirely remote from railroad freight rates.

Nothing can be made more confusing in this matter than to pick an exceptional incident, the result of an unusual condition, and, because it presents a sensational feature, to cite that as indicating the burden of railroad freight rates upon the farming industry.

Yours respectfully,

W. W. BALDWIN.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction will be made in accordance with the statement of the gentleman from Arkansas.

There was no objection.

THE CREED OF AN AMERICAN.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, the Clerk of this House, the Hon. William Tyler Page, rendered the country a patriotic service when he arranged some of the finest expressions in our constitutional history into The Creed of an American. I here reproduce that creed as my personal testimonial to its inspiration:

THE CREED OF AN AMERICAN.

I believe in the United States of America as a Government of the people, by the people, for the people; whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed; a democracy in a Republic; a sovereign Nation of many sovereign States; a perfect Union, one and inseparable; established upon those principles of freedom, equality, justice, and humanity for which American patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes.

I therefore believe it is my duty to my country to love it, to support its Constitution, to obey its laws, to respect its flag, and to defend it against all enemies.

I do not hope to rival Mr. Page as the formulator of a creed, but have put down some of the thoughts that have risen to the surface recently when forced to contemplate the distraction of the public mind and the confusion in public thought. We are so apt to get away from the fundamentals, both in life and in government, that it is well to turn attention often to the great truths upon which all genuine Americans agree. When we do sincerely understand and devoutly feel the principles of the Declaration of Independence and of the Constitution of the United States and of the impelling forces in our history, then it is much easier for the warring factions in our political, social, and economic strife to discern and to cast aside nonessentials and to strive for the real and vital principles of American life and living.

It is therefore in this spirit and for this purpose that I respectfully and sincerely submit the following amplified

CREED OF AN AMERICAN.

I believe in the fullest and freest opportunity for every person to make of himself and for himself all that his talents, industry, and character can achieve.

I believe in the square deal for every section, in fair play for and by every lawful and useful group, interest, or class; but I believe in the paramount right of the whole people acting only by constitutional agencies and methods, to carry on and to accomplish our manifest and God-given destiny.

I believe in equal rights for all and special privileges to none, and if the curse of war must ever again fall upon our Nation, then in equal burdens for all and special profits to none.

I believe that every citizen owes his country a duty to fight its battles, and if age, strength, or sex should prevent actual fighting in the field, then such person should contribute equitably of his material wealth and resources to carry on the war to its successful conclusion.

I believe that a public office is a public trust and that such public office must never be employed as a private opportunity for personal gain.

I believe that every public officer should guard as sacred the power and political influence of his position just as he should guard the money and property intrusted to his keeping.

I believe that official power and political influence come from the people and still belong to the people, and should be exercised by individuals only for and in behalf of the people.

I believe that the public school is the nursery of the spirit of Americanism and of genuine democracy, and that the church is the saving influence for men here and hereafter, and that the home, unbroken and unbreakable, is the hope and promise of our national life.

I believe in the ultimate triumph of right over might and truth over falsehood, and in the constant and enduring power of this Nation, founded on liberty, justice, freedom, and democracy, to overcome all obstacles and to continue to lead all nations in the procession toward human happiness.

I believe that all reforms that the people sincerely desire can and should be accomplished by the ballot through constitutional and legal agencies, and that any resort to violence for any purpose is un-American and will be finally destructive of all hope for the happiness of the people of this and succeeding generations.

I believe that the majority has a divine right to rule, but that it may properly enjoy and exercise such right only by respecting the constitutional and legal rights of minorities and of every individual citizen.

I believe that when existing rights contravene the highest public welfare, it is then the right and privilege and duty of the requisite majority to modify or repeal such contravening rights and to reorganize the law to conform to the expanding and growing spirit of democracy.

I believe that impatience with the processes of constitutional and parliamentary government, by either or both extremes of the economic and social structure, is dangerous to fundamental Americanism, which rests upon the unquestionable right of the people to rule according to established procedure.

I believe that such political influence as is intrusted to certain citizens chosen to public office for fixed periods of time should be held in trust for the benefit of the whole people, and that such influence should never be exploited either during tenure of office or thereafter for the personal gain of the office-holder.

I believe that liberty under the law is essential to the life of the Republic and that disregard and defiance of law and of lawful authority will lead to chaos, confusion, and ruin.

I believe that genuine patriotism needs and demands a tolerant spirit, with charity for all and with malice toward none, and with a high resolve to do the right as God enables us to see the right.

I believe that our fathers wisely established ours as a Government of laws and not of men exercising arbitrary power according to one standard to-day and another to-morrow, but that the same law applies to the rich and to the poor, and that none is so high as to be exempt from its avenging power and none so low as not to feel its protection.

I believe that the essence of fair play and of the square deal requires that the Government in all its departments and agencies shall hear before it condemns, and shall proceed only upon inquiry and shall render judgment only after trial.

I believe that our dual system of government was wisely devised to insure the power and integrity of the Federal Government in all matters essentially national, but that personal rights and liberties, diverse interests, and varying needs of the constituent States are best preserved and promoted by reserving to the people of the several States the right and duty of self-government.

COST OF CERTAIN INVESTIGATIONS.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I have been requested to make a correction in respect to a statement made on March 4, 1924, by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] with reference to the expenses of special investigating committees. On page 3555 of the RECORD of March 4 the following occurred:

Mr. BLANTON. I just want to remind the minority leader of what occurred when the Walsh subcommittee of the Graham committee went in a special train to the Pacific coast and lived up and down that Pacific coast for about two months. Whatever, if any, good came out of that investigation and of the $700,000 of the people's money that was spent?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think the gentleman states a larger amount than was really expended.

Mr. BLANTON. It was between six and seven hundred thousand dollars.

The committee to investigate war expenditures, consisting of five subcommittees on aviation, quartermaster department, camps and cantonments, ordnance, and foreign expenditures, expended $149,788.22. The committee to investigate the United States Shipping Board operations cost $44,418.89.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Is it the gentleman's object now to correct the RECORD or to correct the statement made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]?

Mr. MACGREGOR. To correct the statement of the gentleman from Texas. The statement was made that the expenditures of these two committees were between six and seven hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. How much does the gentleman say that the Graham committee cost, with all of its subdivisions?

Mr. MACGREGOR. One hundred and forty-nine thousand seven hundred and eighty-eight dollars and twenty-two cents.

Mr. BLANTON. They are not the figures that the employees of the Appropriations Committee gave me last year, and I usually find that they are very accurate. Did the gentleman get his figures from the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. MACGREGOR. I got these figures from the Clerk of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. I suggest that if the gentleman goes into Mr. MADDEN'S office and gets his force to make him figures, he will find that that entire Graham committee cost a great deal more than the gentleman thinks it cost.

Mr. MACGREGOR. It could not have, because it had to come out of the contingent fund.

Mr. BLANTON. There were various subcommittees of the Graham committee. The Walsh committee was a subcommittee of the Graham committee.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Oh, no. That was a separate committee.

Mr. SNELL. That was an entirely separate committee.

Mr. MACGREGOR. The Shipping Board committee was the Walsh committee.

Mr. SNELL. It had nothing to do with the original Graham committee.

Mr. BLANTON. The way it was handed to me, the total figures of the investigation, I think, ran up between six and seven hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. MACGREGOR. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MACGREGOR] is correct. I did make the mistake of merging the expenses of committees and commissions when I mentioned that between six and seven hundred thousand dollars were spent on investigations. On getting the figures furnished me by the Appropriations Committee's office, I find that they embraced about $600,000 expended by the Coal Commission created by Congress, which investigated the coal situation, with the amounts which the gentleman says were expended, aggregating $799,418.89.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill of the following title:

H. R. 3444. An act for the relief of certain nations or tribes of Indians in Montana, Idaho, and Washington.

GENERAL LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, a number of Members desire to extend their remarks upon this bill, say, within 5 legislative days. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that all Members who wish to extend their remarks on the Muscle Shoals bill may do so within 10 legislative days.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman make that five legislative days?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I have no objection to that, Mr. Speaker, and so amend my request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that all Members who desire to extend their remarks on the pending bill may do so within five legislative days. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MUSCLE SHOALS.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 518) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to sell to Henry Ford nitrate plant No. 1, at Sheffield, Ala.; nitrate plant No. 2, at Muscle Shoals, Ala.; Waco Quarry, near Russellville, Ala.; and to lease to the corporation to be incorporated by him Dam No. 2 and Dam No. 3 (as designated in H. Doc. No. 1262, 64th Cong., 1st sess.), including power stations when constructed as provided herein, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 518, with Mr. MAPES in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, so that there may be no misunderstanding on the matter, what is the amount of time remaining for general debate? I think it was understood that the time would be equally divided to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has remaining 1 hour and 37 minutes. According to the agreement which the Chair understood was made last evening, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] are to consume only that amount of time. That would make 3 hours and 14 minutes remaining of general debate.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT], a member of the committee.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the discussion on this bill has taken a rather wide range. Considerable irrelevant matter has been brought into the discussion. Suggestions have been made that there is a possibility that out of this legislation there may come some sort of a legislative scandal. Some have referred to it in such manner as if they feared that it may become akin to the Teapot Dome controversy that has occupied so much time of the other legislative body of the Congress. There is no excuse for any Member of this House to misunderstand this proposition in any particular whatever. It has been published broadcast to the world, hearings for months were had before the Committee on Military Affairs concerning the proposition, and, Mr. Chairman, there are no secrets connected with this piece of legislation whatsoever. No man has come before the Committee on Military Affairs who did not disclose fully his identity. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], for the lack of something else better to say, after having abandoned his leadership of this great project, referred to certain individuals as promoters and said that they were the powers who were moving about this Capitol and who were behind this legislation. Colonel Worthington, one of the men he spoke of, has made no secret of his interest in this matter. He has represented the waterways of that section of the country for a long time, for many years. He is vitally interested in water-power development and waterway improvement of the Tennessee River as provided for in this very bill. Mr. Silver, the other promoter that he referred to, stated openly and above board before the committee that he was the representative, the paid representative, if you please, of the farm organizations of this country, and that the only interest that he had in this legislation was that part of the legislation affecting the fertilizer end of the transaction, and that all other matters pertaining to the bill were left open to Congress and to the committee—he had no interest in it more than any other private citizen of the country. So that dismisses that. Now, Mr. Chairman, a great deal has been said here concerning the water-power end of this proposition. I wish to say that personally I am not so much concerned about the water-power feature of it, because I know the very fact that the great water powers of this country have already been developed and their usefulness to mankind so fully demonstrated that they will go on being developed through the coming years, as the necessities of the people may require, whether Mr. Ford gets Muscle Shoals or whether he does not get Muscle Shoals. But the part of this bill that has interested me most from the beginning and that interests me now more than anything else connected with it is the provision providing for the manufacture and distribution of cheaper fertilizer for the farmers and truck growers of these United States. One may say, Why do you, representing far-away Texas, hundreds and hundreds of miles removed from the scenes of Muscle Shoals, why should you be so much concerned about whether or not the farmers of this country should have fertilizers at half price? Well, there are a great many reasons. May I not recall those days long gone when I was a constituent of my good friend JOSEPH W. BYRNS of Tennessee? I was born and reared on the farm in a county where every farmer practically in it used fertilizers, and, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] said before our committee in a statement that I commend to the consideration of every Member of this committee and of this House, to those of us who were born and reared upon the farm there is ever a voice calling us back again, and in the consideration of legislation of this kind I can see the tired farmer not only of my own beloved State of Texas but I can see them back yonder in old Robertson County, Tenn. Yes, Mr. Chairman, I can see them in all of those good old hill counties as they return home at eventide, tired and weary after a long, long day of arduous toil, and my heart and sympathy goes out to them, and the man is ill informed who does not know to-day that these consumers of commercial fertilizer are in the hands of one of the most merciless trusts that exists in this country. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. I wonder if the gentleman will allow me to make a suggestion as to how Texas could benefit. Last year $80,000,000 worth of nitrates from Chile were imported to the United States, on which $24,000,000 export tax was paid, and if we can cut the cost of nitrates in fertilizers to eliminate that Texas will get some benefit. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. The gentleman is entirely right. Not only that, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, but I go further than that. I can remember the time, when I was much younger than I am to-day, when it was said, "Go to Texas." Farmers back in my native State and the young men were advised there and everywhere to go to Texas, where the soil was so rich that it would never wear out, where you could plant one crop after another with no thought of depleting the soil, but the Members of our delegation to-day in the House of Representatives I am sure will agree with me that while we yet have unnumbered millions of acres of the richest land to be found in all the country, yet there are portions of our State where our lands are becoming much depleted from the continuous growing of crops and that our farmers are not only using commercial fertilizer to-day but that we are going to be compelled to use much more in the years to come. There are not a great many people who stop to consider that land has certain component parts of plant life—nitrogen, phosphoric acid, phosphates, ammonia—and that whenever these properties become exhausted in the land, it matters not where it is, that land is dead in so far as plant food and plant life is concerned, and it has to be rehabilitated by these commercial fertilizers. Now, we can not tell the people out yonder on the hills and in the valleys of Tennessee, Virginia, Alabama, the Carolinas, and all of those States that grow tobacco—you can not tell those people to go to some other country where they will not have to use fertilizer. They have to stay where they are, they can not abandon their homes and all that is dear to them because their lands are becoming worn from continuous toil. If they are to rehabilitate their land and make it fertile again they must have cheap fertilizer, and that is what this bill will bring them.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I will.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There is no controversy about the necessity of fertilizer, but has the gentleman read the Union Carbide offer to take plant No. 2 and manufacture fertilizer at a profit of 5 per cent where Ford wants 8 per cent?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Yes; I will say to the gentleman that I am familiar with that kind of propaganda that has come before our committee since this Congress convened.

But I want to remind the gentleman from Iowa that when his Secretary of War advertised to the world for somebody to come and take Muscle Shoals off the hands of this Government, Henry Ford was the only man in all the world that came forward and made a proposition to the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Does that obligate us to make a contract with Mr. Ford when we have a better offer now?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. No; but when the company that the gentleman represents on the floor of this House——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. What company is that?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. The Alabama Power Co.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, the gentleman is wrong. The gentleman knows better than that.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. The gentleman has introduced their bill.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I introduced it for the information of the House, and the gentleman knows very well that when he states that he states an untruth.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I will say to the gentleman that I did not intend to misrepresent him, or to put him in a false light, but there is a saying that, "By their fruits ye shall know them." [Applause.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does that apply to the Henry Ford crowd?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. If the gentleman desires recognition he might address the Chair and ask me to yield.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. As to the maxim just quoted, would not that apply to the Henry Ford interests?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. It applies to all the activities of mankind. And another thing I will say to the gentleman that we are not ashamed to gather the fruit from the tree that we represent. [Applause.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. So there are fruits to be gathered?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Well, if the gentleman does not understand figurative language I shall have to let him ask some one who does.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I come from a race of people who are celebrated as a people of poetry.

Mr. McSWAIN. What race is that?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The race that has brought civilization to the world.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I do not want this to be taken out of my time, Mr. Chairman.

This is a proposition we are to vote up or down. It is an offer of Mr. Ford to the Government to take over Muscle Shoals—to maintain nitrate plant No. 2 in stand-by condition for the use of the Government in time of war and to be used in the production of fertilizer for the farmer and truck grower in time of peace at greatly reduced price, and may I say it is the only proposition submitted to your committee that fully meets the requirements set forth in the national defense act, under which the great project at Muscle Shoals was inaugurated. I mean no disrespect to the gentleman from Iowa. I want him to understand that now, because he knows there were some things about the Ford proposition that I did not like and that he did, and I largely followed his leadership on the Committee on Military Affairs on this subject in the last Congress, but when I came back to this Congress I found he was gone, and I said, "Where is my leader, Mr. HULL? What is the matter with him?" And they said, "He has a better proposition now."

When did you get the better proposition? In the last Congress the Alabama Power Co. never raised its hand against the Ford offer except as it affected its interest in the Gorgas steam plant. Although it did not have the law on its side, and after that company bought the Gorgas steam plant under a most unconscionable contract written against the interest of this Government and got its hands on that, then it decided that Henry Ford should not have Muscle Shoals.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. You know very well that the Alabama Power Co. always had title to the Gorgas plant.

Mr. ALMON. The land on which it was built.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is the title.

Mr. ALMON. The Government paid for it, every cent.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I know this: I know that the Alabama Power Co., according to your Attorney General, had a contract; yes, and according to the opinion rendered by the Judge Advocate of the United States Army, had a contract that was null and void.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Have you any more time left?

Mr. QUIN. I have not any time.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, if this bill is to be passed by this House I believe it will be necessary to change its title. It should be entitled "A bill to make Henry Ford the industrial king of the United States."

Mr. STENGLE. He is already that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I would be ashamed to admit it. And for the purpose of carrying out the provisions in this bill it should read, "Be it further resolved, That it is necessary to bunco the farmers of Amercia."

I want to say that no Member of this House can intelligently register his vote unless he has read from beginning to end the scholarly, logical, concise presentation of the case made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] on yesterday. I would sooner have to my credit the record of the gentleman from Ohio in his labors and efforts for the conservation of the natural resources of this country than all the ill-gotten millions of Henry Ford. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In just a moment, please, I have only a few minutes, and later on, if I get further time, I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Will you elucidate the "ill-gotten gains" feature?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; in a moment.

Much has been said about the personal guaranty of Mr. Ford. Mr. Ford's lawyers took care that there would be no personal guaranty in the bill, and the attention of the committee is called to page 2, lines 1 to 8. It is not necessary to be a constitutional lawyer to understand that very plain language. A first-year law student could tell you that there is no guaranty. Let me read the section:

> For the purpose of carrying out the terms of this agreement, Henry Ford will form a corporation (hereinafter referred to as the company) with a capital stock of $10,000,000, or more, of which at least $10,000,000 shall be paid in, in cash, to be controlled by Henry Ford, which company will immediately enter into and execute all necessary or appropriate instruments of contract to effectuate this agreement.

Reference was made as to who wrote the minority report. It is a matter of indifference to me who wrote the minority report, but if you want to know who wrote the bill that you are asked to vote on, then simply look at the majority report on pages 8 to 13 and you will see that the language of the bill is verbatim the language of the Ford offer. Henry Ford wrote this bill, and you can not get away from that. And he has told you that you must pass it just as it is written. Of course, it had to be, as my genial friend from Texas has said, because Henry Ford said to the Congress of the United States, "You will pass this bill as I wrote it, or I will not sign the contract."

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Just as soon as I get time from the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] I will yield.

Now, gentlemen, the point that is urged in support of this measure is the great possibility of obtaining fertilizer; and yet not one Member who spoke in favor of the bill has given this House any definite information as to the cost of the fertilizer or the quantity that may be produced. What assurance have you that the farmers are going to get cheap fertilizer? What method of manufacture is Mr. Ford going to use? What formula is he going to follow? You have been given no information about these very important matters. What experience has Mr. Ford in the manufacture of fertilizer? I venture to state that Mr. Ford would not understand a formula if he saw one. All this talk about fertilizer is simply a camouflage justification for the passage of this bill. You have the poor farmer thinking that he is going to get cheap, powerful fertilizer, and yet we have heard Ford speeches, political speeches, stump speeches, but nothing definite, concrete on the matter of the manufacture of fertilizer by Henry Ford at the Muscle Shoals plant.

Let me again refer to the speech of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]. He patiently labored here yesterday with authentic information concerning the development of the manufacture of fertilizers. He presented in plain understandable language the scientific advancement in chemistry, meeting the needs of the world for fertilizer. I want to join with the gentleman from Ohio in paying tribute to the Department of Agriculture for their research work and preparation to keep abreast of the times. This great department should be given an opportunity. And if you want to help the farmer really, substantially, then let us turn over plant No. 2 and such parts of Muscle Shoals as is necessary to the Department of Agriculture. That is the way to beat the Fertilizer Trust. That is the way to help the farmers. That is the way to protect the interests of the American people.

I challenge the champions of this bill, in closing this debate, to point out any evidence presented to the committee or any reliable information presented to this House as to the cost of fertilizers.

Let me point out the cost of production you are guaranteeing to Mr. Ford. You give him 8 per cent of the annual cost of production; and that cost of production, as every business man knows, includes overhead, taxes, interest on capital, sinking fund on investment, depreciation, insurance, and legal expenses. All this will be included in the "cost of production" provided for in the bill. On this you give Henry Ford 8 per cent additional. Mr. Ford, with an investment in this enterprise of only $15,000,000—the $5,000,000 he is to pay to the Government in five annual installments and $10,000,000 invested in the corporation—will produce with the facilities of a $100,000,000 plant and receive above all his carrying charges 8 per cent on the total cost of production—8 per cent of the cost of the production of fertilizers, mark you, in addition to his annual contribution to the sinking fund, to pay for the Government property. In other words, the farmers will pay Henry Ford's cost of the plant and 8 per cent profit in addition. On Ford's investment, if he should decide to manufacture fertilizer, he will make many times 8 per cent annually on the amount of money paid into the company.

Talk about profiteering and it is right here under your nose, and yet you come on the floor of this House and you say what you are going to do for the farmer in the way of giving him fertilizers.

I want to make my position clear on this. I am not for the Alabama Power Co. offer, and I am not for the operation of this great plant by anyone or any corporation except the United States Government. [Applause.]

The magnitude of this great hydroelectric plant, perhaps, is not realized by many. It will some day. Is it generally understood that the Government must complete the work for Mr. Ford or rather that Mr. Ford will do it and the Government pay for it? Is it generally understood that Mr. Ford will not pay the Government the cost of the dams and the plant, but that he will simply pay 4 per cent of what the Government spent since May 31, 1922, and the millions of dollars spent prior to that period is practically a gift to Mr. Ford? With the exception of the $5,000,000 paid in five annual installments, the sinking fund provided in the bill will represent an infinitesimal percentage of the cost to the Government of this gigantic plant. I have before me a construction bulletin dated November 1, 1923, issued by Hugh L. Cooper & Co., consulting engineers, of New York City. Every Member of this House should read this report to glean an idea of the vast, enormous, gigantic proportions of this plant. You will find interesting data in this report. Let me read it to you; it is not very long:

> The development of water power and the improvement of navigation in the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals have been under consideration for many years. The rapid advance in recent years in the hydroelectric art and the extraordinary demand for electric power caused a serious and broad study of this power proposal to be made in 1907. Since then various plans for private or Government development of the potential electric power at Muscle Shoals have been made.

In the Federal plan for the development of navigation and power from the Tennessee River there are required three dams and locks, officially designated as Dams Nos. 1, 2, and 3, located as shown on accompanying map, page 4.

Dam No. 1, including a lock, is located about 3 miles below Dam No. 2 and is purely a navigation development.

Dam No. 2, known as the Wilson Dam, is now under construction and is about 55 per cent completed. This installation, when finished, will cost about $50,000,000, excluding interest during construction. This power plant, with the Tennessee River unregulated, will supply approximately 700,000,000 kilowatt hours of primary power per annum and 1,490,000,000 kilowatt hours of secondary power per annum. Navigation locks are included in this development.

Dam No. 3 is a proposed water-power and navigation development located about 20 miles upstream from Dam No. 2. This project is estimated to cost about $25,000,000, including the locks, and using the unregulated flow of the Tennessee River is estimated to supply 285,500,000 kilowatt hours of primary power per annum and 608,000,000 kilowatt hours of secondary power per annum.

Early in 1918 the development of Dam No. 2 was undertaken by the United States Government as an aid in the manufacture of nitrate to be used in munitions during war periods and in fertilizer in peace times. The construction activities have been continuous and on a broad scale except for two periods of suspension, the first being for the last half of 1918 and the other from April, 1921, till July, 1922.

The construction work was started by Hugh L. Cooper, at that time a colonel of Engineers, United States Army, who was ordered home from France for this purpose. Sixty days later, having made general plans for the project and started the work, he was ordered back to France.

This installation, known as Dam No. 2 and officially called the Wilson Dam, is being built under the direction of Maj. Gen. Lansing H. Beach, Chief of Engineers, United States Army, with Brig. Gen. Harry Taylor, Assistant Chief of Engineers, United States Army, immediately in charge.

On May 21, 1920, the Chief of Engineers made a contract in which Hugh L. Cooper & Co., consulting engineers, were employed as the designing and supervising engineers for the entire project.

This work has at all times been carried on by day labor, and all of the construction forces since May, 1923, have been directed by Lieut. Col. George R. Spalding, United States Army. The responsibility for the cost of the works and time of completion rests with the War Department of the United States. Barring unexpected difficulties in the future, the works should be ready for the commercial operation of eight units, a total of 260,000 horsepower of capacity, by October 1, 1925.

The total length of the proposed structures across the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals will be about 4,500 feet. The power house, abutting the south shore and forming a part of the dam, is 1,250 feet long. The dam or spillway section extends from the north end of the power house to the lock and is 3,050 feet long. The upstream end of the lock extends from the north end of the dam to the north shore, a distance of 200 feet.

Power house: The power-house structure is 1,250 feet long and 160 feet wide. Its total height is 134 feet. The substructure is monolithic concrete, while the superstructure is reinforced concrete, with a steel-trussed roof. Eighteen power units will be installed ultimately. There will be four 30,000-horsepower units and fourteen 35,000-horsepower units—a total of about 600,000 horsepower. Four complete units of 30,000 horsepower each are now being installed, and bids are soon to be requested for four additional units of 35,000 horsepower each.

Dam: The length of the dam proper is 3,050 feet. It is 95 feet high from the river bed to the crest, and 140 feet high from foundation to the level of the operating bridge, and is 105 feet thick at the base. The top of the dam is a floodgate operating bridge which may be used for highway purposes.

Locks: Two locks, one immediately above the other, each having a lift of 46 feet 6 inches at mean stage, and each 60 feet by 300 feet inside dimensions, having a miter sill clearance of 7 feet 6 inches, are being built at the north end of the drum and abutting the north shore.

GENERAL STATEMENTS.

This entire project calls for 1,350,000 cubic yards of masonry. This is the greatest quantity of masonry required by any hydraulic development hitherto built, not excluding the famous dam on the Nile at Assouan, Egypt.

This water power, when the total 600,000 horsepower of machinery has been installed and is utilizing the natural, unregulated flow of the Tennessee River, will produce on the average 700,000,000 kilowatt hours of primary power per annum and 1,490,000,000 kilowatt hours of secondary power per annum. Primary power is power which is available every hour of every year. Secondary power is power that is available a fraction of the year only. This fraction at the Wilson Dam will vary from a minimum of 90 days to a maximum of nearly 365 days. A kilowatt is 1⅓ horsepower.

This total amount of power will effect, if used for ordinary commercial purposes, a saving of about 3,500,000 tons of coal per annum.

When the flow of the Tennessee River is equalized by the construction of commercially feasible water powers and storages in the headwaters of the river, the average annual electric power from this project should be increased about 30 per cent.

The pool created by this dam will be about 18 miles long and have an average width of about three-quarters of a mile.

The operating head will vary from a maximum of 95 feet to a probable minimum of 70 feet.

Excess water not required for power purposes and flowing over the top of the dam will be controlled by 58 steel gates, each 38 feet long by 18 feet high, these gates to be operated by a control system which will permit one man to open or close all of the gates in two hours, thus securing the most dependable flood regulation. These gates are designed so as to discharge up to 950,000 cubic feet of water per second. This 950,000 cubic feet of water per second is three times the maximum discharge of the St. Lawrence River in its international section.

The foundations for all of these works is a very hard blue limestone. The foundation strata have been carefully examined and thoroughly tested throughout the entire length of the dam, power house, and lock system and found entirely satisfactory. Exploration holes, varying in depth from 40 feet minimum to 100 feet maximum, have been driven for every 20 feet of length of the structures to show the character of the foundations. The plans followed for the testing of these foundations have so thoroughly revealed the character of the rock supporting all of the structures as to remove all possible doubt as to their sufficiency.

Dam No. 2 and all of the water-retaining works are what is known as the gravity type of construction, meaning structures which depend primarily on their own weight for their ability to resist overturning or sliding on their foundations. This type of construction has been in successful use for centuries and is now considered in conservative engineering to be the most dependable design where permanence, heavy duty, and low cost of maintenance are required.

In general, reinforced-concrete construction throughout Dam No. 2 has been followed only where exterior surfaces immediately adjacent to reinforcing rods can be maintained waterproof throughout operating conditions, thereby relieving the reinforcement of the deterioration that always follows where waterproofing can not be perfected and maintained.

The Wilson Dam, when completed, is expected to represent the highest commercial efficiencies and the lowest costs of operation known to hydroelectric engineering at this time.

These figures answer fully and completely the statements made by gentlemen on the floor of this House yesterday about the meager horsepower available. Here is the engineer's report, which shows the absurdity of the statement that Mr. Ford would have insufficient horsepower left over after manufacturing fertilizer to generate electrical power for distribution. Do you not see at a glance that, assuming that Mr. Ford will manufacture fertilizer, the potential power of this plant is of such gigantic size as to generate sufficient electricity to turn the wheels of industry for hundreds and hundreds of miles.

Now, then, another point which has been emphasized is the necessity of having this plant in reserve as an emergency to produce explosives in the event of war. That point can not be overemphasized, and yet you are willing to place in the hands of one individual the supply of explosives at a time when this country may be in danger.

Mr. MADDEN. That is not so.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am coming to that.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. Does not the bill, which the gentleman claims to have read, provide that the Government may take it over on five days' notice?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Exactly, and let me point out to the gentleman that the bill first provides that the Government must turn over the plant to Mr. Ford complete, and if it has removed any of the equipment it must replace that equipment; that is section 13, page 9, lines 18-22. Then it provides that Mr. Ford—now, get this—shall keep plant No. 2 as he receives it, capable of turning out nitrates in case of war, but you have nothing in this contract guaranteeing the performance of that covenant, and in the contract you have no forfeiture if he fails to so keep up the plant, and you have no penalty if he fails. What a sorry situation, if, in the time of need, we found that the plant was not in such condition.

Mr. McSWAIN. Does not the gentleman recall that the bill provides that any officer of the United States—which includes an ordnance officer—shall have access to that plant at all times, and that clause 19 gives the Federal court power to declare a forfeiture and revert the title to the United States at any time in the event of failure in any respect to perform all the conditions of the contract? [Applause.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman knows that the contract does not provide for a forfeiture. What we need in time of war is nitrate, not a lawsuit in the courts.

Now, gentlemen, I say that the one person in the United States who can not be intrusted with such an important plant in the case of war is Henry Ford, and I say that on his own war record. [Applause.]

Why, perhaps when the Government, at a time of impending crisis, gives the five-days' notice to Henry Ford, he may be on a ship with some Roszika petticoat, trying to get the boys out of the trenches; and the only boy Henry Ford ever got out of the trenches was his own son, and the gentleman knows that. [Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. Does not the gentleman admit that Henry Ford put all of his enormous industries at the disposal of the Government in time of war for the purpose of turning out war supplies, and without profit, contrary to the practices of the country generally?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Without profit? I should say not. Where did the Ford millions come from? Compare Ford's fortune prior to 1917 and subsequent to 1919, and you will find out how much he contributed to this country without profit. Not a cent. The only form of contribution was made by Henry Ford's publicity agents.

Why, the idea of giving a plant of such importance to such a man, especially when the Secretary of War states that we must depend upon that plant to furnish the ammunition necessary for 1,000,000 men in action. Yet, in spite of all that, you want to turn it over to Henry Ford. If you do that, gentlemen, every treaty will have to be submitted to him for his approval; every communication to a foreign government, in the event of a crisis, will have to be submitted to him for his approval, and then when you go there to get your plant, who knows in what condition you will find it?

Let me read what the Secretary of War says about that, and may I ask my regular Republican colleagues for their attention. In a letter in reference to the Muscle Shoals proposition and the Henry Ford contract, dated January 30, 1924, from the Secretary of War, the Hon. John W. Weeks, to the Hon. GEORGE W. NORRIS, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the Secretary said:

> There is, however, in the offer no security for the performance of this obligation other than the promise of the contractor and the remedy provided for in section 18. It is my opinion that a specific provision should be made that in case Mr. Ford or his company fails to live up to this provision of the contract or the provision for the production of fertilizer, that nitrate plant No. 2, the Waco Quarry, and the Black Warrior power plant shall revert to the United States and that the United States shall be entitled to cancel and terminate the leases of the dams and power plants covered by the proposal. The importance of nitrate plant No. 2 and the Waco Quarry to the defense of the United States is indicated by the fact that as they now stand they would furnish sufficient nitrogen for two field armies, or 1,000,000 men. It is therefore of the utmost importance to the national defense that this plant or its equivalent be ready for immediate operation in case of war. By the terms of the Ford offer and the bill under consideration title to nitrate plants Nos. 1 and 2 and to the Waco Quarry will pass to Mr. Ford or his company. It is true that in section 12 it is provided that the deeds conveying these properties "shall refer to or contain the provisions of this offer, and said deeds shall be so drawn as to make such provisions covenants running with the land." I believe that the importance of this feature of the contract is such that every possible safeguard should be placed in the contract to insure compliance therewith and that there should be added to the last-quoted provision the words—
> > "and such deed shall also provide that in case the grantee shall fail to operate said nitrate plant No. 2, as provided herein, or shall fail to maintain the same in its present state of readiness, or its equivalent, for immediate operation in the manufacture of materials necessary in time of war for the production of explosives, or if said grantee shall fail to comply in any other respect with the terms of the contract between the United States and Henry Ford, or his company, as evidenced by his offer of May 31, 1922, and its acceptance by Congress, then the title and right to possession of said nitrate plant No. 2, the Waco Quarry, and the Black Warrior power plant shall immediately revert to and revest in the United States of America, and the United States shall be entitled to a cancellation and termination on the lease or leases to Dams Nos. 2 and 3 and their power plants."

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman wants to be fair, and if he does he must admit this: That Henry Ford is the only man in the whole United States who has ever built an automobile within the reach of the common farmer of the country.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; and when you buy a Ford automobile it is like eating in an automat restaurant—you pay more for what you get than in any other restaurant in the country.

Mr. BLANTON. You get more for what you pay than for anything else in the country. [Applause.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The only thing which impresses you gentlemen about Henry Ford is his wealth, his fortune. You are bowing to money, and that is the only thing which Henry Ford has to recommend himself to you. And if you pass this bill you should replace that flag on the wall of this House with a great big dollar sign.

Mr. BLANTON. The only thing I do not like about Henry Ford is his rotten politics.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Very good, and the 10 Members from Alabama, and you all from the South, if you pass this bill, will have to go to Henry Ford to get his O. K. for renomination. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Will the gentleman yield.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. The gentleman says that Mr. Ford, if he has this proposition of maintaining nitrate plant No. 2 for war purposes, can not be trusted.

Would the gentleman rather trust plant No. 2 in the hands of a company a majority of whose stock is owned by foreign interests than to Henry Ford?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman heard me say that this proposition is so important that no private company ought to own and operate it. It ought to be controlled and operated by the Government of the United States.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Then the gentleman is for Government ownership?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Absolutely; and I am consistent about it. I could not come before this House with the stand I have taken on bills that have been brought before us, otherwise than to be for Government operation of this enormous plant.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. Does not the gentleman admit that Henry Ford is the one conspicuous man in this Nation who has defied the combined financial powers of Wall Street and licked them to their knees, and that is the reason they are now fighting him?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Why, they are not fighting him. Every big financial interest, I will say to my friend, that has been opposing the municipal operation of electric power and heat and water plants and all the railroads are hoping you will pass this bill in order to stop the future development of Government operation of public utilities. You are putting back the progress of government 100 years by presenting this bill and passing it.

Mr. McSWAIN. And do they not hate Henry Ford more than they hate Government public-utility ownership?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The only man who has hatred in his heart is Henry Ford, based on his ignorance of history, literature, and religion. [Applause.] And Henry Ford has done more, I will say, owing to his bigoted hatred, to create strife and hatred in this country among the races than any man in the United States.

And I will say that the wealth and ignorance of Henry Ford combined has made it possible for vicious men to carry on a nefarious warfare against the Jews, not only of America, but of the whole world, and it has been said and I can understand how this vicious, inhuman, un-Christian campaign did reach the other side, and its result we see in the pogroms of innocent, helpless Jews in 1919 and in 1920 in parts of Europe. Deny that, if you can. The gentleman suggested hatred, and I had to tell you where there was hatred.

I am against this proposition. You are turning over this $100,000,000 worth of property, and you know you are doing it, and placing every industry, every factory within a radius of 500 miles at the mercy of Henry Ford. You do not control the price of power. You do not regulate how he shall sell and distribute this power. You simply turn it over to him, which is an admission that out of 110,000,000 citizens in this country you have but one man whom you can trust with this very important plant.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. McDUFFIE. For the gentleman's information, the minute Henry Ford sells power in Alabama he becomes subject to the Alabama public-service commission and its regulations. Now, what would the gentleman have the Congress do with that great plant down there?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is a fair question. I would have the Congress recommit this bill, I will say to the gentleman, and have the Government complete the plant and operate it as I have stated before.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I know that.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. One moment. I would carry on the same completion of the work you have to do under this bill, at Government expense, and I would give the Department of Agriculture, with its splendid chemical and scientific staff, the opportunity to go down there and make fertilizer for the farmers, and I would have that always under the supervision and control of the Ordnance Department to use in case of need.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman simply believes in the Government operating this plant.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Absolutely.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I will yield to the gentleman, although my time is about up.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the gentleman, if I understand him, would have the Agricultural Department go out and buy farms and raise cotton?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Not at all. This question of fertilizer, as the gentleman knows, is so fundamental, and this opportunity down there is so great, that you can not afford to turn it over to Henry Ford. Why gentlemen, this proposition makes the Teapot Dome look like petty larceny. [Applause.] You can not get away with it, and I consider it a stupid blunder. The difference between Teapot Dome and this proposition is that in the case of Teapot Dome you can at least go into a court of equity and set aside the conveyance because it was based on fraud, but here we have this stupid blundering put into an act of Congress. You have this contract written into the statutes of the United States, and in a few years from now, when you realize what you are doing, it will be too late, and Henry Ford will be the absolute industrial king of the South for 100 years. You can not get away from that.

Mr. HOLADAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. HOLADAY. I have been attracted by the gentleman's solicitude for the farmers. May I inquire whether the gentleman has a single farmer in his congressional district?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I will reply to the gentleman that I have great solicitude for the farmers because I have consumers in my district, and as long as the farmer of this country is getting the raw deal that he is and is getting buncoed by Congress, the price of food is bound to be so high that in my district hard-working wage earners can not afford to keep their families properly. That is my interest in the farmer. This idea of keeping the city and the farmer separated, of course, is engineered as a result of propaganda by those who profit on both—including Henry Ford.

The quicker we get the city and the farmer together the better it will be for the whole country; but when you call in Henry Ford and turn over to him $100,000,000 worth of property of the United States for $5,000,000, with no strings on it at all and with no regulatory supervision over it, then the day will come that you will rue your action, and the farmer, as usual, will suffer.

Mr. HOLADAY. Does the gentleman understand this property is worth $100,000,000 to-day?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I certainly do.

Mr. HOLADAY. Has the Government received any offer anywhere near that figure?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. There is nothing to compel the Government to give it away except the stupidity of Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. HOLADAY. Do you not know the Government engineers have reported it is only worth $16,000,000?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. No such thing. Read the report of the majority.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. That is the scrap value.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Why, of course; and the gentleman knows it. There is not a man or a corporation in the country that would not take a hundred million dollar plant for the terms offered by Henry Ford. I noticed that all the gentlemen speaking in favor of this Ford proposition have "soft-pedaled" on the value of the plant.

I want to say a word to my progressive associates. We have had many battles against special interests and powerful financial interests. Yet this is one of the most brazen, arrogant attempts of the power of money to usurp the power of government and to rob the people of a great natural resource that God Almighty intended should be enjoyed by them and not controlled by Henry Ford, to be parceled out as he sees fit. How can we consistently stand on our program of the Government control and operation of public utilities; how can we fight for greater regulatory powers over the railroads, if not actual operation; how can we urge legislation for Government warehouses and marketing facilities, if we accept this shameful proposition?

The one tie which has bound progressives is our fight for the conservation of natural resources and our stand against exploiting corporations and privileged interests grabbing these resources at huge profit to themselves at the expense, loss, and suffering of the people. Let me give an illustration: The two engineering feats which may be compared to Muscle Shoals are the Niagara water power and the Panama Canal. The Niagara power grabbed by greedy, selfish corporations, assisted by favored legislation and the gift of nature, this great water power is turned into dividends for these companies, and the people must pay excessive rates for power, current, light, and heat. Panama Canal, on the other hand, stands as a monument to Government operation. That great undertaking, carried out by the War Department and now operated by the Government, is enjoyed by the whole world in general and by the people of America in particular. Imagine Panama Canal operated by the power companies of Niagara or Henry Ford, do you not see that it would result in the control of intercontinental commerce? Just as the private operation of the Panama Canal would give its possessor the key to commerce, so will Muscle Shoals give Henry Ford the key to the industry and manufacturing of the South.

You have heard told here the history of the fight for the conservation of the natural resources. You are all familiar with the Federal water power act. How can we in the face of that beneficial act which took years of struggle and fighting to write on our statute books vote for this proposition?

We are reminded of one of the first acts toward the conservation of natural resources and the first step which finally ended in the enactment of the Federal water power act, of the opposition at every phase of the great fight which lasted for years to bring about this legislation. A bill was introduced in the Sixty-second Congress, known as Senate bill 8033, to authorize the Connecticut River Co. to relocate and construct a dam across the Connecticut River, in the State of Connecticut. This bill, I learn, was one of the first measures which tended to utilize water power and at the same time provide safe navigation on our waterways.

Enemies of conservation of natural resources, the friends of corporations controlling public utilities, saw the danger in the first step toward protection of the public in this bill and fought it inch by inch. The distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], then in the United States Senate, championed the bill and fought for its enactment as originally reported just as he is fighting against the measure now under consideration. But if you will look up the debate on that bill, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the third session of the Sixty-second Congress, on February 17, 1913, you will see that the bill was so emasculated with amendments as to destroy its very purpose, take every feature of conservation from it, and give the company the absolute control of the ways and the power and deprive the people of their just enjoyment of that waterway. My Progressive associates, I want to call to your attention that the great leader of progressive ideas in this country, Senator ROBERT LA FOLLETTE, voted against every amendment introduced for the purpose of destroying the real intent of the bill.

We have stood together and stood the test a great many years on principles in which we believed and we will stand together for a great many years, I am sure. And along with our program for the conservation and control by the Government of coal, oil, transportation, water power finds its place, and in keeping with that program I ask my Progressive associates to stand by the people and vote against King Ford.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I can not let this opportunity pass without voicing what I believe to be the overwhelming sentiment of the people of the State of Ohio, and the Eleventh district, upon the Muscle Shoals proposal now before Congress. They have followed this proposition from its beginning to the present. In common with the people of our country they realize that it has tremendous possibilities, and consequently a proper disposition of it by us will vitally effect and benefit every man, woman, and child of this Republic.

Muscle Shoals is only one of the many great war projects brought into existence during the late world conflict for war purposes. The expenditure of millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money was authorized under the national defense act for two purposes: First, to provide for the manufacture of nitrogen to supply munitions of war in time of emergency; and second, to produce and supply fertilizer for the American farmer in time of peace. These were the purposes for which the plants at Muscle Shoals were located and constructed by our Government, and these purposes should be kept clearly before us in their disposition.

I am not in favor of scrapping and selling the Muscle Shoals plants as junk, as has been done with many other war enterprises, which have been sold for one-twentieth of their cost and less. I am in favor of the Ford offer for the reason that it is the only real and honest proposal made to our Government for the development of Muscle Shoals. It is true that the Alabama Power Co., almost entirely owned and wholly controlled by British capital and British interests, has submitted an eleventh-hour proposal through the press and by their spokesmen on the floor of the House, for the development of Muscle Shoals. This offer is not made in good faith, but is a smoke screen to defeat an honest proposal. I agree with the provision written into Ford's proposal, that Muscle Shoals should always be held and controlled by American citizens, and by American citizens only, reserving to our Government the right to retake and use this enterprise during the emergencies of war.

The majority of the committee considering this legislation have favorably reported this bill and have recommended the acceptance of Ford's offer. This question has been thoroughly discussed through the press and by the people of our country for the past three years, and has been ably argued here for several days. If it were for the best interests of the people of our country for our Government to complete, maintain, and operate Muscle Shoals, I would heartily favor such a proposition.

Two courses are open to us: One Government ownership and operation, which in view of the character of the project would, in my judgment, mean not only failure from the standpoint of income but disaster to the hopes of the farmers and other users of commercial fertilizer. To have the Government undertake to engage in the manufacture of fertilizer ingredients with political superintendents, foremen, and straw bosses is unthinkable. To undertake such a scheme would be unspeakable folly.

The other course is to sell the tangible property to private individuals, or to a corporation, on conditions prescribed by Congress, lease the power at a fair rental, and permit individual American initiative and ingenuity to have an opportunity at this place, where the greatest water power in our country can be developed, requiring the preservation of the element of national defense and at the same time giving an opportunity for relief, if such there can be, to our entire country, in the way of commercial fertilizer at reasonable prices.

Is this possible? Does the Ford proposal promise such a consummation? I feel that it does, or at least it is the only proposal yet made by anyone that even gives ground for hope. It is of such great potential possibilities that I feel assured that action by Congress should be prompt and final and a satisfactory adjustment of the matter reached.

Much time and effort has been expended in attempting to get the fertilizer industry and private capital interested in taking over and operating the Government plants at Muscle Shoals, but no offer worthy of serious consideration by this Congress has ever been made except that of Ford.

The capital of our country has been decidedly opposed to engaging in any partnership arrangement with our Government. It has not been seriously disputed by anyone that if Ford's offer for Muscle Shoals is accepted by this Congress, that he can and will make fertilizer at Muscle Shoals of a far better quality at one-half the present cost of fertilizer. This would, no doubt, destroy the Fertilizer Trust and accounts for the stubborn opposition of all the fertilizer interests in this country to the Ford offer. They first said that Ford could not make fertilizer at Muscle Shoals, and when this was disproved, they then claimed that even if he could make fertilizer there he could not make enough to amount to anything. If they were honest and sincere in their opposition and their business would not be affected by the operation of the Muscle Shoals plant by Ford, I think the country would be interested in knowing why they have opposed the Ford offer. It is admitted that if the Ford offer is accepted and he manufactures 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen annually at Muscle Shoals, to which he binds himself, his estate, and the corporation which he agrees to organize, and begins operation with a paid-in capital stock of $10,000,000, that the prices fixed for this fertilizer would fix and control the prices of all fertilizer used in the United States. The Fertilizer Trust and the manufacturers of fertilizer know this to be true and it explains their opposition to the Ford offer.

The farmers of the United States are spending at the rate of $300,000,000 a year for fertilizer. A reduction of one-half in cost means a saving of $150,000,000 annually. The farmers of this country pay the Chilean Government $11.80 a ton as an export duty on Chilean nitrate. According to the Department of Commerce this amounted to $11,239,384 for the fiscal year 1923. The 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen which Ford agrees to produce is the equivalent of about 2,500 tons of Chilean nitrate. If Ford's operation of Muscle Shoals resulted in nothing more than in eliminating the export duty collected by Chile for the privilege of purchasing nitrate in that country, it would have paid a dividend to American farmers and consumers of more than 5¼ per cent on $200,000,000. It is not disputed by authorities anywhere that the acceptance of the Ford offer and the establishment of the nitrogen industry at Muscle Shoals will reduce the cost of fertilizer one-half.

The annual fertilizer bill of the farmers in the State of Ohio has increased from $4,180,485 to $13,206,018, or 215 per cent in 10 years. When the farmers of our county and my State can get fertilizer for one-half of what they have been paying for it, they will double and treble their purchases, and will by so doing double and treble their production per acre. It is estimated that in 1930 our annual fertilizer bill for the entire country will be more than $800,000,000. Gentlemen, we must seriously consider the question of cheaper fertilizer for our farmers. When Ohio buys more fertilizer than Florida, and Missouri buys more than Louisiana, and Michigan buys more than Tennessee, the fertilizer problem can no longer be declared a matter of sectional interest.

We must maintain and restore the soil fertility of our country. I have heard a great deal of talk here in the last few days about fertilizers, but it is a simple proposition. Soil fertility can only be maintained by replacing into the soil those elements that the crop takes out in its growth. That is the only way you can do it. Year after year we have been taking millions of tons of the three plant foods of which our supply is most limited—nitrogen, phosphoric acid, and potash—without replacing them. The once wonderfully fertile soil in many sections of our country has been unable to stand the strain and is practically exhausted. We have the equipment and abundant resources at Muscle Shoals to manufacture high-grade fertilizers that will restore our virgin soil, if properly utilized.

As one who spent his early life on the farm, I realize the benefit which the farmers of our country and in my State and district would derive from an adequate supply of cheaper fertilizer. Approximately 2,000,000 people have left the farm during the past year. We have many deserted farms which could be made profitable if it were not for the high cost of fertilizer which faces the farmer.

I have carefully studied the Ford proposal and I believe the interests of our Government are safeguarded in every respect. In the short time allotted me I can not discuss the proposal in detail. Muscle Shoals has cost our Government many millions of dollars. Shall we spend millions more of the taxpayers' hard-earned money, or turn Muscle Shoals over to the only American who has come forth with a satisfactory proposal to operate it for the benefit of the American people?

Mr. Chairman, the farmers of this country are paying war-time prices for many of the necessities which they use in the home and on the farm. They are receiving deflated prices for their farm products. At the present time the farmer's dollar, measured in other than farm products, is worth approximately 60 cents. Their beef, pork, grain, and other products of the farm are selling at low prices in the market. They have been toiling from early morning until late at night only to find that they are not making more than a bare living. In many instances they are facing a shortage at the end of the year.

We have an opportunity to help them by voting for this bill. By helping the farmer we will also help the business men, wage earners, and consumers of the entire country.

I favor the acceptance of the Ford offer because it will convert a large war-time expenditure into a peace-time investment which will result in a great benefit to the entire country. Congress should not consider this question from a partisan standpoint. It affects all the people. It is one of our big economic questions. [Applause.]

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN] for five minutes.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I was surprised to hear my distinguished colleague from the city of New York assume the attitude that he has on this bill. I do not hold any brief for Henry Ford, but I do believe that something should be done with the great natural resources at Muscle Shoals. As a member of the Military Affairs Committee I sat and heard the various arguments made before that committee, and in order to answer a few of the arguments proposed by the gentleman from New York, whom I honor and esteem and whom I would be happy to follow and who I think would be glad to follow us sometimes, and say to him that the cost of fertilizer will be reduced one-half to the farmers of this country if this property is turned over to Henry Ford.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman give me those figures? I have been trying to get them for some time.

Mr. BOYLAN. I will be glad to. The latest statistics that we have show that the cost of fertilizer is $40 a ton, and that under this project operated by Henry Ford it will cost $20 a ton.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is that a guess or a calculation?

Mr. BOYLAN. It is a calculation, and the gentleman will find it in the report of the engineers. It is no mere matter of guess, but it is a calculation. Now he says that turning over these great natural resources would make Ford the industrial king of America. I say more power to the industrial king of America. He is a product of America, he is a product of our civilization, he is a product of the opportunity that our country affords, and the same opportunity is open to any other citizen of our great Republic. [Applause.] What has he done to make life easier and better? Where and in what part of the world can you go and not find a Ford car? The gentleman from New York speaks derogatively of him, but I want to say that it was the first car that I ever owned, and some of the happiest hours of my life have been spent in driving a Ford car.

I am sure that no breath of scandal or suspicion was ever uttered against him in the accumulation of his money. [Applause.] Not a single solitary breath of scandal has ever been around his name, and therefore why should we not take the only thing we have in the world to judge of—the future by the past. If a man has lived decently and honestly for sixty-odd years, why should we not assume that he is going to live the rest of his life in the same upright way?

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. I will.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman says that no breath of scandal has ever reached him; have I not heard some little criticism of him in regard to the Senatorship and the expenditure of large sums of money?

Mr. BOYLAN. I think the gentleman's question is extraneous to the issue here.

Mr. LITTLE. That may be so. I may not be right about it.

Mr. BOYLAN. The gentleman may be right, but I do not think it relevant to the question we are now discussing.

The gentleman from New York says that the bill was not drawn here in Washington but that it was drawn by Henry Ford. The gentleman knows that a certain offer was made by Henry Ford and the bill was drawn to cover that offer of Henry Ford.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does the gentleman believe that a contract with a private individual should be written into the law and made a part of the statutes of the United States?

Mr. BOYLAN. Not without due and proper consideration; not without a careful scrutiny by eminent legal minds like those of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Never in the history of this country was anything of that kind ever done.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Never was any proposition of this kind before the country.

Mr. BOYLAN. If you go into the realms of subterranean history you might be able to quote a thousand instances where it has been done.

Mr. WYANT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes.

Mr. WYANT. If as a result of obtaining this property nitrates will be made at a reduced cost, why is it that five of the largest farm organizations in the United States have failed to indorse this proposition?

Mr. BOYLAN. As I understand it, the allied farm organizations have indorsed it.

Mr. WYANT. Did the gentleman hear ex-Senator BURTON'S remarks?

Mr. BOYLAN. I heard part of them.

Mr. WYANT. As a matter of fact the farm organizations have not indorsed it.

Mr. BOYLAN. I received a letter from a farm organization this morning, signed by a gentleman who in the Legislature of the State of New York was called the "Accelerator," and in this letter received this morning he says it is opposed by his farm organization.

The distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] says that if we give this concession to Henry Ford we will tear down the flag in this Hall and put up the dollar sign in its stead. That is not what would happen, Mr. Chairman. If we should give this concession to these power companies we would then tear down the American flag and hoist the British ensign there, because the Canadian company owns the southern power companies.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman from New York is against giving it to any company.

Mr. BOYLAN. Personally, I would be very glad to see the Government operate it, but that is against the Government's policy. I do want to see something done. I do not want to see this bill camouflaged coming in at the eleventh hour and saying, "Oh, we have this plant; we will do it; this is the thing to do if it is going to be successful," and then after the day and the hour have expired and Congress has adjourned have nothing done.

We want something done, and again, in answer to the gentleman, let me say that, according to the figures submitted to the committee, the scrap value of the plant is but $16,000,000 and not $100,000,000. In conclusion, I say something ought to be done for the people of the South. This thing does not mean anything to me, it does not mean anything to my district, but I am a lover of my country and I would be glad to cooperate with any part of it in anything that is going to increase prosperity, that is going to enhance the value of the farms, going to build up a new city along the Tennessee River, and radiate back from the Tennessee to hundreds of other towns power that will be used in the production of merchandise that will help the entire country. [Applause.]

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FROTHINGHAM].

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, this is a proposition which affects not one particular section of the country, but every part of the country, because it affects the taxpayers for one reason, and because it affects the national defense for another reason, and for a still further reason, because the question is put up to this Congress to make the best bargain that we can, if we are to dispose of the Government's property. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN] who just took his seat, said that he wanted to do all that he could for the South. I am sure that we all feel that way. I have lived in the South and I have many friends there, but the question is whether this is the best thing to be done and how it is possible for any State in the South or anywhere else to get any water power out of this proposition, if this company is to utilize it for its own purposes, and only for its own purposes, is beyond my comprehension. This matter has been before this committee for discussion for two years. Last year a measure was reported somewhat different from the one now before us and only three members of the committee were in favor of it. It was put before this House. Some Members favored a different proposition and some of the committee favored a still different one. Only three members favored the bill that was actually reported. That was reported out because they wanted to get it into the House. It never came before the House.

What are the objections to this proposition? There is no need to bring in names or personalities. Mr. Ford will not live for 100 years, and, personally, I should be willing to see Mr. Ford's company get this, if it will come up to certain propositions and cure certain things in the bill which I think are absolutely not only objectionable but impossible as they stand. In the first place, if that dam breaks, and it is perfectly possible that an earthquake should cause an upheaval there, or if some crank should dynamite the dam and injure it, or if anything else should happen, who pays for the damage and who has to build up that dam? The United States Government.

Mr. Ford, it is true, has agreed to pay $35,000 a year as far as Dam No. 2 is concerned and $20,000 a year as far as Dam No. 3 is concerned, but that would not even be a drop in the bucket, because it would cost not only thousands but millions of dollars to build up those dams again or to repair them in case of injury. There is not a dam in this world that has stood up for 100 years of time. Not only that, but here you are giving this away for nominal terms, for not even a 4 per cent interest is to be paid on all that is invested and will be invested in these dams if this company gets it. They do not propose to pay even that interest until six years after the lease goes into effect in the case of Dam No. 2 and not until after three years in the case of Dam No. 3.

This power will be absolutely unregulated. It does not come under the Alabama statutes, because those statutes provide that in case the power is used by the owner himself the statute does not apply, and in case it is furnished to his tenants the statute does not apply. In case he furnishes the power to a subsidiary company the statute does not apply. There is no provision in this act which puts it under the water power act of the United States. Consequently this power would be given to a great corporation without any regulation whatsoever.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not the gentleman know that the Water Power Commission has no power to regulate rates?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. MADDEN. All rates are regulated by the States.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I say that the regulation will not be even by the States.

Mr. MADDEN. You can not take the power away from the States to regulate it.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There is no provision in the statute of Alabama under which any one of these things which I have mentioned can be done. If Mr. Ford's company uses the water itself for its own use, if any subsidiary corporations use it, if any tenants of his use it, or if he sells it to subsidiary companies, there is no provision in the Alabama statute that the State of Alabama can regulate the rates.

Mr. MADDEN. If he sells the power, the rates will be regulated.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Oh, no; that is just what I say. That is what the statute says. Those are not my words, but they are the words of the statute.

Mr. Chairman, there have been all sorts of propaganda and all sorts of errors abroad about the provisions in this bill. Why not read the bill and stick to the bill. This argument ought to be conducted upon a high plane, and it can be so conducted by arguing merely on the printed words in the bill. There is going to be no regulation under what I have said, either by the State of Alabama or by the United States Government.

The fertilizer proposition is the important part of this bill. If this company under this measure can be forced to manufacture fertilizer, forced to manufacture it cheaply, there is some excuse for passing the bill.

But it does not. There is not a word in this measure that requires this company to manufacture fertilizer at a given price. What you ought to do is to say he shall manufacture at a given price because if you say he shall manufacture it if there is a demand, if he does not manufacture it cheaply of course there will not be any demand. Why do not you put in a provision and make it go in the deed and have it run as a covenant running with the land that this company, as suggested, has to manufacture fertilizer at such and such a price and so much fertilizer—make it run with the land providing if that is not done this property shall be forfeited. Now there are two propositions here——

Mr. WYANT. If the gentleman will permit, it has been stated upon the floor of this House that this fertilizer was to be produced for $20 a ton and Mr. Ford agrees. Do you not think it should be incorporated in the bill?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I do not see it in the bill. I sometimes have to use glasses, and I have read it both with and without glasses and there is no such provision in the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It might be a good thing to put it in the bill.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. That is what I suggested. If this is simply bunk for the farmers that is a different matter. Now there are two propositions here, one for the sale of certain property down there on which the Government has expended some $84,000,000 or will have expended it if these requirements go through; $84,000,000, and that property includes villages, buildings, two nitrate plants, one of which, like a battleship, should not be sold, and certainly probably should never be leased, but kept for the protection of the United States Government in time of war like a battleship.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MORIN. I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. I wondered if the gentleman recollected the plant erected by the Government during the war at Nitro, a smokeless-powder plant, and the one at Old Hickory, the aggregate cost being $145,000,000, which have been sold by the Government since the war for $12,500,000, and on these plants there were houses, sewers, water mains, all the facilities such as the plant now existing down there?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I do not complain about the facilities there, but if we made one mistake there is no reason why we should make another, and the greater mistake in one case the less reason there is for making another in this case. [Applause.]

Mr. ALMON. If the gentleman will yield, does not Mr. Ford's offer in this bill provide for the Government retaining the interest in the nitrate plant for national defense purposes, and which the company could never sell and convey title to that property, and in the case referred to by Mr. MADDEN there was an absolute outright sale?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I understand it is provided in the bill that nitrate plant No. 2 should be kept in a stand-by position. I understand that is the only property that is not conveyed to him which he can not sell the next day, but he can sell the rest the next day and put the money in his pocket.

Mr. ALMON. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. There is nothing to prevent it being sold except nitrate plant No. 2; and if the Government takes that back, the corporation has to be paid; and that is another provision that ought to be in this bill, that the Government can take it back on the same terms and at the same price.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I will.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Does the gentleman find any language in this bill which prevents Mr. Henry Ford, after he has acquired title to the nitrate plant, from disposing of it, or his corporation?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Only as far as I have said he can sell the next day.

Mr. ALMON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I can not at the moment. Now, it may be thought that it is wrong to ask that the water power act apply to this measure. The only reason that I have heard given why it should not is that it also includes fertilizer. But I can not believe, with the good sense of this House, that this bill will pass, at any rate not without amendments, among others, cutting the 100 years. Why, gentlemen, the Government of this country has not been in existence over 135 years. One hundred years ago, in 1824, there were only 24 States in this Union, and the population was less than 10,000,000 people, whereas now it is 110,000,000. Nobody can tell what will happen in 100 years. Should we mortgage ourselves for 100 years? If the people wish to vote for it, it is their privilege to do so; but personally I merely ask opportunity to be recorded against this measure, so when future generations—when this question comes up, as it will come up—ask why did Congress will away this property for so many generations, my name will be recorded in opposition to any such grant. [Applause.]

Now, gentlemen, you may think I am conservative, but I want to read what was said by a Senator of the United States, Senator NORRIS, who last year got out the printed report on this measure. I read a few words merely, part of it, and it will take but a short time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MORIN. I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM (reading)—

> The plain, cold facts are, however, that giving this corporation credit for every cent of money that it pays at the time it pays it, either for interest or the so-called "amortization," we find that the cold mathematical conclusion is that the corporation has not only not paid any of the principal but it has only paid 2.85 per cent interest on the Government's investment. In other words, it means that the Government has, in effect, loaned to this corporation from $70,000,000 to $75,000,000 at 2.85 per cent interest for 100 years, and has never received back one cent of the principal. This result would follow the acceptance of the Ford offer. We must not forget, however, that this great financial gift to this corporation does not end the privilege that comes to it under the Ford offer. Not only are the taxpayers financing this corporation at 2.85 per cent interest on a 100-year basis, but they are giving to this corporation unrestrained and unlimited liberty to sell the products which it manufactures without any regulation whatever. It will be the only instance in the history of the United States where the taxpayers have been called upon to furnish money to a corporation at less than 3 per cent interest, on a hundred years' time, and to give to the same corporation unrestrained and unlimited power to use the electricity developed on a navigable stream without payment and without regulation.
> It seems inconceivable that in a Republic representatives of the people could be induced to even consider a proposition that turns over to a corporation without regulation the power developed on a navigable stream and then furnish the corporation money out of the Treasury at a nominal rate of interest for a period of 100 years. There are many instances in history where kings and monarchs have given away valuable concessions belonging to the people to some favorite prince or corporation, but there can not be found anywhere in the history of civilization where such monarchs have provided that in addition to giving such a valuable concession the taxpayers of the country should be called upon to finance it for the benefit of the favored donee.

[Applause.]

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I will yield 34 minutes to myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Before the gentleman begins, the Chair would like to advise Members who have reached a conclusion on this matter and do not care to listen to the debate to retire to the cloakroom. There is unusual confusion throughout the Hall this morning, and it is not fair to the speakers. The Chair has warned Members two or three times that those who do not want to listen should retire to the cloakroom and give the speaker a chance and give those who want to hear him the opportunity to hear him.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have listened to the debate and have observed what the opponents of this Ford proposal have indicated to be their lines of reasoning and objection. We must start out in this argument with some basis upon which to base our discussion. The opponents of this measure fail to show truthfully any real reason why it should not be adopted and accepted by this Congress.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] started out, in my judgment, upon a false premise. Only in 1916 the Congress of the United States passed what is known as the national defense act. I happened to be a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, where that bill originated, and I know from its inception up to this day what transpired with reference to that legislation and what obstacles it has met at every turn of the road.

Section 124 of the national defense act provided specifically that a plant of this description should be erected somewhere in the United States. Fundamentally it was for two purposes—first, to make nitrate, to be used for explosives in time of war, and, second, to be used for the manufacture of fertilizer for the farmers of the United States in time of peace. Approving both of these objects, I was an ardent advocate of section 124 of the national defense act. For obvious reasons Congress did not say where that plant should be located, but left it to the President of the United States, who appointed a commission of learned engineers. Out of all the Territories and States of this Union these engineers selected Muscle Shoals, Ala., as the proper place to locate this nitrate plant. Upon that basis in 1917 ground was broken at Muscle Shoals.

Can you gentlemen visualize what that place was and what it was intended to be? It was a wilderness, with tall trees growing on the banks of the Tennessee River, and those trees had to be cleared away. They started to build a dam there across the Tennessee River practically 1 mile long. When war was started the Government cleared away the timber and hurriedly erected what is almost a young city and two nitrate plants and a big steam power plant. All the thieving contractors, like the Air Nitrogen Corporation, got in their work on cost-plus contracts in erecting these plants and houses at outrageous prices, and some of you gentlemen pretend to argue that that mushroom city of empty dwellings, with paved streets, and two nitrate plants and a steam plant, is worth a whole lot of money. The truth is, it is practically worthless junk. It has a salvage value. The steam power plant in connection with the dam, when completed, will be worth some money. I lay down the proposition that after the armistice was signed in 1918 the very men who opposed that provision of section 124 of the national defense act opposed the completion of that dam, so much so that their friends in Congress turned it down and stopped every wheel from turning so far as work on the dam was concerned.

What happened? The Secretary of War, Mr. Weeks, in 1921 invited the world to bid for the Muscle Shoals plant and a lease on the dam to carry out these two primary purposes for which it was intended. Henry Ford, of Detroit, Mich., submitted a bid. So favorably was it considered by the country that the Committee on Military Affairs of the House and the Committee on Agriculture in the Senate began hearings, taking evidence, to see if Mr. Ford could really accomplish the things contemplated and what he promised to do.

We went down to look over the enterprise at Muscle Shoals. We saw that so-called city that they speak of as a lot of temporary houses put up, we saw the nitrate plants and steam power plant. We saw the water of the Tennessee River flowing through and over the partially constructed Dam No. 2. We saw the river flowing toward the sea as it did 600 years ago when the Indian with deer hide around his loins flourished his tomahawk in the surrounding wilds; and yet it is said that the Government of the United States should not give heed to the offer of Ford.

When it was seen that Ford meant business, then Congress put up money to continue work on the dam. That work has been continued until this day, and the dam will be completed by July, 1925. Gentlemen who oppose this measure on the ground that it violates the water power act should listen to this: The water power act was not passed until 1920. In 1916 this place was set aside by Congress for the United States Government forever to keep its strong arm on it, for the purpose of its being made a nitrate explosive production plant in time of war and a plant for the production of fertilizer for the farmers in time of peace.

We know that the gentlemen who oppose it come along with smoke screens, just like these arguments that have been put up here. It is my judgment that we can knock down every one of those smoke screens and brush aside the Dolly Varden arguments like those of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], which can all be brushed aside as immaterial and irrelevant to the issue pending before the House.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I can not yield to anybody, because I must consume this time in legitimate argument. [Laughter.]

Gentlemen know that a hundred-year lease or a ten-year lease or a fifty-year lease or a million-year lease makes no difference, so far as this great Government plant is concerned. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] made an ingenious argument here on that ground, when he knows that the Government itself had this project set aside as a sacred and holy investment of the American Government, and that no bureau would ever put its hands or fingers on it in any way to jeopardize its success; and that is the real reason why the Committee on Military Affairs has met with all the opposition in the hearings that we have had on this proposition. When we started Wall Street came out against it in the open; the big men allied with the great interests who endeavored to kill this plant almost had Wall Street mapped out on their foreheads for folks to see.

This is the first time I have ever seen them come out in the open since I have been a Member of the House. Before they have always dodged and kept in the background, although they had their emissaries here, but this time the real gentlemen themselves came before the committee.

Now, gentlemen, the main opponent of this measure, outside of the selfish and greedy fertilizer companies, and the aluminum trust, and the organized water power companies, is the Alabama Power Co., and it is the papa of all of them.

Mr. WYANT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I can not yield; excuse me, please, sir. Another opponent of the measure is the Wall Street financial and banking interests, which hold the securities of all the different groups of enterprises which want the water power at Muscle Shoals and to keep Henry Ford from making cheap fertilizer, chemicals, and aluminum.

Bear in mind that if Congress keeps faith with the people of this Republic the Government is bound to operate that plant itself, or to do it by a lease, and make fertilizers for the farmers throughout all of this country during peace times. I assume that every man on this floor is an honest man and wants to abide by a contract which his Government has already made with the people of this Republic.

Mr. Ford has put in his offer a provision whereby at least 20 per cent, and I believe one-fourth, of all the fertilizers to be consumed in the United States for farming purposes at this time is to be manufactured there, and that 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen, or its equivalent in mixed fertilizers, shall be produced annually throughout the 100 years' time. Mr. Ford provides further that he will keep that nitrate plant ready for war purposes, with his whole organization available, perhaps thousands of men ready to begin making explosives to be used in the mouths of cannon in time of war, by simply blowing the whistle and sounding the alarm.

Yet they object to that. They object because, as Mr. McDowell said, there is already a surplus of nitrogen and fertilizer production and the farmers do not need any more—and Mr. McDowell is the president of the National Fertilizer Association—and he stated that practically every manufacturer of fertilizer in the United States was a member of it. He identified himself as being the head of 20 or 30 fertilizer factories that Armour & Co. operate in the United States and elsewhere, and he knew whereof he spoke. He contended we did not need any nitrogen, because we already had a surplus and more than the farmers needed. He contended that we did not need any more manufacturing plants for the making of fertilizers, because we already had a greater capacity by 150 per cent than was needed.

There is the source from which the real opposition came. That was in April, 1922, and the farmers of this country were then suffering for fertilizers, yet the president of the fertilizer association of this Republic testified that 116 per cent had been added to the freight rate on fertilizers since 1914 in the Southern States, 120 per cent in the Northern States, and in some sections of the country 200 per cent had been added in freight rates.

The chief objection, according to the president of the fertilizer association, to Mr. Ford being given this contract is that the farmers of the United States already have more nitrogen than they need.

Now, you listen. The first thing they did was to endeavor to prove that Mr. Ford could not make fertilizers there. They had experts come before the committee, men with great long titles, doctors of chemistry; they had them from the ordnance department of the Government; and they had some of the biggest "know nothings" about fertilizers I ever heard to come before the committee, and some of them were out of universities and colleges. But we finally found a young man, Mr. Swan, who was already making concentrated fertilizers. He proved what some of us already knew. I was raised on a farm, and knew how to make lye soap out of the oak and hickory wood by putting the wood ashes into a barrel, pouring water on it, and getting lye from that, which is a form of potash, and making it into soap.

We know from actual experience on the farm that that can be done, and yet those men with great intellects, with their minds swimming in the air, tell us that Ford could not make fertilizer down there, and if he did it would cost twice as much as it would anywhere else. However, we knew they were either mistaken or very seriously prejudiced against the farmers of this country. But it finally developed, after Mr. Swan had demonstrated he could make it, that it could be made at half the price in concentrated form.

Now when 2,000 pounds of fertilizer is shipped to a farmer it means that 1,680 pounds of it is sand, and the freight on that 1,680 pounds of sand costs as much as Ford can make the 320 pounds of concentrated fertilizer for. Yet that gentleman at the head of the fertilizer interests of this Republic said that Mr. Ford could not make it there and that even if he could make it there it would cost more than it would cost anywhere else. But they forget that Mr. Ford would be located there with all of the natural elements around him with which to make fertilizer. He will have the lime there, the phosphoric rock, and the nitrogen in the air to be drawn down through any process he wants to use.

Now, much has been said about nitrate plant No. 2. Let me call your attention to the fact that every single ounce of stuff, practically all the machinery, in that plant is now worth nothing except as old junk. Now, Ford wants it to engage in the fertilizer business, and the first thing he will do will be to throw out all of that scrap stuff, sell it for junk, get it out of the way, and put in a modern, up-to-date plant. And what will he make there? He will make fertilizers, as the waste product from all of these chemicals, drugs, and metallic by-products—drawn down from the atmosphere—through processes already known to his chemists.

Gentlemen say the Government of the United States is giving him a great gift and he can do nothing. They first said he could not make fertilizers. Then, when I called Mr. McDowell's attention to Mr. Ford's evidence to the effect that he could make it for 50 per cent less than it cost now, and you will find it in the testimony, where he said, first, "Ford could not do it unless he would steal the stuff, and he knew he could not do that." That was the opinion of the president of the Fertilizer Trust of the United States in 1922; yet the same gang, headed by their papa, the Alabama Power Co., which is controlled by a Canadian corporation, and alien citizens own the majority of the stock and are back of that company, come along and say, "We can now make it for half of what it is made to-day." The men who, in 1922, said Ford could not make it at all, and if he did, it would cost him twice the amount it was then costing, now come along and say, "We ourselves can make it for half of what it is being made elsewhere to-day. Just let us have the water power so we can sell the current."

You listen. This fertilizer will be in a concentrated form. A ton of it to-day goes out to a farmer, and he wears out his teams hauling it from town, and 1,680 pounds of it is common sand.

Mr. HILL of Maryland rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi declines to yield.

Mr. QUIN. We propose to have the farmers of this country, through Mr. Ford, get their fertilizer in its concentrated form, and the farmer will have no freight to pay except on the actual concentrated 320 pounds, which will be mixed with 1,680 pounds of sand right on his place, and he has his ton of fertilizer ready to be placed on his soil. He will mix this himself and save the bagging, the sacking, the freight, and the hauling. You will see what this means. It means the farmers of the United States will save 80 per cent of the price of fertilizer to-day [applause], because, according to the evidence of Mr. McDowell, 35 per cent of the actual cost of the fertilizer is in the transportation charges.

These same men stand up here and argue against the farmers of this country having this plant run through Henry Ford, the man who is going to save the Government, according to our ordnance officers, $400,000 every year on replacement of machinery in the nitrate plants.

This will save in addition to that $200,000 a year upon the actual expense of the plant. It will save $125,000 a year on the locks for the dams, and yet they say that Ford is assuming no burden. Tell me that the people of the United States, if they properly understood this proposition, would not want to drive out of Congress these pretended friends of the farmer who desert him in the hours of distress. There is nothing but a plain issue before us. There are two flags here to-day. It is a question of whether you will stand by Wall Street, and all the trusts I have named, or the men who own plantations and can go out and supervise them and have tenants and so on, not able to clear expenses, and the poor man, who with his wife and children goes out himself and toils in the field and comes back home tired and worn out at evening, who will say, "Where was my Congressman when Henry Ford's proposition came up, and [applause] when the Congress of the United States was trying to give me fertilizer which I could buy at a decent price and make 3 acres of land produce more than 10 acres of land without fertilizer." All of the grains, all of the vegetable products, all of the cane, and all of the cotton must have fertilizer put under them in nearly every locality.

You have here a process for taking the nitrogen out of the air. Not only that, but Mr. Ford's chemist has demonstrated that the fertilizer will be nothing but a sort of waste product just like when you run the sugar cane through the mill and part of it comes out as waste, bogus, and just like the sawdust in a sawmill.

In connection with this air business he will make at least 30 different fine chemical by-products that will sell for fine prices. He can make a lot of metallic by-products of high value, and in taking out of the atmosphere all of these fine chemicals there will be included even cologne and even the yeast that will go into the biscuits you eat and with all these different things that will be made; Ford, with his ingenuity and his money, will have fertilizer so cheap that he can actually pay a man to haul it out and give it to the farmers. [Applause.]

In addition to this, after the lapse of 100 year's time, he will have saved the Government of the United States more than $80,000,000 in actual cash, and any man who will read these figures can see that. I will put into the RECORD a set of figures that I want every sensible man in the United States to see.

Financial returns to the Government.

[NOTE: The cost of Dam No. 3 has been assumed at $30,000,000 since the associated power companies and Mr. Ford each agree to pay 4 per cent on that amount, but Dam No. 3 may be omitted entirely without effecting the comparison, the only difference between the offers being that the power companies limit their interest payments to 4 per cent on $30,000,000 while Mr. Ford pays 4 per cent on the total cost, no matter what that cost may be.]

Maintenance of nitrate plants 100 years, at $250,000 per year (average annual maintenance cost to date has been $277,442)[5]		25,000,000
The replacements necessary in the nitrate plant on a 100-year basis have been estimated by the Ordnance Department at $400,000 per year,[6] but, taking half this amount, the total in 100 years would be		20,000,000
Total returns in 100 years		330,991,935
Average annual return as above		3,599,919
Annual financial gain by accepting Ford offer		385,020

Henry Ford, my friends, is the man that Wall Street—this great aggregation who are plundering the people—is afraid of. They know that he took an old, broken-down railroad and made it make 35 per cent last year, and it will make this year over 200 per cent, according to the profits it made for the months of January and February. They know that Henry Ford taking this great plant and running the electric current 200 miles in every direction from Muscle Shoals, into Mississippi, Tennessee, Alabama, and everywhere else that it can reach, will be a power in the land. He will be a power for good. He will be a great blessing for the American farmer. The poor people of this country, whenever their welfare was at stake, have been shoved into the background.

These opposing Congressmen erect a smoke screen and say, "We ought not to lease it for more than 50 years." This great expert here from Ohio, I think, voted to give the railroads $1,687,000,000 in actual subsidy and on top of that a guaranty under section 15A of that one-sided contract known as the Esch-Cummins bill. I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] voted the same way. In addition to that, I think those gentlemen voted to give $750,000,000 in the hard cash of the taxpayers to the private shippers of the United States.

Thank the Lord, the Senate threw it in the wastebasket and saved the people from that outrage which these gentlemen tried to put across. They now pretend they want to protect the taxpayers against Henry Ford robbing the Treasury. My friends out West, you gentlemen who live in the far West, should remember that when the Government of the United States built your irrigation schemes, and I supported them and voted for them and believed in them, it was a subsidy in that we took the water dammed up in those canyons and turned it out on the desert and created rich land where vegetation would grow. The finest alfalfa I ever saw in the world was right out on the desert. You were entitled to that. The farmers of all the East and the West and the North and the South are entitled to this fertilizer at a reasonable price. [Applause.] Not only are they entitled to it but the Nation itself is entitled, under the act, to provide it and keep that plant running there by the Government or by a lease with the Government having its hand on it all the time. Yet you hear men stand up here with a bogus argument and say that Ford is getting a great subsidy out of the Treasury.

Out of the great number of millionaires in America I have not heard a single one of them—and I have been anxiously waiting for them to come before the committee—I have not heard a single one of them make a proposition to give as much as Henry Ford. My friends, all these pretended benefactors, the power companies, united and came in with a proposition to get the power, but they did not want to do anything except to fool the farmers. They said, "We will make up a corporation with $5,000,000 capital," but they could have put in a lot of junk and moonshine in the corporation and then say, "We could not be forced to carry out the nitrate proposition because it would be ultra vires of our charter. Under the terms of our charter we would have no right under the law to produce nitrates. And our stockholders and holders of our securities would have the right to get an injunction on the Government in enforcing any such contract." Gentlemen, that is humbug of the first water. The only legitimate offer under the national defense act of 1916 that is binding is the Henry Ford proposition. It is honest, it is legitimate, it stands four square, and every man can be assured that if Congress accepts it it will be carried out.

Who is it that is interested in the farmers having fertilizer? Is it some fellow that lives up in the Bowery of New York [laughter], or is it some person living actually on the farm? I yield to no man on this floor for real sincerity and fidelity in getting help to the farmer. I was raised on a farm. I belonged to the Farmers' Alliance when I was 16 years old, and I remember going out with my good old father to help break up the Bagging Trust, which was robbing the farmers. I am a friend of all labor, and especially people who labor on the farms in this Republic, because I know that on the farmers rest the prosperity of this great Republic of the United States. [Applause.] Grass would grow in the streets of the cities if it were not for the farmers, and instead of having electric lights, instead of having the beautiful show windows and grand stores, if the farmers of the country were to go on strike, if they were to fail for 12 months' time, you would have darkness instead of light, and you would have disaster instead of prosperity. [Applause.] Farmers must prosper if the man in the town and in the city is to prosper. [Applause.] We must give the farmers a square deal. The basic industry of the United States is agriculture.

Way back in the primeval days, when the Indians inhabited all this territory, the farmers went out and cut away the trees, began to grow the products of the soil, and they have gone to the far West and established farms until they reach from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean. The farmers to-day have set up a cry of distress and say that they must have the help of the Congress of the United States. Between the failure to enact proper laws and the burdens of transportation the farmer gets caught going and coming. All the stuff shipped to him must bear a high freight rate. All the freight on the stuff that is raised on the farm must be paid for by the farmer instead of the ultimate consumer. My friends, if the farmers of the United States are not protected by this very Congress, they will rise up and condemn you and smite you both hip and thigh. The gentleman from Ohio said the farmers are not for the Ford offer. I will inform him the organization of farmers, 120,000 in number, in Ohio are for the Ford offer. I suppose the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] could find some farmers who need the fertilizer. He will stand under the banner of the powerful representative like Mr. Hugh Cooper, one of the proponents of Wall Street; Mr. McDowell, president of the Fertilizer Trust; Mr. Duke, of North Carolina—these are the men these gentlemen are standing by who oppose the Ford offer to-day and who are against helping the laboring men of this country, who work to earn their daily bread by the sweat of their brow and hardly make enough to pay the taxes on their homes. They are opposed to these farmers who pay for fertilizer two and a half prices to the Fertilizer Trust—according to McDowell they pay 116 per cent more freight on fertilizer now than before 1914.

Now Mr. Ford says that he will go into the making of concentrated fertilizer—40,000 tons to be made every year, or 2,000,000 tons mixed with filler, and have it in any form you want it, concentrated or mixed, and any man who can read plain writing, who has as much education as a small schoolboy, can read the McKenzie bill and see that it is guaranteed that this thing shall be done. And yet, some of these men oppose the act.

It would take something more than thunder and lightning coming down from Sinai to make Brother BURTON and these other gentlemen who want to stand with the Wall Street fellows, say anything for the poor farmer of the country. He is the man who fights our country's battles in time of war. He is the man who maintains the pulpits and keeps up our churches and schools. It is from the farms that we get the big men and the real heads of business enterprises of this country. It is from the farms that we get the high practical-class women who keep up the high standard of civilization of this country. Let us do our part to give them justice, so that they can not only make a bare existence on the farm, but so that they can actually prosper and lay some money aside. Do you know, my friends, that there are hundreds of thousands of farmers who work in this country, not only themselves, but their wives and children, six days out of the week, who wear nothing more than the cheapest kind of clothing and go barefooted in the hot weather?

Those people are the ones who wear homemade galluses, who have on their heads 10-cent hats, who wake to the music of the birds, who have the grace of God in their hearts, who

[2] If cost of Dam No. 3 exceeds this amount Mr. Ford still agrees to pay 4 per cent on its full cost.

[4] See Secretary of War's report on Ford offer (House hearings, p. 7).

[5] Data from Nitrate Division, Ordnance Department, United States Army. The maintenance and depreciation of the nitrate plant (No. 2) are provided for at the expense of Mr. Ford or his company, but in the power companies' offer it is specified that the cost of maintaining nitrate plant No. 2 for war purposes shall be charged either against the farmer or against the Government. Since this expense for national defense manifestly is not chargeable against fertilizer production, it is proper to show it as a credit on the Ford side and to omit it from the power companies' side of the comparison.

believe everybody is honest and that it is the Congressmen's duty to stand up for the interests of the poor men and women of this country who have no friends in high places. Whenever the time comes that some big enterprise is put before this Congress you can tell the men who stand up with their stentorian voices pronouncing how wise and good it is to loot and rob the taxpayers of the United States under some special-privileged legislation; yet they come up under the guise of being a friend to the taxpayer and say that we must not let Henry Ford have this great plant down there at Muscle Shoals because it will be a subsidy that he is getting for nothing. Do you believe that is good faith? He is the only man in the United States who has offered this much for it. He is the only man in the United States who has guaranteed to carry out the act of Congress which provides that that plant shall always be kept up. Yet they stand up and tell us to look out for Henry Ford. [Applause.]

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HERSEY].

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Chairman, I represent an agricultural people who are interested in Muscle Shoals and especially in the manufacture of fertilizers that will reduce the price of that necessity of the farmer. They would prefer that any contract or lease of that valuable public asset should be made or given to Henry Ford. The reason they favor Ford is that he has been successful in the manufacture of his Ford car and because he is reputed to be "the richest man in the world." They believe he would be financially responsible in the execution and performance of any lease or contract he might make with the United States.

If there is any reasonable or practical way to make a contract or give a lease for 50 years to Mr. Ford of Muscle Shoals whereby his millions will stand behind an honest effort to destroy the great monopoly of the 53 fertilizer companies of America who are organized into a great international trust to evade the Sherman law, then I want to support it. If, on the other hand, this bill, for an inadequate and insufficient consideration, will give over to a small and unknown corporation the most priceless water power in the Nation, without any safeguards, security, or protection to the people, then I am against it. The people back home have never investigated this so-called "Ford offer"; we, their Representatives, are supposed to know the facts; we are expected to investigate and protect the United States. In the making of a contract between the people and a corporation like that provided in the bill we are attorneys for the people, and we ought to be very careful in the making of this contract that gives away for a hundred years to an unknown corporation the finest water power of the Nation.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE], who made the majority report in favor of this bill, said last Monday:

> Finally, my colleagues, this is not an ordinary bill which can be amended by the House at will. True, we have the power, but you must remember that this is a proposal for a contract unique in its character and made possible only by one occupying the unique position of Mr. Ford.
>
> When he submitted his proposal, which all must concede was made in good faith, he said:
>
> "The above proposals are submitted for acceptance as a whole and not in part."
> Now, my colleagues, it is up to you to accept this proposal or reject it as it stands, and an amendment to alter its terms is a motion to reject it as a whole.

The issue is plain. Mr. Ford will stand for no amendment to this bill. We must "accept it or reject it as it stands." He has said hitherto that "we must take it or leave it." After a careful examination of this so-called "Ford offer" I am ready "to leave it."

Whoever drew this bill was an artist in his ability to cover up the facts and to put a worthless corporation of straw in the place of Henry Ford and his millions.

The very title of this bill starts out to deceive you. It says that this is "a bill to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to sell to Henry Ford nitrate plant No. 1," and so forth.

Some member of the committee must have been a little ashamed of this deception, for an amendment of the title is proposed on page 19 which reads:

> Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to authorize and direct the Secretary of War, for national defense in time of war and for the production of fertilizers and other useful products in time of peace, to sell to Henry Ford, or a corporation to be incorporated by him, nitrate plant No. 1.

The only thing this bill says that Henry Ford promises to do is to form a corporation with a capital stock of $10,000,000 or more, to be controlled by Henry Ford, which means, of course, that Ford will control a majority of the stock, and this corporation—not Henry Ford—promises after it has organized that it will enter into and execute all necessary or appropriate instruments of contract to effectuate this agreement. Henry Ford enters into no contract. He executes no necessary or appropriate instruments of contract and nowhere becomes a party to the contract between this unknown corporation and the United States.

The editor of the Manufacturers' Record, December 5, 1923, wrote a letter to Mr. Ford, in which he said:

> The situation, therefore, is an entirely different one from the development of an individual business. The Tennessee River and Muscle Shoals are national assets over which the National Government alone has control. In making to the Nation a proposition that Muscle Shoals be turned over to a company to be organized by you, you do not, as I understand it, back this proposition with an individual guaranty or contract to be signed by yourself protecting the Nation in every respect that the rights of the public may be safeguarded to the extreme. I do not think any company having only $10,000,000 capital, even if every dollar of that be paid in, should be granted a privilege so great, for this would instantly, whenever such a contract was signed, make the value of that scheme worth many times its par, increasing from year to year during all the time of its life.
> I am taking the liberty of raising these questions because they are, I think, of very vital interest to the welfare of the entire country, for they concern not merely Muscle Shoals but in the large bear on many problems of the utilization of natural resources controlled by the Nation for the Nation's welfare.

And the same editor, on January 17, said:

> From Mr. Ford we have received no reply, which we much regret, as we would appreciate the opportunity of having from him a full statement as to what he is or is not willing to do in connection with Muscle Shoals.

Ford signs no contract. He promises nothing. He signs no guaranties. This unknown corporation can not bind Henry Ford by saying what he will or will not do. Ford's promise, if he has made any, is without consideration, not in writing, and absolutely void under the statute of frauds.

The Washington Post of this morning publishes the following news item:

> PINCHOT OFFERS SEVEN POINTS OPPOSING FORD PROPOSAL.
>
> HARRISBURG, PA., March 5.—Henry Ford's offer for the Muscle Shoals project, which is now before Congress, "should not be accepted unless and until it is amended to conform to the principles of the Federal water power act," Governor Pinchot declared in a statement to-day. He set forth seven points of the act which he said safeguarded the public and asserted the Ford offer and the bill to accept it sacrifices all but one, that insuring complete development.
>
> These seven points were set forth as:
>
> "First, insure complete development; second, limit the lease to not more than 50 years; third, insure to the public at the end of the lease a free hand to take back the site and works on terms fair both to the public and the lessee; fourth, provide for the regulation of service, prices, and security issues if the lessee is engaged in public service; fifth, secure for the public all profits in excess of a fair return on the lessee's actual net investment; sixth, insure a fair return to the public on Government money invested; seventh, require the lessee to pay his fair share of the cost of storage reservoirs built above his works up to the amount of the benefit he gets from them."
> The governor said he had "no objection" to Ford getting Muscle Shoals, "provided the terms on which he gets it are in line with the Roosevelt conservation policies, and provided they secure for the public what the rights granted are worth."

I stand with Governor Pinchot that any bill that comes before Congress shall save these valuable and precious water powers forever to the coming generations, and that they shall be so preserved and used for the benefit of the whole people and ring out wealth and prosperity to the Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I see no occasion for excitement or extraordinary earnestness in the discussion of a purely business proposition such as is involved in this measure. So far as I may, I propose to give to my fellow Members by way of suggestion reasons which appeal to my mind why I should not vote for the measure reported by the majority of the Committee on Military Affairs. In doing this I want to speak dispassionately and refer only to things that are apparent on the face of this whole proposition. I have no objection to Henry Ford acquiring this property.

Henry Ford has been an industrial success. He deserves to have the admiration of his fellow citizens for what in the line of industry he has accomplished. If the terms of the offer are made so that they will protect my Government and my country, it matters not to me whether it is Henry Ford, the Alabama Power Co. and their associates, or the three gentlemen who have made a proffer of a third proposition. I am opposed to Government ownership, and therefore feel that the Government sooner or later ought to be rid of the terrible responsibility of this enormous plant, which is a legacy from the late war. It is a burden, but because it is a burden we ought to see to it that when we part company from it proper safeguards are introduced to protect the country, the citizen, and also the person who acquires it in their rights.

This has cost the Government, as I understand the proposition, $140,000,000 plus. That is an enormous investment. The Government will be required to spend $60,000,000 or more additional to complete the dam and works called No. 2, the Wilson Dam, and also to complete Dam No. 3. Hence you will have the people of this country making an investment of two hundred and odd million dollars on this job. That presents a profound business proposition for our consideration. What shall we do with it? Is the Ford proposition acceptable? Is the Alabama Power Co.'s offer acceptable? Or is the third proposition one that would be acceptable? In fact, it is our duty to inquire whether any one of these three propositions contains all of the elements that are necessary for the protection of the Government and the people. The question naturally is, How can the Government dispose of this property to the best advantage and still conserve the two great objects that we all confess are the objects of acquiring and completing this plant; that is, primarily, to provide means of defense in case of war, and, secondarily, in time of peace to provide cheap fertilizer for the agricultural people of our country? We all admit that those are the two objects in view in the acquisition and construction of this plant. We must act in this matter in order to avoid as much loss as possible and also incur the least further expenditure of public money. Is not that true? How can this be done?

Three plans are offered, one of which has been approved by the Committee on Military Affairs. Quite a respectable number of that committee have filed a disapproving or minority report. The only plan submitted to us for action is the Ford plan, and you are shut off from voting upon either one of the other two plans. This bill should be referred back to the committee for further consideration.

These three plans have similar arrangements in some respects. All agree that the nitrogen plant shall be maintained ready for use as a defensive war measure. All agree that the maximum production of fertilizer by the cheapest process and with the least expenditure of money shall be obtained. At the same time electric energy is to be developed and used for the good of the surrounding country. This last, however, the Ford plan does not assure. All three plans contemplate the completion of Dam No. 3. Hence they all involve the same amount of expenditure by the Government to carry through any one of these proposals. Two of these plans agree in one respect. I refer to the leases. Under these two plans the dams, nitrogen plants, steam plants, and other properties shall be returned to the Government after the expiration of approximately 50 years. The Ford proposal before us differs from all of these in certain respects. First, it requires a deed in fee simple for the nitrate plants with their steam auxiliaries and one additional plant to be built by the Government. I refer to the Madden amendment to the bill. The Gorgas plant on the Warrior River has been sold, and, as it had been included previously in Mr. Ford's offer, it must be replaced; and out of the Treasury $3,500,000 is to be taken for the purpose of restoring that plant. Where is that plant to be located? On the property for which Mr. Ford or his company under this proposition would acquire a deed in fee simple.

Mr. Ford's plan overrides the fixed policy of this Government as announced in its legislation concerning the control of water power in that it leases for 100 years instead of 50, and none of the very valuable restrictions which Congress has enacted for controlling the dispensation of water power and its management will be found in the contract by which Mr. Ford acquires leases which are to be executed for power in this proposal. Now, I have tried to analyze for my own guidance this proposition, taking the Ford plan and the existing conditions at the plant. Dam No. 2 is partially constructed. Dam No. 3 is proposed to be constructed. Dam No. 1 has not been constructed. That would mean either a dam or a channel cut through the rocks to make navigation possible for a distance of about 15 miles. If Dam No. 3 is completed, navigation will be extended nearly up to Chattanooga, or a distance of 175 miles. Now, let us look for a moment at the terms. I am looking only at the salient features of the Ford plan. He agrees to organize a corporation with a capital of $10,000,000. That $10,000,000 is to be divided into two parts. Five million dollars is to be used for the purchase of this property—excepting the dams—the nitrate plant, the auxiliary steam plant; and the other $5,000,000, I presume, will remain as working capital for fertilizer and other things which he proposes to make. What does the first $5,000,000 purchase? It purchases what cost the Government $81,500,000, including the rebuilding in lieu of the Gorgas plant of another auxiliary steam plant. What does he get? He gets one of these steam plants now in existence for which the Alabama Power Co. has made a specific offer of purchase at $4,500,000. Deducting that from the $5,000,000 which Ford pays, it leaves only a half million. Consider that half——

Mr. ALLGOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. No; I have not the time. In connection with the expenditure of $3,500,000 to build the second auxiliary steam plant Mr. Ford is in pocket $2,000,000. He has this property. He has a deed to it in fee simple, and you will note when you read the bill, as I have done, trying to be fair and at the same time critical of its terms, that you have no strings upon this plant at the time the deed in fee simple is made on these conditions until the end of his lease, and not any then. He acquires this property, and let us read on page 5 of the minority report an enumeration of what he gets and then think of the pitiful consideration——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. May I have just a minute or two to make a closing remark?

Mr. MORIN. I yield the gentleman one minute.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Turn your thought to another feature by calculating what the Government gets back from these three offers; in one case Mr. Ford gets seventy or seventy-five millions back, say, at the end of a 50-year lease. Under the Alabama Power Co. the Government would get back, say, $160,000,000 at the end of the 50-year lease. Under the Hooker-Atterbury-White proposition they would get over $300,000,000 back at the end of the 50-year lease. What business man would give away for a $75,000,000 return and a paltry $5,000,000 cash consideration this enormous property, when by accepting another proposition you can get a return of $300,000,000 out of it in 50 years?

I want to say in conclusion that another important thing that a business man would consider is the question of the people who make these proposals. Ford has money, but has he experience in reference to these plans? Here are men who make the third offer, one of whom is a member of a reputable concern of which I have knowledge, no connection with it, scarcely an acquaintance with anybody connected with it, but they have experience in this work, having built No. 1 hydraulic plant and also built a successful plant at Syracuse, and there is a guarantee that is worth more than money with General Atterbury at the helm, with the White Construction Co. and Mr. Hooker, one of the ablest of chemists. You farmers will get your fertilizers. [Applause.]

There is no guaranty on the part of Ford to make fertilizer. There is nothing in the nature of a personal obligation behind his proposal except to see that a company shall be organized to take over the contract. The fee simple to plants and land goes to that company. If he or the company fails, there is nothing in the bill which will enable the United States to get back the property conveyed in fee simple to the company. The third proposition appeals to my mind as in every way the better one. I will explain——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood]. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am opposed to the proposal approved by the majority of the committee, and I wish briefly and as succinctly as I can to state the reasons for my opposition.

The bill giving the Muscle Shoals development, which cost the Government with its nitrate and steam plants approximately $100,000,000, to Henry Ford is purely sectional. But few Democrats in the House would favor the offer if Muscle Shoals was located in Maine or New York instead of being located in Alabama.

It is urged that Congress give this property to Henry Ford practically without compensation in order that the farmer may have cheaper fertilizer. For the sake of argument let us grant that this result would follow, notwithstanding the fact that the bill contains no such guaranty; how would this act affect agriculture? Let us look at it from a national standpoint. What is the trouble with agriculture to-day? Why the dissatisfaction in the wheat, oat, and corn raising sections of our country? That dissatisfaction is answered in just one word—overproduction. Our farmers learned to produce larger quantities during the war and have not as yet gotten out of the practice. At present we buy the cotton and the sugar raised in the Southern States, and in exchange for that we sell them our corn, our wheat, our oats, and our meat products. That is a fairly reasonable exchange. This product that is exchanged for cotton and for sugar is grown upon land that has been well improved and highly cultivated, land that is reasonably worth between two and three hundred dollars per acre. That land is largely fertilized, not by commercial fertilizer but by rotation of crops. For example, according to the American Fertilizer book, Iowa purchased, in 1920, 5,000 tons of commercial fertilizer. This would be less than a handful of fertilizer for every acre of land which is cultivated in that State. Indiana purchased a considerable amount of commercial fertilizer which comes largely from the stockyards in Chicago, and the price of that fertilizer to the farmer would not be affected in the slightest by this tremendous subsidy which will benefit only the farmers living within a radius of 150 to 200 miles from Muscle Shoals.

Granted that this subsidy of $100,000,000 to Mr. Ford will result in cheaper fertilizer to the farmers living within 200 miles of Muscle Shoals, what would be the result? The cheap lands within that radius covering an area about the size of Indiana would be brought into open competition for the production of corn, of wheat, and of oats, with the high-priced cultivated lands of Indiana, Ohio, Illinois, Iowa, and the Northwest. There can be no objection on the part of the Federal Government to Alabama and the territory within a radius of 200 miles of Muscle Shoals taxing themselves to build a fertilizer plant that will produce cheaper fertilizer and make the $10 and the $20 acre land in that territory compete with the high-priced lands of my State, but I submit it is unfair and un-American to tax the people of Indiana, of Ohio, of Illinois, of Iowa, and other Middle Western States in order to have cheaper fertilizer for the farmers of Alabama and bring their cheap lands in open competition with the high-priced lands of other States and thus add to the serious condition of overproduction which is almost bankrupting the farmers of those States. What would the Representatives of Alabama say if there was a proposition here to build a fertilizer plant in Minnesota or one of the Dakotas and to tax the American people $100,000,000 to build it in order that the farmers of those States could raise cheap sugar beets or a substitute for cotton to take the place of the product they are now obtaining from the South? Every Democrat from the Southern States would vote against that proposition, and yet these same Representatives are asking the farmers of the great agricultural-producing sections of our country to vote for a bill under the blind and misleading statement that it will benefit the farmer.

Mr. ALMON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. No; I have not time to yield.

It may benefit the farmer of Alabama and some of the adjoining States, but it will be to the everlasting injury of the farmers in the Northwestern and Central States. Why do I say that the farmers will only be benefited within a radius of 200 miles of the location of this plant? I have before me the report on transportation made by the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry, and, if I read that report correctly and other information at hand, I am persuaded that it is impossible, because of high freight rates, to ship commercial fertilizer for a distance of over 200 miles, and even for a shipment of 200 miles the freight rates will amount to from 30 to 40 per cent of the total cost of fertilizer. It was demonstrated at the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives—page 29, "Nitrate" hearing—that freight rates amounted to 40 per cent of the cost of fertilizer. It is perfectly apparent, therefore, that this bill is merely to levy a tax to benefit one section of the country to the positive detriment of other sections.

Let us examine this bill and the hearings before the committee that reported it. It proposes to grant to Henry Ford property that cost the Government almost $100,000,000 and to build a steam plant and a transmission line that will cost the taxpayers approximately $5,000,000 more, and give it to Henry Ford for the small sum of $5,000,000, and the Government must then take care of and guarantee the maintenance of the dams of Muscle Shoals for all time; and this property is given to Henry Ford not under the water power act but for a period of 100 years. It has practically the unanimous support of every Democrat in the House, I am told, notwithstanding the fact that Henry Ford never appeared before the committee, but refused to come before the committee, and there is not a single guaranty in the bill that Henry Ford will produce fertilizer at a reduced cost. Why this unbounded faith in Henry Ford on the part of the Democratic Party? They tell us that Henry Ford is a wizard, that he is a man of wonderful capacity in reducing the costs of the things he produces in his factories, and that he is a man of unerring judgment. Is he a superman? Does he possess an occult power that enables him to strike a barren rock and have to flow therefrom whatever he may desire for his further enrichment and the benefaction of mankind? If he is such a seer, if he is possessed of such remarkable wisdom, and his judgment is so unerring, I ask you why are you not willing to follow him in November? Already he has stated to the world that Calvin Coolidge should be elected President of the United States; but how many of you on this side are willing to take this advice? He has also declared in language unequivocal that the Mellon plan for the reduction of taxes, if enacted into law, would be the greatest boon that could befall all of the people of this country. How many of you on this side heeded that advice? Not one.

You are following him with reference to this Muscle Shoals proposition because it is a subsidy for a portion of the South; and if you succeed in having this measure enacted into law the purpose of your faith in the superior wisdom of Henry Ford will have been accomplished.

The position of the Democratic Party in this respect is a repetition of the history of that party to reverse itself on every issue that is presented to the American people. My memory takes me back to the Taft administration—yes; to the Roosevelt administration. What was the big issue raised by the Democrats in the Taft administration, raised apparently for political purposes? The issue raised then was conservation, an issue on a principle which we all thought was thoroughly established by that great President, Theodore Roosevelt. Less than 20 years ago, during the Taft administration, we had scenes in Washington that are only comparable to the scenes that are taking place here this very day. You did not raise the issue then of Teapot Dome but you kicked up a mess over conservation. Ballinger, according to your statement then, was giving away the water supplies of the United States. He was not looking after the interests of all the people to see to it that our water supplies were conserved for all time to come. What is your attitude now on conservation? Is it that the water supplies shall be preserved for all the people under that law which Congress enacted after several years of study? Oh, no! You have abandoned that theory entirely, and this bill absolutely grants to one man a monopoly on the hydroelectric development in America for 100 years to do with it as he pleases and to handle it contrary to the provisions of the general water power act. Your position is now that Henry Ford shall be given Muscle Shoals. This great development that has cost the American people $100,000,000 and thus to lose a potential power to furnish light and power at reasonable prices, regulated by State and national commissions, to hundreds of thousands of people.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. I do not yield.

You propose to give it away. If we pass this bill to-day, then admit that you were playing politics in 1913. Admit that the fight on Ballinger then was a farce; admit that your Teapot Dome investigation is a farce and is made for political purposes alone, for if this law passes it will become the Teapot Dome of water power and hydroelectric development in America. When the Representatives in Congress voted for the water power act it voted for an act that was to be applied to the South, to the East, to the West, and to the North. It did not vote for a bill that was to have only a sectional application. It voted for the law because it believed that these great water-power sacks should be preserved for all time for the benefit of God's chosen people. It was a Roosevelt policy, not a McAdoo policy, not a sectional policy; but if you pass this bill you simply demonstrate that your only interest in the water power of the United States is to grab it for selfish and sectional purposes. Pass this bill and then introduce another giving Bowlder Dam to Rockefeller and the American Falls to Morgan. Pass this bill and make yourselves ridiculous, as you ought to appear, because of your advocacy of it before the American people.

What should be our attitude on this great question? Should we legislate to-day and back one part of our people to advance the interests of a small section and crush the farmers of the Middle and Northwestern States who are already struggling under a load of overproduction and burdens of taxation that are almost unbearable, or rather should we not stand here as the guardians of the men and women back home and see to it that their property is protected and that they are not taxed in order to bring into being an instrumentality that will crush them and make their loads still heavier.

We should stand here to-day and protest against this repeal of the Federal water power, and protest against taking this great hydroelectric development and giving it to one man.

I have no fight with Henry Ford. He has my admiration. I do not blame him one bit for wanting this great water-power development that is worth to any man hundreds of millions of dollars, but I do assert with all the power I can command that my duty under my oath of office is to protect this great interest for the people of the United States.

I can not believe that the farmers of this country understand what this gift of $100,000,000 worth of property to Henry Ford means. Propaganda in the hands of a few energetic southern farmer Representatives has been spread all over the farming sections of the North and West, taking advantage of the distressed condition in which the farmer has been placed for the last few years to make him believe that his only salvation for the future depends upon the establishment of this Muscle Shoals plant for the purpose of furnishing him cheap fertilizer.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. No; I do not yield.

The farmers of this country, in my opinion, do not realize that in addition to the 850,000 horsepower that is to be given to Henry Ford, that there is also given to him one nitrate plant representing an investment of more than $12,000,000, including 1,900 acres of land, with a great number of large, permanent, substantial buildings for various kinds of manufacturing purposes; also 125 permanent residences, all of modern improvements; also 9 miles of Macadam road, 8 miles of sewers, 4 miles of standard-guage railroad, with all necessary locomotives, cars, and equipment, shops, and so forth, with which to conduct the same; that he is also to be given nitrate plant No. 2 representing an investment of $67,000,000, including 2,300 acres of land, on which are located 186 permanent residences with all modern equipment, including bathrooms, electric lights, water supply, sewers, and so forth. In connection with this plant there is a completely furnished and fully equipped hotel, modern in every particular, with more than 100 rooms. In addition there are 24 miles of improved roads, cement sidewalks and streets, 40 miles of standard-guage railroad track, 20 miles of sewers, complete waterworks and sewerage system, and a plant for the generation of electricity, which alone cost more than $12,000,000.

If this contract proposed in the pending measure is carried out in addition to all of this property, there will be handed over to Henry Ford $500,000 worth of platinum in storage in the subtreasury in New York belonging to the nitrate plants. There is also cash in the United States Treasury amounting to more than $3,400,000, mainly received by the Government for the Gorgas plant which, under the Madden amendment, is to be spent in behalf of Mr. Henry Ford for the construction of an auxiliary steam plant for his benefit.

I wish that the farmers of this country could see this picture as it is actually presented upon the ground. It is hard, indeed, to visualize its vastness from spoken words, but if they were to see it as it is, in my opinion they would hesitate long before they would consent to give to any one man all of this property to have and to hold for 100 years, and possibly longer. And all that is to be received in return is a doubtful promise to manufacture 40,000 tons of nitrate per annum, and with this doubtful promise must be considered the statement made by Henry Ford in his communication to the Secretary of War, that if he can not make fertilizer at a profit he will quit. At most he does not even pretend to undertake to manufacture to exceed 40,000 tons of nitrate a year, and to do this only requires 100,000 horsepower. Then he will have an excess of 750,000 horsepower to do with as he chooses, to sell as he pleases at whatever price he desires.

To my mind this is a monstrous proposition. Who can tell what the needs for water power may be in 100 years from now. We are just entering upon an era of water-power development. In my opinion, within less than 100 years, yes, within less than half of that time, it will be the great moving power for the manufacturing industries of the land. It may be worth ten times what it is to-day, but whether it is or is not, it is not the part of wisdom to grant such a stupendous power to any man, or any set of men. We have no moral right to do it, and in my opinion we have no legal right to do it. It is a violation of the Federal power act, and if this bill is passed it amounts to a virtual repeal of that act.

The Federal power act was passed for the control of all the water power in the United States, for the control of all the people of the United States with reference to the use of that power, and yet here to-day we are proposing, out of 110,000,000 people, to select one man, and say to him that you are to be made the favorite to the exclusion of all the rest of our citizens, and you are to continue in this favor for 100 years. It is morally wrong because we are bartering away, or giving away if you please, as a largess not only the right we who are living have in this thing, but the right that the generations yet to be have in it.

In my opinion there can be no justification for the passage of this measure. There are two other proposals, either of which to my mind is more advantageous to the Government than the Ford proposal. If I had my way about it none of these proposals would be accepted. This whole matter should either be referred to the Secretary of War or to a commission with instructions to inquire into the facts and to ascertain what is best not only for the present but for the future with reference to the disposition of this property. So, if we discharge our duty to the fullest, we will defeat this measure. [Applause.]

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM]. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, in the time allotted me I shall not have opportunity to do more than allude to some of the main points involved in this matter.

The bill presented by my colleague, Mr. MCKENZIE, seeks to direct the Secretary of War to enter into a contract with Mr. Henry Ford, for the purchase of nitrate plants Nos. 1 and 2, and the power produced at Muscle Shoals, on the Tennessee River. The only question, therefore, is whether the contract set out in the bill is wise and provident or not. In discussing this matter I shall try to free my mind, so far as I can, of many impressions and perhaps prejudices, which I have heretofore had, and view the matter simply from its economic and legislative standpoint.

I have come to the conclusion, after an inspection of the contract submitted, taken with the knowledge I have of the subject gained through about one year's investigation on this very subject matter, that the contract presented ought not to be approved in its present form, and that unless it is modified in certain essential particulars, it ought to be unhesitatingly rejected by the Congress. My reasons for this attitude I want to briefly state.

First. It must be manifest to anyone who views the matter in any way dispassionately that the compensation to be paid by Mr. Ford for the property in question is entirely inadequate and out of reason. He proposes to pay $5,000,000 in cash, to be paid $1,000,000 a year for five years. In addition to this, he proposes to pay certain sums as interest on the investment of the United States in Dam No. 2, now being erected, and in Dam No. 3, to be hereafter erected, which interest will constitute interest on but a small portion of the sum invested by the Government, and much less than 4 per cent on this proportion. The Government will also be obliged to keep up both dams and insufficient payments are to be made by Ford for that purpose. As a matter of fact, therefore, the compensation to be paid is inconsequential and, aside from the $5,000,000, means a poor repayment to the Government of what it is compelled to invest.

In the first place, let us for a moment consider just exactly what Mr. Ford, and his corporation to come after him, gets by this transfer. First, he gets nitrate plant No. 1, costing approximately $13,000,000, and which was originally built for the production of atmospheric nitrogen by a modification of the Haber process. This plant was built in the most elaborate fashion. One thousand seven hundred acres of land surround it, purchased at prices from $60 to $70 an acre. One hundred and twelve permanent houses, costing from $6,000 to $19,000 each, are built there for the residences of officers, in an elegantly parked reservation. There is a clubhouse of a most durable and substantial nature, built at an expense of $120,000, and barracks for workmen and laborers to accommodate a very large number. At this point there are many large fireproof buildings, admirably adapted for all sorts of manufacturing enterprises, and a steam plant of superior design of 5,000 kilowatt-hours capacity.

At plant No. 2 there are 2,300 acres of ground, purchased at a similar cost. There are 137 permanent houses, which cost from $2,500 to $4,600 apiece. One hundred semipermanent houses, 300 negro houses, barracks for 15,000 workingmen. There is a clubhouse at this place which cost $341,000—most elaborate and well fitted. Forty miles of railroads are in and about the plant; 70 miles of sewers and water pipes. A water capacity of 222,000,000 gallons, and 21 miles of hard roads.

During the latter part of the war the Government built the Old Hickory powder plant at Nashville, Tenn. When this was afterwards about to be sold, the sulphuric-acid plants at this place were taken to Muscle Shoals and stored there and are now ready to be set up and operated, and all of which cost great sums of money. The idea of the ordnance officers was that by taking them to this plant they could have them ready for the making of ammonium sulphate, for which the No. 2 plant was not adapted, this being the preferable form of nitrogen to be used for fertilizer purposes.

At Dam No. 2, which is now being constructed, there are a large number of permanent houses, built at an expense of not less than $5,000 apiece in a beautiful circle on a terraced hillside. There are barracks and houses for laboring men to house at least 4,000 men. There are 15¼ miles of railroad, and 608.56 acres of land.

After the armistice was signed and the war over the Ordnance Department purchased a quarry, called the Waco Quarry, about 35 miles from Muscle Shoals, and proceeded to open up this quarry with funds not originally appropriated for that purpose, but so that the quarry might be so connected with the plant that there would be no opportunity afterwards of separating it from the nitrate plant. This quarry comprises 450 acres of land, 2 miles of railroad, many permanent houses, and a large number of drills, steam shovels, crushing plants, and other necessary apparatus.

Again, it is proposed in this bill to purchase on the Black Warrior River a location and build a 30,000-kilowatt generator plant, with a transmission line and right of way from this plant to Muscle Shoals, 60 miles, and donate the same to Mr. Ford, the cost to be defrayed by the Government, but to be not more than $3,472,487.25.

For all this Mr. Ford and those who come after him are to pay $5,000,000, a very small percentage of the value of the plant if it was wrecked and sold for junk. When the powder plant at Nitro, W. Va., was sold for junk, and this plant was not as good a plant as the nitrate plant No. 2, it sold for $8,500,000, and I am advised its purchasers made large profits out of it.

In all the great transactions in buying and selling which the United States Government has had since the World War began and since its conclusion there can be none found anywhere which evidences so scandalous a disregard of values as this, nor one in which the United States has made a poorer bargain. I can not understand how men of reason and common sense can come to the conclusion that such an offer is at all advantageous.

Second. But it is said the proposition should be accepted because the matter involved is not the matter of selling a plant for what we can get out of it, but that we must have in mind the ultimate good to the country and its people occasioned by such sale. In this connection several propositions are made, as follows: Mr. Ford will so handle this matter as to build up this particular section of country, and from his record heretofore will encourage proper social conditions and betterment among those employed by him; that to establish such an institution at Muscle Shoals will be to the vast benefit of that section of the country and all the people of the country generally; that he proposes to carry on the business of making fertilizers; and that this will make it possible for farmers to have cheap fertilizer for a long period to come.

Let us examine these propositions briefly: First, as to Mr. Henry Ford personally. Mr. Ford has thus far proven himself to be a skilled manufacturer of automobiles and has become vastly wealthy, and is perhaps the wealthiest man in the world. He has introduced good social working conditions among the workers at his various plants. But Henry Ford is an elderly man. His span of life can not be much longer prolonged. The grant being made here is not to Henry Ford, but to a corporation to be formed and to live after him. When Henry Ford passes from the stage we may expect his son, Edsel, and other members of his family to continue in the business, but with the changes of years control will gradually vest in a corporation, with all the ordinary proclivities of a corporation, the principal one of which is to make dividends for stockholders; and, as a matter of fact, so far as any particular desire to contribute to the welfare of the general public is concerned, Mr. Henry Ford and his son, Edsel, have been nothing extraordinary and out of the way. What Mr. Ford has made he has made for himself and still has it. Any contemplation of this matter we have, therefore, must be in view of the fact that in the future it will be conducted by a corporation.

Second. It is argued that this contract will carry out the proposition of section 124 of the national defense act and perpetuate for us a supply of cheap nitrogen for fertilizer purposes. An examination of the contract submitted shows the fallacy of this contention.

Under the contract Mr. Ford agrees that he—section 14—will manufacture at nitrate plant No. 2 "or its equivalent," at least 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen a year, if there is a demand for it. He does not agree to manufacture this nitrogen at plant No. 2, but may manufacture it at some "equivalent" plant. Again, he does not agree to manufacture this fixed nitrogen from atmospheric sources, or from any other sources, but to manufacture it by any process or in any way he desires. Thus he may manufacture it as sulphate of ammonia from by-product coke ovens or by any new process which may be discovered. All he is obliged to do is to manufacture the equivalent of 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen, or, if sulphate of ammonia is in greatest demand, 200,000 tons of this material, which is easily manufactured in many industrial chemical processes.

It can therefore be at once seen that Mr. Ford can use not only plant No. 1 for private manufacturing purposes, but plant No. 2 for the same purposes, if he desires, and where he has prepared for him cities into which he can move and power which he can use for 100 years in the manufacture of anything that the market demands. All he has to do is to prepare 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen, and he or his successors have done all they are required to do.

I am talking now not about what he ought to do but what his successors will do. Leave Henry Ford out of the question and consider it as it will be when he is gone and his successors, intent on the accumulation of wealth, are viewing the matter from a cold, calculating business standpoint.

How far will 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen go to supply the needs of the American farmer? In 1919 the American farmer used 190,000 tons of fixed nitrogen. This was composed of Chilean nitrates, fish scrap, commercial wastes, and ammonium sulphate. It will thus be seen that 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen will supply, at this time, about one-fifth of the needs of the American farmer. It has been estimated that the demand for commercial fertilizers will double in 10 years. This being true, and the production of 40,000 tons continuing through the 100-year term, it will be readily appreciated that before this term has lasted long the amount of nitrogen produced by Mr. Ford's company will be negligible. If anyone expects the company he leaves after him to do more than it is obliged to do, it expects to see a miracle in the business world. Any corporation which he forms will make more fertilizers than it is required to make only when it can find a market at favorable terms, and if this company is restricted to an 8 per cent earning, if it can make more than 8 per cent at something else, it will do something else. That has been the universal experience of mankind.

Bear in mind Ford's company is only obligated to make 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen in a year. Industrial chemistry is just in its infancy. It will be borne in mind that we have never used in this country the true Haber process, a process which made Germany absolutely independent of Chilean nitrates during the World War and by which process she to-day makes vast quantities of fixed atmospheric nitrogen.

The principal trouble with plant No. 1 at Muscle Shoals was in the process and the poor catalyst that was used. Recent discoveries have shown beyond question that with an improved catalyst that process can be greatly cheapened and improved. I have not the slightest doubt that within 20 years from this time we will be able to extract nitrogen from the air in any needed quantity with a very small expenditure of power. There is every indication of this, and no one can doubt it. Therefore the manufacture of 40,000 tons of atmospheric fixed nitrogen in 10 years may be a task such as will only require a small amount of the power produced at Muscle Shoals. At best, and if no improvements were to be made, it would not require more than 100,000 horsepower. No one to-day believes the cyanamid process is economical or the correct process, and if Henry Ford obtains Muscle Shoals he will not use it. He can not produce fertilizer there by the cyanamid process that can sell on the market at a reasonable price, and repeated demonstration has shown this to be true.

Having gone thus far, I want now to call your attention to the gravity of conveying to any person or corporation one of our great national assets for 100 years, with the privilege to carry it on beyond 10 years. Any nation that will so dispose of its national assets without reserving to itself the right to cancel such grant is unwise and improvident. I prophesy here and now that, if this bill becomes the law and this grant is made, even in our own generation those of us who favored it will have visited upon us the wrath and just condemnation of the people of the country. We have no right to disregard the policy which we have adopted for any individual or corporation. The water power act was wise and a piece of legislation of which we may well be proud. We ought to stand by it. It has been said this is a special case, and that this location of this plant was determined by section 124 of the national defense act, and therefore is not within a general rule. This also is a fallacy. Its location was determined, not because of the choice of Congress or because of the advice of those who passed upon the matter as advisers but was determined solely and alone by President Wilson, and was not in any way a war necessity.

We are looking at this matter with too small an horizon. Let us look ahead 50 years. The Muscle Shoals, in the Tennessee River, lies in a portion of the country and within about 200 miles of the following cities, with the following populations:

Birmingham, Ala	178,806
Memphis, Tenn	162,351
Nashville, Tenn	118,342
Chattanooga, Tenn	57,895
Knoxville, Tenn	77,818
Atlanta, Ga	200,616

Within the immediate circle of influence of this power are the States of Alabama, Georgia, Tennessee, and Mississippi, with a total present population of 9,372,509. The Creator, who wisely contrived all things, placed in the center of this district this great source of power for the use of the people who would live there in the centuries to come. Now, let us step ahead 50 years. Henry Ford is dead. Edsel Ford, his son, is gone. The Ford Co. has its directors located in New York or elsewhere. The cities I have mentioned have risen in population until they have from 500,000 to a million population in each. The population of the States of Alabama, Georgia, Tennessee, and Mississippi has doubled, and 20,000,000 people live there. The price of coal, already mounting to the sky in 1924, has advanced, and the supply has diminished until it is hardly available for power purposes. Oil has practically disappeared. In all the surrounding country are growing industries, requiring large amounts of power, and the ordinary demands of the people for heat and light and power have greatly increased. Everything is changed, and a thousand new inventions have come to more complicate the lives of the people and their struggle for existence. But located at Muscle Shoals, and controlling all the available natural power in this country, is a company with nonresident directors, who have probably available for sale 500,000 or 600,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity, which the company either uses for its own purposes or sells to this country. There is no other natural source of power in that locality. This company, controlling this vast power, is under no regulatory supervision, and can charge any rates for its power it desires, while at the same time the Government of the United States keeps up and maintains the very instruments by which it gets this power. The people, needing this power, and having a right to it by nature and by their citizenship, find themselves absolutely in the control of an institution that goes on for 100 years and then with a lease of life beyond that period, and with no power anywhere to regulate or control its extortionate charges.

What do you believe our grandchildren, who have to deal with these conditions, will think about our action then? What right have we to give away their just inheritance. You say this will be for the good of all the people. I say to you, the good of all the people requires that this be kept for them, and that any other course is unwise, unjust, and an act of utter folly on our part.

Just one more suggestion: It is said the best part of this contract is that plant No. 2 can be recovered by the Government for use in times of war. Does anyone know any institution in the United States which can not be taken over by the Government when war threatens? Everything we have is in this situation, and hence no special right goes to the Government by this provision. Again, let me call your attention to the fact that this contract does not provide that nitrate plant No. 2 shall be kept in its present state of readiness for immediate operation in time of war, but specifies that the plant "or its equivalent" shall be so kept. This means that if Mr. Ford, or his successor, prepares somewhere a plant which will produce 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen in a year and tenders such a plant to the Government when war comes, this is all he needs to do. So it may be that if, by improved process he finds he can manufacture this amount of fixed nitrogen in some small auxiliary plant, he has the whole of nitrate plant No. 2 for such purposes as he may care to use it for. Again, there will be produced at this plant, if this contract is signed, as primary horsepower in Dam No. 2, 100,000; in Dam No. 3, 80,000; in the steam plant No. 2, 55,000 kilowatt hours; at the Black Warrior station 30,000 kilowatt hours; and at No. 1 steam plant, 5,000 kilowatt hours. With all of this primary power he may do as he pleases. In addition, he has a large part of the year a great amount of additional horsepower, amounting to possibly 800,000 in all. The lowest available estimate of the value of this electric energy at 4 mills per kilowatt hour for primary power and 1 mill per kilowatt hour for secondary power, will produce, running 80 per cent of the time, almost $7,000,000 a year. Of course, anyone understands that the value of this power will increase by leaps and bounds as years go by.

My suggestions are these, if this bill is to be considered at all favorably: First, let it be provided that the plant at No. 2 shall be used for the manufacture of fertilizers to its full capacity now and hereafter. Second, let the period of leasing be 50 years. Third, either place this project within the full jurisdiction of the Federal Power Commission, under the water power act, or reserve in the bill itself the right of the Government to regulate rates and distribution of electric power produced at this plant.

I am not opposed to the leasing of this plant, but I am opposed to giving it away, and I am most seriously opposed to putting the people of the southeastern United States in the position where they will have no control and no protection against exactions for 100 years to come in the use of a power to which they are justly entitled and which was created by the Almighty for the welfare of our people. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 40 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to announce that I will not yield for interruptions.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, we have heard a great deal about the dangers to future generations if the contract is consummated under the Ford proposal. It is rather singular that so many dire things happen in connection with every proposal that comes before this House for consideration, and I am always amazed when I realize that notwithstanding all these weird stories about what is going to happen the Nation still lives. I am as much interested in the proper protection of every American interest as any other man can be. I have no obligation to any man who bids for the right to use the power at Muscle Shoals. I never saw Ford. I never had any conversation with anybody who represents Ford. Some year or more ago, I promised to make a study of the Muscle Shoals problem. I made an exhaustive study of it, without prejudice. I brought to the House the results of that study and my conclusions. I presented that study to you. I am under no obligations to follow out the conclusions I then reached, but I was thoroughly convinced that no better disposition could be made of the problem before us than the solution submitted by Henry Ford in his proposal.

For more than two years the proposals of Henry Ford have been in the possession of the Government. Under instructions from the Secretary of War, the Chief of Engineers wandered all over the face of the Nation pleading with people who might be qualified to undertake to operate this plant at Muscle Shoals. Not a bid was received from any source except the bid from Henry Ford. This bid has been before the American people now for more than two years. During all that period no attempt was made from any source to make a better offer than Mr. Ford had made, until the time arrived when it looked as if Congress was about to take action. Then this horde of men interested in water power and the transmission of electric energy, for sale at a profit, realizing that they could not get Muscle Shoals themselves on any bids they were willing to make, proposed to embarrass those who had made legitimate proposals. We have heard a lot in the last two or three days about the inadequacy of the proposals made by Mr. Ford. We are told that he is about to receive property that cost the Government more than $80,000,000 for the paltry sum of $5,000,000. We are told that he is about to get title to land, that upon this land there are paved streets, and under the streets are sewers, all of which were paid for out of the Treasury of the United States.

We have not been told that there were other plants constructed during the war, one at Nitro, W. Va., that cost $60,000,000, and one at Old Hickory that cost $85,000,000, and at each of these plants they had paved streets, sidewalks, houses, sewers, water supply, everything that goes to make up an inhabitable community. Yet when this property was sold after the war, not longer needed by the Government, how much did we receive for it? Twelve and one-half million dollars for property that cost the Government $145,000,000, and the bidders who received this property made no proposal to the Government of any kind either in the present or future to do any valuable thing in return for the people of America. [Applause.]

Oh, yes, Mr. Ford is, if this contract is entered upon, to receive property that cost the Government $84,000,000, and is to receive it for $5,000,000. But what is the value of the property? What is its cash value to-day? Nobody, not even the most optimistic of those who believe in higher values would suggest that it is more than $16,000,000 in value, and I wish to suggest that it is not worth half of that sum for any purpose except its use for a going concern in connection with the operation of Muscle Shoals. [Applause.]

I think it is fair that when Congress undertakes to deal with a great problem like this, national in its character, that every man in Congress should do the best he can to produce the best results, not only for the time being but for the future, and we ought to analyze who it is that we are proposing to deal with. Let us find out who these men are that have made the proposal. What is the character of the proposal that they have made. Are they worthy of any sort of reasonable consideration? Were they in earnest? Have they the ability? Have they the integrity? Have they the patriotism? Have they been loyal throughout the years in the development of problems of the Nation, so that when Congress comes to decide in whom they shall put their faith it can do so with a knowledge of all the facts? It is necessary to inquire most carefully into the bidders, their integrity, as to whether they are worthy to be intrusted with Government property at Muscle Shoals involving the national safety of the country in time of war and the manufacture of a cheaper supply of fertilizer for farmers of the Nation in time of peace.

We have been told by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], in the wonderful speech made yesterday, that the farmers' organizations of the Nation are not committed to the adoption of the Ford proposal at Muscle Shoals. I care not what the farmers' organizations may be committed to, the responsibility lies with us, and whether organizations that they say represent the farmers of the Nation are committed to this proposal or not, the question is, What is best for the real farmers of the Nation? [Applause.] That is the question with which we are called upon to deal. Whether anybody operating a farm anywhere within the confines of continental America has committed himself to the Ford proposal or against it, if I believe that what we are considering here is the best in the ultimate long run for the farmers of the Nation, I am for it regardless of what their attitude may be to-day. [Applause.]

I say that I come to you thoroughly committed to the belief that the best interests for the present-day farmer and the present-day citizen of the United States is in the adoption of the plan before us authorizing the Secretary of War to enter into a contract under the proposal submitted to the Nation by Henry Ford. [Applause.] Now it is necessary for us to scrutinize the pedigree of people making the proposal, and of those making a proposal antagonistic to this proposition here.

Let us look up the pedigree of the Alabama Power Co., the Tennessee Power Co., and the Memphis Power & Light Co. Who are they and what do they stand for? What do they propose? Who do these men that write the minority report say that this contract shall be let to? They have not had the courage to recommend anybody for anything. They criticize and let it go at that. They have made no recommendation that the contract shall be let to the people whom they write the report for, but they are opposed to letting the contract to Henry Ford. You can not run a great institution like this Nation on a mere negative recommendation. [Applause.] You must have supreme constructive force somewhere, and somebody must assume the responsibility for the constructive genius that makes for the wheels of progress in a great country like this, and it is because in the early days and from then on down to the present day that we have had men of courage, genius and integrity and ability that we have made the march of progress which has been the wonder of the world. [Applause.] We must not stop because somebody criticizes another great act which is now before us, and I do not propose to be driven away from my attitude toward this problem because, forsooth, one or two men without any knowledge of the facts in the case criticise the proposal. I am not afraid to place in the hands of a man who has succeeded in everything which he has undertaken a great problem for the benefit of the human race on the American continent, and that is what we propose to do in this. [Applause.]

Where is the Alabama Power Co.? When we search the record what do we find about them? At a mass meeting held in Montgomery, Ala., the capital of the State, on March 1, 1922, the people of Alabama declared the Alabama Power Co. to be a monopoly and they memorialized the Congress of the United States to save them from this Alabama Power Co. monopoly. They said among other things:

> With these considerations in view, and having in mind the freedom of our own people from a galling and oppressive water-power monopoly, the freedom of the American farmer from a burdensome and grinding fertilizer monopoly, the opening of a great river to navigation and the security of the country in the event of war, we urge the President and the Congress of the United States to accept the offer of Henry Ford, whom we verily believe seeks through his offer to dedicate to the American people and especially to the farmers of America his genius and fortune.

That is what I believe. If I did not believe it with all my soul I would not be standing here advocating the adoption of his proposal. Henry Ford made his great fortune because of the patronage given him by the people engaged in agriculture, both in the purchase of his automobile and his tractor. He owes the farmers of America an obligation it will be hard to repay.

I believe that he wants to leave a monument to his success, and he wants the monument to be a utilization of his fortune made out of the farmers of the Nation, the prosperity of the farmer, by placing in his hands the opportunity for a cheaper fertilizer than under any other condition he could buy it. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I have very great respect for the gentleman's judgment and am very much impressed by his argument, but in connection with the petition from Alabama what has the gentleman to say in reply to the other gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] a moment ago, that there is absolutely nothing, according to his contention, in this contract to limit the charges for electric power under the contract?

Mr. MADDEN. The States have the power to regulate charges, and we can not take that right away from the States.

Mr. HULL of Iowa rose.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not yield any further. The States have the power to regulate the charges, and anything we do here can not take that right away. There is no one who can sell electric current to the consumers of a State without selling it at the rates fixed by the States. That answers that question.

We find the Alabama Power Co. repudiated by its neighbors, the people of Alabama, and condemned by the records of Congress, and by the Department of Justice, and if these indictments of the integrity of the Alabama Power Co. are unjust, why do we not find at least one man rising and defending the Alabama Power Co.? Is anybody here willing to do that? If not, I shall pass on.

But let us examine another part of the record—

We find that the Alabama Power Co., through a subsidiary company, made an offer to the Government for the power at Muscle Shoals in 1913. But when the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, under direction of the Secretary of War, in 1921, invited the Alabama Power Co. along with other companies to make a proposal to the Government of a reasonable return from the investment of the United States at Muscle Shoals, what reply did the Alabama Power Co. make? This company made an evasive reply and, in the light of subsequent events and subsequent proposals made by the Alabama Power Co., the reply of the Alabama Power Co. to the Chief of Engineers in 1921 was one of duplicity and deception.

Now, let us look into the pedigree of the Tennessee Electric Power Co., one of the three companies signing the proposal of the power companies for the power at Muscle Shoals and their so-called offer to make fertilizers. It is disclosed in the recent hearings of the Committee on Military Affairs that the Tennessee Electric Power Co., along with other companies, is now defending in the Supreme Court of Tennessee an antitrust suit brought by the State of Tennessee against the Tennessee Electric Power Co. and allied interlocking companies, and in this suit the Tennessee Electric Power Co. is the controlling corporation in the group of defendant concerns. So we find the Tennessee Electric Power Co. in the Supreme Court of Tennessee defending a suit for the cancellation of its charter, because it is a monopoly violating the antitrust laws and the common law of the State of Tennessee.

And what answer does the record show that the Tennessee Electric Power Co.—then the Tennessee Power Co.—made to General Beach to the invitation of the Chief of Engineers in 1921 for a proposal to the Government on Muscle Shoals? The record shows that this company, along with three other companies, the Columbus Power Co., the Georgia Railway & Power Co., and the Central Georgia Power Co., all signing a joint statement addressed to the Chief of Engineers, declared that from a strictly business and commercial standpoint, and considering the cost of production of power at Muscle Shoals, private capital could not afford to undertake the Muscle Shoals water-power development, nor make investments to use its output; and further declared that the United States could not afford to invest additional public money to build the dam and hydroelectric plant at Muscle Shoals on the Tennessee River.

So they were there trying to persuade the public functionaries of the country that it was even unwise for the Government itself to invest, and under no circumstances could private capital hope to succeed.

Yet this very same Tennessee Electric Power Co., which signed these statements in 1921, on January 15, 1924, signs a proposal for this very power at Muscle Shoals, offering to pay, as they claim, $2,000,000 annually for this power. With this record, can this company, the Tennessee Electric Power Co., be intrusted with the people's property at Muscle Shoals?

Now, as to the Memphis Power & Light Co., the third company signing the power companies' proposals for the power and the manufacture of fertilizers at Muscle Shoals. This company can be dismissed from the attention of the House as having no reliable and dependable business standing, because this company has only recently come out of a receivership.

The closely knit connection between these three companies signing this power offer and this so-called fertilizer offer for Muscle Shoals is more intimately revealed by an examination of Moody's Manual, Poor's Manual, and the Directory of Directors. From this information we find that le. ling members of the boards of directors of both the Alabama Power Co. and the Memphis Power & Light Co. are also officers or directors of the Electric Bond & Share Co., which is a subsidiary holding company of the General Electric Co. We also find that W. M. Flook, who signs the fertilizer offer of the power companies, was the president of the Memphis Gas & Electric Co., which was reorganized in 1922 to form the present Memphis Power & Light Co.

So here we have the trio of power companies in discredit. Here are the triplets who have broadcast in the press of the country that they have made a better offer for Muscle Shoals than Henry Ford, in whom the American people have faith and who stands out as one of the world's greatest manufacturers, and whose financial credit no one questions.

Now, the power offer and the so-called fertilizer offer of these three companies clearly show in the record that what these companies want to get at Muscle Shoals is the power at Muscle Shoals, and they made an offer only in order to get this power. They look upon Muscle Shoals simply as a power proposition, and all they seek at Muscle Shoals is the power that is available there.

Now, in contrast, what does Henry Ford say? On October 11 he said:

> The Ford Motor Co. never has needed Muscle Shoals. We have water power sufficient for all our purposes. The only thing I could do at Muscle Shoals which I am not now able to do elsewhere would be to make fertilizer for the farmer.

Is there any wonder that the fertilizer-using farmers of this country appeal to this House to accept the Ford offer? And can it be wondered at that the farmers of the United States justly complain at the delay of Congress in accepting the Ford offer? Can any Member of the House justly and fairly say and honestly contend that the farmers' interest in Muscle Shoals should be placed in the hands of the Alabama Power Co. and its allies? If there is one Member of the House who contends that the Alabama Power Co. should have Muscle Shoals, this company's record in another instance will remove any doubt on the subject.

When the Alabama Power Co. at the eleventh hour made an offer for the power at Muscle Shoals under date of February 15, 1922, they proposed to allot 100,000 secondary horsepower free of cost for the operation of nitrate plant No. 2; but this same Alabama Power Co., true to its course of deception and its ever flagrant disregard of every principle of square dealing in its power offer of January 15, 1924, proposes that the farmer shall pay cost for the power furnished to the Alabama Power Co.'s fertilizer corporation. When the Alabama Power Co. in 1922 made an offer of free power for nitrate plant No. 2 as a cheap bait to the farmers and to Congress, knowing that nobody would take No. 2 plant and run it without controlling the power at Muscle Shoals, with one grand burst of generosity to the farmers they said, "We will furnish you power without cost to make your fertilizer"; but when this same Alabama Power Co. in 1924 is so pinched by Henry Ford's offer that the Alabama Power Co. found itself forced to make some kind of a fertilizer offer it forgets its tender feelings of 1922 for the farmers of the country, and says, "We will charge you farmers cost."

Now let us take the entire group of nine power companies signing the letter of January 8, 1924, to Secretary Merrill, of the Federal Power Commission. These companies operate in the southeastern States, in North and South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, and Alabama, and is there a single Member of the House from any of these States who will stand up and defend these power monopolies? And is there a single Member of the House from any of these States who will tell the House that these companies should have Muscle Shoals, and that Henry Ford should not have Muscle Shoals? And, finally, is there a Member of the House from any Southern State who will rise and say that he is ready to cast his vote in favor of this power group having Muscle Shoals against Henry Ford's offer for Muscle Shoals?

Now, since we find that not a single Member of the House from the South is in favor of these power companies located in the South and doing business in the South, then upon what pretext or excuse can the Members of the House from the Eastern States, from the Middle States, from the Lake States, from the Mississippi Valley States, from the Mountain States, or from the Pacific States say that these power companies should have Muscle Shoals and that Henry Ford should not have Muscle Shoals?

Now last, but not least, the stock of the Alabama Power Co., is controlled by a foreign corporation, a Canadian company, and the stock of this Canadian company is controlled by British owners. Whatever may be the differing views among all of the Members of the House, since every Member of the House is an American, no Member of the House will fail to approve section 22 of the McKenzie bill as reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, which provides that no stock or bonds issued by any company or subsidiary company in connection with the Government's Muscle Shoals property shall be owned or controlled by any foreign corporation, citizen, or subject. This provision in the bill excludes, and rightfully excludes, the Alabama Power Co., and as for the power companies allied with the Alabama Power Co. they are merely stool pigeons.

When Members of the House read the views of the majority of the House Committee on Military Affairs as set down in its report to the House on the McKenzie bill for acceptance of the Ford offer for Muscle Shoals, all those who realize that we are dealing with a national problem of far-reaching importance will be in hearty accord with the views of the majority, because they propose a policy at Muscle Shoals founded on the national defense act of 1916, and they have wisely measured the proposals made for the people's property at Muscle Shoals by the service which the people's property at Muscle Shoals will render to the Nation in time of war, and by the service which Muscle Shoals will render to the farmers of the country in times of peace.

The report of the majority of the committee, and its recommendations, will be approved by all fair-minded people who read the report, and there will be full agreement with the committee that there is but one proposal which is sufficiently comprehensive and satisfactory in its terms to be accepted by Congress.

That proposal which the committee finds acceptable has been before Congress for more than two years. Other proposals have imitated its form and copied its terms as nearly as they dared, but none of the bidders have squarely faced the responsibilities at Muscle Shoals except one—a bidder whose remarkable success in everything he has undertaken has excited the admiration and confidence of the Nation.

I stated last year that I looked upon this proposal simply as a business proposition. When we passed section 124 of the national defense act in 1916 we undertook a nitrogen program in this country.

Brought down to June 30, 1923, our expenditures under this program have reached a total of $111,741,369, and adding to this the $5,564,090 expended on the Wilson Dam from June 30, 1923, to the present time, we have a grand total investment of $117,305,459 at Muscle Shoals. The expenditures to June 30, 1923, are as follows:

Investment to June 30, 1923.

Construction cost:
Nitrate plant No. 1	$12,887,941
Nitrate plant No. 2 (including $1,392,962.88 on account of Waco Quarry)	67,555,355
Gorgas-Warrior plant and transmission line	4,979,782
Dam No. 2 (Wilson Dam) (including commitments under contracts)	20,145,715
	105,568,793

Maintenance cost (including experimental operations at nitrate plants and research laboratory):
Dam No. 2		$359,593
Nitrate plants:
No. 1	$923,765
No. 2	3,823,272
		4,747,037
Research laboratory		1,065,946
		6,172,576
Total		111,741,369

Except for increased appropriations and expenditures the situation to-day is not different from that of a year ago, and I can do no better than quote from the statement made by me on the floor of the House February 3, 1923, and revise this statement to bring the figures down to June 30, 1923:

1. Dam No. 2—Wilson Dam—is incomplete, and Dam No. 3 has not even been started. So we have no water power.

2. Nitrate plant No. 1, originally designed to produce 9,000 tons of fixed nitrogen in the form of ammonium nitrate, employing a modification of the Haber process, has been completed only up to one-fourth of its capacity; was purely an experimental venture, and up to this time has not proven successful. The experiment has cost $12,887,941, and an additional outlay for new machinery costing in the neighborhood of $2,000,000 would be necessary if further experiments are to be undertaken. Furthermore, the employment of this method is fraught with great danger from explosion of the high-pressure tanks in which nitrogen and hydrogen are impounded. To put the plant on a production basis employing the latest approved methods would cost approximately another $4,000,000.

3. Nitrate plant No. 2, employing the cyanamide process, has been completed to its designed capacity of 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen in the form of ammonium nitrate and was operated successfully during a two weeks' trial run, but the cyanamide process is considered by the experts to be obsolete as a fertilizer process, which most probably will make it necessary to replace the machinery and to some extent the buildings.

That is a rather doleful picture after an expenditure of $117,000,000; but if you will take the time to delve into the mass of data bearing on the subject, you will find that I have given you the actual facts. Now, having gone this far, what is the best way out? We have an obligation to discharge to the American people. We are responsible for there having been used well over $100,000,000 of their money, and they expect and we owe them a proper return on it. Shall we go on in the face of what we have experienced and make renewed efforts to make a go of the thing ourselves, irrespective of what the ultimate cost might be? Let us examine carefully what this course would quite certainly mean.

In the first place we would have to complete the Wilson Dam—Dam No. 2—estimated to cost from June 30, 1923, an additional $23,289,284. And then, to make up for the defects or shortcomings of the present layout, so as to put the plants on a going basis that fertilizer of a suitable type, in adequate quantities and marketable at a reasonable price may be produced and that facilities at all times may be available for the manufacture of explosives and other war materials, we would find it necessary to appropriate approximately these additional sums:

1. Auxiliary or reserve water supply to stabilize the flow of the Tennessee River that a uniform amount of power would be available the year around	$20,000,000
2. For remodeling nitrate plant No. 1	4,000,000
3. For remodeling nitrate plant No. 2	10,000,000
4. For a phosphoric acid plant to meet the demand for a mixed fertilizer	15,000,000
5. Operating fund	10,000,000
Total	59,000,000

These make a total of $59,000,000. Add to that the $23,289,000 to complete the Wilson Dam and the $117,000,000 already invested and our total outlay will have amounted to $199,594,000. In other words, we will have to sink another $82,289,000 into the venture before we can function on an economical business basis, excluding, of course, let me emphasize, any return whatever on the investment. I seriously doubt if under Government operation we could even include in the selling price of the fertilizer other usual items of overhead and keep the price at a figure which the farmer could afford to pay. What is the alternative? We can not stop. We owe it to the Nation to see the thing through.

The farmer needs nitrates, and the very life of the Nation may at some time hinge upon our ability to supply this necessary munitions ingredient to the Army and Navy. The answer is to go ahead at all hazards, or, I should say, in spite of all hazards, or to let private enterprise step in and do the job for us.

Now, let us see what private enterprise has to offer. I refer to the Ford offer.

In the first place we must put up, according to current estimates, $48,289,000, dating from June 30, 1923, to complete the Wilson Dam and to build Dam No. 3, to be located about 15 miles upstream from Dam No. 2, the work on both dams to be prosecuted by Mr. Ford at actual cost. That would end the demands upon the Federal Treasury. We would then have invested $160,000,000, instead of the $200,000,000 that would be necessary if the Government should determine to finish and operate the plants, and, of course, it should be borne in mind that the $200,000,000 does not include any money whatever for Dam No. 3, estimated to cost $25,000,000.

Congress having provided the money for the two dams, to complete one and to build in its entirety another, Mr. Ford then agrees—

First. To operate nitrate plant No. 2 in the manufacture of nitrates at its full present capacity, namely, 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen per annum, for a period of 100 years.

Second. To maintain nitrate plant No. 2 at all times in efficient modernized operating condition for the use of the Government in time of war.

Third. To provide fertilizer to the full capacity of nitrate plant No. 2, with profit, if any, limited to 8 per cent above the fair actual cost of production.

Fourth. To supply such quantity of fertilizers, mixed or unmixed. An agreement to furnish mixed fertilizer composed of nitrogen, phosphoric acid, and potash will necessitate the erection by Mr. Ford at his own expense of a phosphoric acid plant at Muscle Shoals, estimated to cost $15,000,000, which the Government would have to do if we should decide to operate ourselves.

Fifth. To research fertilizer production and to employ such improved methods as may be found successful.

Sixth. That the capital of $10,000,000 of the company to be formed shall be liable for the fulfillment of the contract, backed up—please note this—by Mr. Ford's entire personal estate and that of his heirs and assigns.

I do not think any of you entertain any question but that the purposes for which the undertaking was authorized will be entirely fulfilled under this offer, and I think you will all agree that the guaranties are wholly adequate. So assuming, I will now address myself to the consideration proposed by Mr. Ford.

In the first place, he offers to purchase nitrate plant No. 1, nitrate plant No. 2, the Waco Quarry, and a steam power plant and transmission line to be built by Mr. Ford or a company incorporated by him to take the place of the Gorgas steam plant and transmission line, sold since his offer of May 31, 1922, all for $5,000,000 in cash, and, in addition, agrees to valuable contract obligations. Let us analyze this for a moment. I have already told you of the contract obligations. We have invested in these four units $85,423,078, but, as I have shown you, they are practically valueless unless we sink another $82,289,000 into the entire venture, or $107,000,000 if, under Government control, it should be decided to build Dam No. 3; and I do not think there is any question but that this dam must not only be built but an auxiliary water flow provided besides, if sufficient power is to be generated at all times to make it possible to meet the demand for fertilizer. If this be true as to Government operation, it applies with equal force to Mr. Ford. He will incur no immediate expense on account of the dams, but he will have to put out $59,000,000 to get the plants on a going basis, the same as the Government would have to do. So he is not getting such a wonderful bargain after all. He agrees to pay $5,000,000 for what we have paid $85,000,000, but to use which he will have to expend another $59,000,00; and we must not forget that the $85,000,000 represents Government construction costs, and war-time costs at that.

That disposes of everything but the dams. To June 30, 1923, we had invested in the Wilson Dam, including maintenance costs, $20,505,308. Under Mr. Ford's offer we must commit ourselves to a further outlay for the Wilson Dam and Dam No. 3 of $48,289,284 from June 30, 1923. Let us see what his proposition is as to these. After their completion, which he is to do, he agrees to lease the water power derived therefrom for a period of 100 years on the following terms:

1. To maintain at his own expense the power houses and all equipment incident thereto, returning the same at the end of the lease unimpaired.

2. To pay $35,000 annually for repairs, maintenance, and operation of Dam No. 2, its gates and locks, and $20,000 per annum for repairs, maintenance, and operation of Dam No. 3, its gates and locks, during the life of the lease. The sum of $55,000 has been estimated as sufficient for these purposes.

3. To pay $200,000 annually as rental for the first six years on Dam No. 2, and thereafter during the life of the lease 4 per cent interest on the sum necessary to be expended for the completion of said dam, power house, and machinery, and for completing the acquiring of lands and flowage rights.

4. To pay as rental for Dam No. 3, $160,000 per annum for the first three years, and thereafter 4 per cent interest on the entire cost of constructing said dam, power house, and machinery, including cost of lands and flowage rights.

5. To establish a sinking fund by the semiannual payment of $23,373, which sum, if compounded at 4 per cent semiannually, will amount to $49,071,935 at the end of the lease, and if compounded at 4½ per cent interest will amount at the end of the lease to $58,570,003. It has been claimed, and it is probably true, that this fund could be handled by the Federal reserve banks to accomplish this result, and practically without expense.

6. To furnish free 200 horsepower for operating locks at Dam No. 2 and 100 horsepower for operating locks at Dam No. 3. This would save the Government the cost of operating the locks on the Muscle Shoals Canal, estimated to range from $35,000 to $85,000 per annum.

When you analyze it, that is not a bad proposition at all. For a period of 100 years the Government is freed of any expense in connection with these dams, locks, and power houses and machinery; it receives a fairly substantial return on approximately two-thirds of its investment in the dams, and in the end has repaid to it practically the whole of such investment. And, gentlemen, remember that throughout that period the farmer will have been getting his fertilizer and the Government will have had at its disposal a plant fully and modernly equipped and ready to produce explosives and other war materials.

The Government will have been freed from all the hazards attendant upon such a vast enterprise, it will have been saved the expense of research and experimentation, and the burden will have fallen upon others to keep these plants equipped to conform with the march of progress.

Now, it is not my purpose to urge you to align yourselves on one side or the other of this proposition. I have striven to give you the plain unvarnished facts as I have found them so that you might be the better equipped to determine the matter for yourselves. It is a business proposition with me, purely and simply. I feel that we owe it to the taxpayer, to the farmer, and to the Nation to finish the undertaking and get it into operation at the earliest date practicable, and, so believing, my chief aim has been to get for you the facts so that you would be the better able to determine upon that course which will work out to the greatest advantage of the Federal Treasury, not just at this time, but throughout the years. I have no concern, if we choose to let others act for us, as to who they are, what section they hail from, or what their politics may be, other than to be certain that their past business record is beyond reproach and that satisfactory guaranties are given. I am perfectly frank to say that I know of no person or group of persons who have demonstrated a bigger capacity to handle a large undertaking of this character than Mr. Ford. Therefore, gentlemen, it resolves itself into just this: Do you wish to sink another $107,000,000 into this Muscle Shoals project, in the light of your experience thus far, to incur all the hazards incident to the conduct of the business, to commit the Government to the continual expense of upkeep of such a vast project, a large portion of which has only potential value, and to the expense of keeping the entire plant in a modern productive state, or do you think the wiser course would be to accept Mr. Ford's offer, put only enough additional in the venture to complete both dams, and sell and lease under the terms that he has proposed? My own conviction is that we should accept the Ford offer and get out of the business. I feel that by so doing we will have acted so as better to provide for the common defense and for the promotion of the general welfare.

The question to answer with regard to the Ford proposal and the Federal power act is: Will the House fail to protect the public welfare, fail to protect the consumers of the power at Muscle Shoals, if the House accepts the Ford offer and leaves him free of the Federal power act?

The Federal Power Commission has no authority to control or regulate rates of power. The regulation and control of such rates are conceded to the various States which have regulatory bodies.

The Federal Power Commission has no authority under the Federal power act to require Mr. Ford to distribute power to any particular service or to any particular territory, and if they did still the commission could not control or regulate the rates at which the power was furnished, since this regulation is wholly within the States.

It seems, therefore, as respecting the cost of power to consumers and the rates charged, to bring Mr. Ford under the Federal Power Commission will merely give the commission the opportunity under the power act to increase the cost of power to the consumer by charging under its rules and regulations 25 cents per installed horsepower, which would be at Muscle Shoals $218,500 annually.

On the other hand, there are some economic features of the Ford offer which are very fundamental:

First, Mr. Ford proposes to amortize the cost of the dams, locks, and power-house facilities, and it is most probable that the power companies and their brokers and bankers opposing and fighting the Ford offer do so more on account of this principle than anything else.

When the capital invested in a power project is amortized, the cost of power is reduced to maintenance and operation, but this economic principle is not found in the power act, nor are power companies expected or required to make rates based upon the cost of maintenance and operation, even though they might be required to amortize their bonds.

There is one other phase of the Ford offer that is new, and that is that the cost to the United States of the navigation improvements at Muscle Shoals is entirely paid for by Mr. Ford under the Ford proposal. This is a great contrast with the millions upon millions that Congress is annually appropriating for navigation improvements, with not 1 cent repaid.

There is still another thing in Mr. Ford's offer that is strikingly new and fundamentally sound, and that is that he does propose to manufacture fertilizers at a profit not to exceed 8 per cent on the fair actual annual cost of production thereof. No power company receiving a license from the Federal Power Commission has ever offered, nor has the commission required—not having the authority to so require—any power company to fix its maximum profits. This establishes a new economic precedent that should be applied to other of our great water-power resources when leased by the Federal Government.

The value of Chilean nitrates imported into this country for the fiscal years 1922 and 1923 and seven months of the fiscal year 1924 is in excess of $80,000,000, and the export duty paid to Chile on the importation of this Chilean nitrate is in excess of $24,000,000.

When we consider this bill for nitrates for this period and the export tax paid to Chile, is it more important to the country to take the first step to put an end to this Chilean nitrate tax upon the farmers of the country and other users of Chilean nitrate by accepting the Ford offer or to reject it by bringing the Ford offer under the Federal power act and Federal Power Commission? And if the Federal Power Commission is given all the control under the Federal power act at Muscle Shoals, will it be worth what we have paid to Chile in the fiscal years 1922 and 1923 and seven months of the fiscal year 1924?

I want to say in conclusion that the call back to the farm is stronger to-day in the minds and the hearts of the American people than ever before. There is more need for the conservation of agriculture for the future of our people than there has ever been before. We should never fail to utilize every facility that may be placed at our disposal in order that the prosperity of America may be assured. We are here assured by the proposal of Henry Ford that he will operate nitrate plant No. 2 to its full capacity during all the period of its control. Here is what he said when he appeared upon the acceptance of the proposal:

> Upon the acceptance of the Ford proposal the promises, undertakings, and obligations shall be binding upon the United States and jointly and severally upon Henry Ford, his heirs, representatives, and assigns, and the company, its successors and assigns, and all the necessary contracts, leases, deeds, and other instruments necessary or appropriate to effect the purposes of this proposal shall be duly executed and delivered by the respective parties above mentioned.

Section 23 as it appears in the bill before you has a provision with reference to this. My judgment is that it covers every word that is carried in this language that I have just read, but if there is any doubt or to obviate any doubt that may be in the minds of anyone I propose to offer as a substitute for the language now in the bill the language of this Ford proposal. [Applause.] I want to see agriculture prosper. I want to see America and its people happy; I want in time of peace to furnish every facility for the prosperity and happiness of the fundamental industry of the land, agriculture, and in time of war I want these great facilities at Muscle Shoals to be so preserved and protected in the intervening years that we will be able in a moment's notice to take control of them and utilize them to the fullest extent of our capacity in the interest of the safeguarding of America and her institutions. I want, in short, for this House before we complete the work now before us to lay a foundation for a great national conservation of agricultural forces and hand this conservation policy down to the generations who are to people this continent in the ages to come. [Applause.] Gentlemen, you can not do any more patriotic thing than to vote for the Ford proposal, ignoring the arguments which have been made here against it. There is nothing to them; they have no merit, no worth. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed, for and in behalf of the United States of America, to execute the following contracts:
> For the purpose of carrying out the terms of this agreement, Henry Ford will form a corporation (hereinafter referred to as the company) with a capital stock of $10,000,000, or more, of which at least $10,-

000,000 shall be paid in, in cash, to be controlled by Henry Ford, which company will immediately enter into and execute all necessary or appropriate instruments of contract to effectuate this agreement.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to introduce an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment proposed by Mr. BURTON: Line 5, on page 2, strike out the words "to be controlled by Henry Ford."

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I have introduced this amendment not because of any objection to the control by Henry Ford of this corporation. I am convinced that if this contract should be made, it would be well to have the corporation controlled by a man of his very marked business ability and of his large capital. I make this proposition in the way of an amendment, which possibly I may withdraw, because I am convinced that this proposed requirement is not legally binding. It is another instance of provisions in this bill which "Keep the word of promise to the ear and break it to the hope."

The general principle in regard to corporations is that the ownership of stock not only carries with it rights, but responsibilities as well; and from both of these standpoints this provision is not valid, nor is it in accordance with public policy to provide that one person should have control of a corporation.

We may begin at the very beginning. Under the laws of the respective States incorporators file letters of incorporation. These are deposited with the secretary of state or some similar official, and then books are opened for subscriptions to the stock. The privilege of subscribing is free and open to anyone who will come forward. Perhaps Mr. Ford might be the first to present his name as a subscriber. But you could not compel the incorporators or others having the books in charge to refuse subscriptions from anyone else. That, however, is but incidental.

Now, when it comes to the ownership of stock, it carries a right. That right is not only to have ownership, but disposition as well. In the antitrust decisions it was repeatedly held that an arrangement by which the stockholders of a corporation turned over their stock to a trustee—the name "Trust" was derived from those arrangements under which the holders of stock in a variety of corporations turned over the right of voting and of controlling the respective corporations—was contrary to public policy.

The courts, whenever the question was brought before them, decided that those agreements were invalid. And so the courts must decide that in the case of any agreement like this, an agreement that the stock of a corporation shall be owned or controlled by one individual, thereby restraining the right of disposition, thereby restraining those incidents which belong to the management of corporations, is invalid.

Now, there is another provision in this bill as to which I think there might be some doubt, and that is the requirement that a majority of the stock, or perhaps all of the stock, shall be owned by American citizens. I am inclined to think that would be held valid, because a question of national policy is involved, and that question is peculiarly acute in view of the fact that this corporation agrees to turn over its work to the Government in time of war or emergency for the manufacture of explosives.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that I want to have read for information only.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak on the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], which is before the House now, is it not?

Mr. BEGG. There is nothing that I shall say that will keep the gentleman from speaking on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEGG: Page 11, line 11, after the word "explosives," strike out the period and insert a semicolon and add the following: "Provided, That if Henry Ford, his heirs, successors, or assigns, or the 'company' so to be organized, its successors or assigns, fail for three consecutive years to manufacture annually not less than 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen for exclusive use as fertilizer, then, and in that event, every contract of sale or lease made by the said United States with said Henry Ford, his heirs, successors, or assigns, or with said 'company' named in section 1, its successors or assigns, shall be void, and all property, real or personal, leases, rights, and other privileges held by any of the above-named persons at said Muscle Shoals shall revert to and become the property of the Government of the United States. No contracts shall be entered into pursuant to the provisions hereof unless they embody as a part thereof these provisions. The conditions herein provided shall become operative on and after six years from the date such contracts are entered into."

Mr. BEGG. Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I should like to find myself in a position to support this bill. I have made an honest effort to study this bill with that in view, and I have listened to practically all the debates for and against the bill, and I have convinced myself that there is only one excuse for voting for this proposition, and that excuse would be that it is for the purpose of getting cheaper fertilizer for the American farmer. Now, if the bill does not do that, every one of us would be condemned by the results following our vote if we voted for it; and if the bill does that, and if the proponents of the contract and of the bill are absolutely sincere in their motive, namely, to produce fertilizer for the American farmer, there is not a line or word in this amendment that will hurt the proposed bill or that the signers of the proposed contract will refuse to sign or accept.

There has been much argument about what this bill binds and what it does not, and there has been much argument and many statements about whom the other propositions come from. All of that, gentlemen, I submit to you, is irrelevant. Either we are prompted to do this thing because we want to produce fertilizer or else there must be some other motive. I take it that the only argument that is worth a fig in favor of the bill is the fertilizer argument.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I can not yield at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BEGG. And if that is true, then every man before he casts his vote ought to satisfy himself that the Government, or the people through the Government, will receive fertilizer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEGG. Now, gentlemen, let us come right down to the point. We are not lawyers but we are business men. Why a contract at all between men? The only reason for a contract between men—and I am talking about a contract in writing setting forth the articles to which there has been a common or mutual agreement—is to compel both parties thereto to perform the provisions of the contract.

Now, I submit to you that if I were going to be a signer of this contract, undertaking to manufacture fertilizer, and if I wanted to evade the fulfillment of that contract, I can find at least three ways out of it, and I am not a lawyer. There are three gates that are just as wide open as it is possible for a hole to be left in a written instrument. But, my friends—and I am talking to you men who are sincerely for the Ford proposition—if you will incorporate this provision I will take my chances on Mr. Ford, or his successors or his assigns, ever escaping with the property of Muscle Shoals without producing to the country 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen for the sole manufacture and use in commercial fertilizer.

Now, this amendment provides that—

If Henry Ford, his heirs, successors, or assigns, or the company so to be organized, its successors or assigns, fail for three consecutive years to manufacture annually not less than 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen for exclusive use as fertilizer, then and in that event every contract of sale or lease made by the said United States with said Henry Ford, his heirs, successors, or assigns, or with said company named in section 1, its successors or assigns, shall be void, and all property, real or personal, leases, rights, and other privileges held by any of the above-named persons at said Muscle Shoals shall revert to and become the property of the Government of the United States.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I can not yield, as I will not have time enough. Is that fair to Mr. Ford? There is a provision in the amendment which I did not read, to the effect that it does not become effective until six years after the signing of the contract, and then if he fails for three consecutive years, or nine years, the Government ought to get the property back and the Government ought not to be compelled to go into court and stand a lawsuit for 100 years, because, as I said in the beginning, the only excuse I can find for voting for the Ford Muscle Shoals proposition, to my way of thinking, is so as to produce nitrates, and if this production of nitrates is a certainty then this amendment would not hurt anything.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I appreciate the sincerity of the gentleman, and I take it the gentleman believes, after studying the hearings, that the section with reference to the production of fertilizer really means what his amendment states, but out of an abundance of precaution the gentleman has offered the amendment.

Mr. BEGG. Who has written this amendment?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The gentleman from Ohio; the one you are offering. I say that amendment in substance and in letter is what you understand the friends of Henry Ford claim this section means.

Mr. BEGG. Absolutely; but there is this difference, I will say to my good friend from Alabama——

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. My position is that it in no sense changes the meaning.

Mr. BEGG. Then it will not hurt it.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. If it does not change the meaning of the section and, if accepted, I assume the gentleman's position is that he would vote for this bill.

Mr. BEGG. Absolutely; and I will say there are lots of other gentlemen who will vote with me.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, having yielded so much, I would like to ask for three more minutes. I have not taken any time in general debate and I will not take any more time than that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEGG. Now, in answer to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] there is this difference: What is in the hearings is absolutely of no effect and is not binding as against what is in the contract, and if you gentlemen are wise you will put in the contract what you think the hearings mean, and that is only what I have tried to do. I want to vote for this bill, but I can not vote for it unless it is amended. I have to answer to my conscience for my vote and to nobody else, and I am not at all interested in who the other bidders are or whether there are one or more.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I will yield, although I hate to do so.

Mr. BURTNESS. I take it the gentleman really attempts to set out a legislative guide for the court in determining whether or not a breach of the contract has occurred, rather than to leave that matter solely to the judgment of the court.

Mr. BEGG. No; I do more than that. I provide that no contract shall be entered into pursuant to the provisions hereof unless they embody these provisions as a part thereof. In other words, if this is adopted into law the Secretary of War, whosoever he may be, can not write a contract without this particular section of the law being written into the contract. It is nothing more or less than a forfeiture of all the rights and privileges and the personal and real property acquired at Muscle Shoals if he fails for three consecutive years to perform that part of the contract.

I want to ask my friend from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] if he is willing to state before the House that he will accept this amendment? I think that is important and I would like to have everybody hear his reply to that question.

Mr. McKENZIE. I did not catch the gentleman's question.

Mr. BEGG. I want to ask the gentleman point-blank whether he, as the leader for the bill on the Republican side, will accept this amendment?

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman will pardon me for taking half a minute of his time, I will make a statement.

Mr. BEGG. I will.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to say to my good friend from Ohio, and to all others in the House who hold the same views as the gentleman from Ohio, that there has been only one purpose, so far as the chairman of this committee is concerned and the members working with him, and the other members, too, for that matter, and that was to bring into the House a proposal in language so specific that there could be no question about Mr. Ford having to perform the contract.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio may proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to say to the gentleman from Ohio that our committee spent days on this particular language, and after we adopted it we felt it was absolutely specific and certain. I feel we have it so written, but I want to say to my good friend from Ohio, and to every man in this House, that as one of the men who have stood consistently for the Ford offer, that I want nitrates made at Muscle Shoals for the farmer. I want nitrates made at Muscle Shoals for the farmers, and I want Henry Ford bound to do that, and I am sure that Henry Ford means to be bound, and has been frank about it, and I have no objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio. [Applause.]

Mr. BEGG. I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN], representing the minority side, if he will accept it?

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. BEGG. I will yield for a question; yes.

Mr. WINGO. You are trying to get an agreement, and I want to make a suggestion.

Mr. BEGG. I am not trying to get an agreement other than if the leaders of the bill are willing to say they will accept this amendment I think we can gain a lot of time in getting on.

Mr. WINGO. I want to say to the gentleman that whenever we come to that provision of the bill——

Mr. BEGG. There is no reason why you can not oppose it then, if you want to.

Mr. WINGO. Those who are careful to protect the rights of the United States Government along the very line the gentleman is striving to protect them are going to protest very vociferously against the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. BEGG. That is your perfect right.

Mr. WINGO. I want to do just what the gentleman does, but I think the gentleman's amendment destroys the very thing we are trying to do.

Mr. BEGG. I want to ask the gentleman from Mississippi if he will accept the amendment?

Mr. QUIN. My judgment of it is that the language the gentleman is employing there does not hurt this bill.

Mr. BEGG. Not a bit, if you are sincere.

Mr. QUIN. My judgment is the language which the gentleman has employed does not hurt this bill. There is provided in the bill everything that the gentleman's amendment proposes to carry out, and, so far as I am concerned, I would be willing to accept that amendment, as long as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE], the author of the bill and the leader on the majority side, has accepted it.

Mr. BEGG. That is all I ask for.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Rhode Island. Does not your amendment still leave a loophole? I note you say for three successive years.

Mr. BEGG. If he fails for three successive years.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Rhode Island. Yes. The first and second year he might not manufacture any, and he might manufacture 40,000 tons the third year, and then the fourth and fifth year nothing.

Mr. BEGG. Absolutely; that is correct.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Rhode Island. And in nine years he might fail to manufacture six years out of the nine.

Mr. BEGG. You are absolutely correct.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I asked the gentleman to yield because I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama——

Mr. BEGG. Ask your question, because I have another statement I want to make.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will ask for more time for you. This is a very interesting point in this subject, and I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] to this fact: He read from the original proposal of Henry Ford, if I understood it correctly. Is not the one you had in your hand the original proposal? I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the original proposal is a much stronger and more binding proposal than the one that is now in the bill as section 14.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. No; I am reading from the last proposal of Henry Ford, dated May 31, 1922. This is the last and final proposal.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is not the same thing, because it has been changed.

Mr. MURPHY. Will the gentleman yield? I will ask for five minutes more for the gentleman, because this is an important matter.

Mr. BEGG. I have a little more time, and I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. MURPHY. There is quite a debate going on up here as to the real meaning of your amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman be allowed five additional minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is the gentleman's amendment offered to the section which has been read?

Mr. BEGG. I will say to the gentleman that it is not, but it is the crux of all the other amendments, perhaps, on the passage of the bill, and it was only read for information, and I believe the gentleman would gain time if we could thrash this question out at this particular time. I am not anxious to take up more of your time, but I would like to have one more minute in order to make a statement.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, it is very desirable to have time to examine the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. BEGG. Certainly; and the vote will not come until to-morrow, anyway, and some of us had no opportunity in general debate. I apologize for taking as much of your time as I have, but I have consumed at least half of it by yielding.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MURPHY. I would like to ask my colleague what would be the effect if Mr. Ford, under the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, were to fail to produce for two years, and on the third year produced according to his contract; and then for two years should fail again and produce again on the third year; in other words, if he should produce only two years out of six?

Mr. BEGG. All right; he could hold his property under my amendment if that condition prevailed.

Mr. MURPHY. Do you not think it ought to be made a little stronger?

Mr. BEGG. I would be perfectly willing. Every man in the House will have a chance to study this amendment to-morrow and I would be perfectly willing to make that impossible. I was trying to draft it in such a way that it would be absolutely fair to Mr. Ford and yet the people would be absolutely sure that they were going to get the fertilizer.

Mr. MURPHY. I want to say to my colleague it ought to be made to apply to every year. There is absolutely no excuse for this bill except the one that it is going to produce nitrates for the farmers.

Mr. BEGG. We all agree on that.

Mr. MURPHY. Then it should be every year.

Mr. JONES. Does not the gentleman think that this being a material provision in the contract, if Mr. Ford violates one of the terms of the contract he would forfeit the entire contract?

Mr. BEGG. No; because there is not anything in the bill which authorizes the Government to do anything other than to go into the Federal courts for the northern district of Alabama, in a court of equity, for redress.

Mr. JONES. But being bound by his contract, if he violates a material provision of the contract he forfeits his contract.

Mr. BEGG. But there are many loopholes, to my way of thinking, in the contract. For instance, it says if he is reconstructing his plant, and suppose he found at the end of three years it was not profitable, that it was not good business, and that he could make 10 times as much money out of something else, and he was inclined to avoid the contract, all he would have to do would be to tear down the plant and then take 50 or 60 years to reconstruct it and in that way avoid it.

Mr. JONES. Does not the gentleman think that as to the gentleman's amendment giving him three years, it would act as a limitation?

Mr. BEGG. No; it would not. Now, I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS].

Mr. BURTNESS. In connection with the question asked by the gentleman from Ohio, I want to suggest that as I heard the amendment read, it adds to the rights the Government already has under the bill, and in the event the company should fail to provide fertilizer for one or two years the Government would still have the same right to proceed under the general terms of this bill and would have the right to proceed under section 18. If by any chance your amendment deprives the Government of the general rights under the bill as drawn, it would be dangerous and vicious.

Mr. BEGG. It does not. That is a good point, my friend brings out the point. My amendment does not take away any right to go into the court that the Government has under the bill. It simply provides a reversion clause; in the event the operator of this plant fails for three years this reversion takes place without court action.

Mr. JONES. Does not the gentleman think it would act as a limitation?

Mr. BEGG. No; it does not.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I call for the regular order. This amendment is not in order at this time.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Illinois is correct. This discussion should not come in until the amendment is read in connection with section 14, but in view of the fact that some gentlemen here are inclined to accept this, I think that we might discuss it now, because I think it is important. For that reason I am going to confine what I say to the amendment which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] intends to propose.

Now, let us see, what do you change? Section 14 of the bill provides, among other things, and it is the major language to be considered in the light of this amendment—I read from line 3, page 10, section 14:

> Since the manufacture, sale, and distribution of commercial fertilizers to farmers and other users thereof constitute one of the principal considerations of this offer, the company expressly agrees that continuously throughout the leased period, except as it may be prevented by reconstruction of the plant itself, or by war, strikes, accidents, fires, or other causes beyond its control, it will manufacture nitrogen and other commercial fertilizer, mixed or unmixed, and with or without filler, according to demand—

And so forth.

Now, what does the gentleman from Ohio offer to do? To leave this language in the bill, and over at the end of section 14 he proposes to insert a provision which provides that if this company—because that is the thing we have to consider—if it was simply Henry Ford, I would not object to the amendment—if they shall fail to do what? For three consecutive years to manufacture annually not less than 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen for the exclusive use of fertilizer, and so forth, then it voids the lease. Now, gentlemen, let us see where you are in law. First, when you come to adopt a provision under which the Government might recapture the property, you are confronted with the fact that you must forever bear in mind that it is not for 2 years or 3 years but for 100 years. Nobody can say to-day what might be the need or what might be the minimum capacity of that plant 25 years from now.

Suppose you put the gentleman's provision in there, and as the years go by there is a wonderful development there, so that this 40,000 tons will be a mere bagatelle, not alone as to the need but to the minimum capacity of the plant, and then, with Henry Ford in his grave, with cold-blooded business men running the plant, they will say to the United States Government in the time of dispute that may arise as to whether or not they had carried out the contract—they would say that Congress itself was not content to rely upon a statement of what the principal purposes are and rely upon the court of equity in the light of development to determine, as it must, whether there is a breach, but that Congress has undertaken to look into the future and arbitrarily fix the minimum productive capacity as a basis for voiding the lease, and if we keep up to that we can defy the Government even though that minimum fixed by law is a mere bagatelle, not only as to need but the very capacity of the plant itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. If the gentleman be correct, that if my amendment be adopted it would give some one in 20 or 40 years an excuse for not making more, I should like to have the gentleman differentiate between the two words of the bill in section 14, where it says "at least 40,000" and my amendment wherein it says "not less than."

Mr. WINGO. I anticipated that argument, and was about to come to it. I was about to say, but you may contend that you have already put a minimum of 40,000 tons; yes, but that minimum of 40,000, which you find in lines 14 and 15, page 10, is not the sole consideration upon the question of whether or not there has been a breach. The principal purpose is stated before that, and what is that main purpose? That main purpose is to manufacture, sell, and distribute commercial fertilizer to the farmers, and so forth; and it being one of the principal considerations of the lease, it must be met or the Government in equity may declare the lease voided and recapture the plant. In other words, under the provisions which you have, a court of equity, if we adopted this amendment, would turn to the debates here, would turn to the language of the bill as you have it here, and would say that evidently Congress intended to put either a restriction, or else Congress intended to make it more liberal, and the court would have to give some meaning to the language of the gentleman's amendment. The court would say that you already had a valid 40,000-ton provision in the bill and would ask what was meant by putting in this amendment. Nowhere else in the bill will you find one specific provision for the violation of which there can be a forfeiture of the rights of the corporation. I want to warn you again that you are dealing with a hundred-year proposition.

You gentlemen are familiar with the rule which will apply to exceptions and provisions under the contingencies upon which you may forfeit this lease. That rule is that the inclusion of one is the exclusion of all others, and if you put one specific provision in here and say that you may cancel the lease and recapture the property upon one contingency, and you say upon no other contingency, then you can anticipate what the attorneys for a corporation might argue when they get into a court of equity.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Does not the gentleman think that the words "according to demand" refer to the preceding words, "with or without filler"?

Mr. STEVENSON. But the word "continuously" does not refer to the words "with or without filler."

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman be correct, and he is, this provision, then, is not a limitation, and you are left with a bald statement just as when you write a contract and you say that time is the essence of it. You say here that the manufacture of fertilizer is of the essence of this contract. Then, in the light of conditions existing 20 years from now, if the case goes into court; in the light of the possibilities of this plant, in the light of the development of these processes, you may say that they are not doing what they continuously agreed to do, which is one of the principal purposes of the act—namely, the manufacture of fertilizer for the farmers of the United States—and then the Government would not be hamstrung by a little technical provision which may not have been violated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has again expired.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], and I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment proposed by Mr. BURTON: In line 5, on page 2, strike out the words "to be controlled by Henry Ford."

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, if every member of this committee, which means every Member of the House, had yesterday heard the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] on this whole Muscle Shoals proposition, there would be no need to further debate the Ford offer. I wish to say a few words upon the amendment which Mr. BURTON has offered, an amendment which goes deep down to the foundation of this whole Muscle Shoals question.

The first paragraph of the McKenzie bill reads as follows:

For the purpose of carrying out the terms of this agreement, Henry Ford will form a corporation (hereinafter referred to as the company) with a capital stock of $10,000,000, or more, of which at least $10,000,000 shall be paid in, in cash, to be controlled by Henry Ford, which company will immediately enter into and execute all necessary or appropriate instruments of contract to effectuate this agreement.

What do those words mean—"to be controlled by Henry Ford"? You are asked here to create a monopoly of the greatest water power in this Nation for 100 years, and you are asked in the contract to give prior rights for another hundred years to the same interests. What do the words "to be controlled by Henry Ford" mean? Suppose those words were "to be controlled by John D. Rockefeller." Mr. Rockefeller has been a most successful business man. Would any of you dare vote for this bill in that event? Suppose these words were "to be controlled by J. Pierpont Morgan." Mr. Morgan has also been a most successful business man. Would any of you dare vote for this bill if that were the case? Yet some gentlemen come in here and seriously attempt to put Henry Ford in a sacrosanct preferred class. Mr. Ford is 61 years of age. He may live for 20 years more, but who comes after Henry Ford?

Who will control the Ford Muscle Shoals corporation 25 years from now? Fifty years from now? One hundred years from now? Under the priority clause in the McKenzie bill who will control the proposed Ford corporation 150 years from now? Who, 200 years from now?

Who is it we are proposing to turn over the nitrate defense of this country to for the next 100 years, perhaps 200 years? You are proposing to turn it over to a corporation controlled by Henry Ford and by his heirs, or whom he decides. Who are his heirs, my friends?

I want to read this to you. I dislike to read the word "democratic" in it, because there is no politics in this, but I want you to hear it. You would not do this, no one of you, with the name "John D. Rockefeller" in place of Henry Ford; you would not do it if it contained the name of J. Pierpont Morgan. Why should you create in the heirs of Henry Ford a control of what the Secretary of War says is the greatest necessity for national defense?

I read here from volume 59, part 2, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 19, 1920, on page 3111. There is no partisanship and there is no politics in this present discussion, but when gentlemen on the floor of the House say that we should turn over this proposition of national defense to a corporation to be controlled for 100 years by Henry Ford and his heirs, meaning thereby Edsel Ford, I want to quote what was said on the floor of the Senate on February 19, 1920, and then at a later opportunity in the debate I want to call to your attention what Secretary Weeks has said in reference to the nitrate situation as it relates to national defense. If it were to be controlled by Morgan or Rockefeller you would not touch it. Why should you prefer Henry or Edsel Ford? I will ask the Clerk in my time to read the marked section on page 3111.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I regret I can not yield to my colleague on the Military Affairs Committee at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read from the statement made in the Senate by Senator Sherman as follows:

The Democratic State central committee of the State of Michigan spent as much or more money in the same campaign for Henry Ford, the sire of the distinguished military slacker, the scion and $150,000 a year official of the Ford Motor Co. It was spent on his behalf by the State central committee, and Henry Ford knew as much about it as the Senator from Michigan who has been indicted because it is alleged, and must be proven, that he had guilty knowledge of the excess above that authorized by law. Mr. Ford knew as much of the activities and expenses of the Democratic State committee as Mr. Newberry. Why is Ford undisturbed? This administration indicts those who do not comply with its orders. Mr. Ford likewise indicts those who do not meekly obey his wishes.

If the amendment is intended to secure to the general public knowledge of Edsel Ford's exemption and his shameless dodging of his military service, then why ought it not to be had? It was an issue in the autumn of 1918 in the Michigan campaign. Mr. Ford was defeated upon that issue and not by the unlawful use of money.

"To be controlled by Henry Ford!" Why should we discard the Federal water power act? Why should we sell nitrate plant No. 2 and the Waco Quarry, which can now make nitrate for two field armies of 1,000,000 men? Why should we put the national nitrate defense in the "control" of Edsel Ford?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I ask for two minutes additional?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Reserving the right to object, I want to plead with my colleague not to bring in the ghost of Newberry before the House again. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I will say to my colleague from Nebraska that I do not want to bring in the ghost of Mr. Newberry, but I am trying to keep out the skeleton of Edsel Ford. [Laughter.] Now, I desire to call the attention of the committee also—you can read it at your leisure—to volume 58, part 3, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 2618, to Senator Sherman's remarks on the "Edsel Ford exemption case." I shall not take your time by reading it.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] is to strike out the words "controlled by Henry Ford." If those words were "to be controlled by Rockefeller," you would not put them in, and you would not consider them at all. I say to you that when you tie up the greatest national defense project in the United States for 100 years to be controlled by Henry Ford and Edsel Ford, you do not do well for the national defense.

Mr. McSWAIN. If the gentleman will permit, I believe he stated yesterday that he personally is in favor of the bill of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] to turn this proposition over to the Alabama Power Co. by lease, the Alabama Power Co. being controlled by foreign capital.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. The gentleman is indorsing a bill which provides for leasing the dams to a $15,000,000 corporation for 50 years under the water power act to be controlled by Americans, and which does not sell any of the needed nitrate plants. I am against leasing the Wilson Dam to anybody for 100 years with prior right of renewal, and I am against selling nitrate plant No. 2 and the Waco quarry and all the rest to a corporation "to be controlled by Henry Ford." [Applause.]

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent to proceed for a minute. I desire to withdraw my amendment. My objection to the provision, as I stated, was not to Mr. Ford but because I believe a provision that a single individual shall own and control the stock of the corporation, or having a controlling interest in it, is an unlawful restraint on the powers of alienation and contrary to public policy. Personally I do not care whether it stays in or not.

Mr. LOZIER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURTON. I will.

Mr. LOZIER. I will ask the gentleman if this sentence or language would not be absolutely meaningless if it ran counter to the laws of the State in which this corporation is organized? If it is organized under the laws of a certain State, the laws of that State will determine in reference to the divertment, management, and so forth, of the property.

Mr. BURTON. Yes. The law is uniform, I think, upon the right to alienate or transfer stock ownership.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. MADDEN. Before the gentleman makes that motion I would like to offer an amendment and have it pending.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] offers an amendment to be printed for the information of the committee. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MADDEN: On page 18, amend section 23 by striking out, after the figures "23," all of the section and substituting in lieu thereof the following:

"Upon the acceptance of the Ford proposal, the promises, undertakings, and obligations shall be binding upon the United States and jointly and severally upon Henry Ford, his heirs, representatives, and assigns, and the company, its successors and assigns; and all the necessary contracts, leases, deeds, and other instruments necessary or appropriate to effect the purposes of this proposal shall be duly executed and delivered by the respective parties above mentioned."

Mr. WILLIAMS of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have an amendment to section 4 placed in the RECORD and be considered as pending in view of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG]. It has to do with another part of section 14.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman desires to have it read at this time?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Michigan. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to have an amendment read and printed in the RECORD for information. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WILLIAMS of Michigan: Page 10, line 9, after the word "will," strike out the words "manufacture nitrogen and other commercial fertilizers, mixed or unmixed, and with or without filler, according to demand," and insert in lieu thereof the words "each year manufacture nitrogen and other commercial fertilizers, mixed or unmixed, and with or without filler, containing in the aggregate, at least, the amount of fixed nitrogen hereinafter stated, and supply and offer the same for sale in accordance with the demand that may from time to time exist for the various kinds of fertilizer, whether mixed or unmixed, and with or without filler."

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to introduce an amendment, and ask unanimous consent that it be read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that his amendment be read and printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BURTON: Section 3, page 2, line 23, after the words "United States," insert the words "under the terms of the Federal water power act"; on page 3, line 2, strike out the words "one hundred" and insert the word "fifty."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an amendment which I expect to propose at the end of section 23.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an amendment which he proposes to introduce at the end of section 23. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I thought it was to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman did not ask to have it read.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will ask to have it read. It is a very important amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. If all these amendments are going to be read, I shall object.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In order that it may be clearly understood, these amendments are not now being offered so that points of order are not necessary to be reserved at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, was leave granted to print my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Following is the amendment referred to:

Amendment offered by Mr. CHINDBLOM: Page 18, line 19, add a new section, as follows:

"That in the exercise and enjoyment of all rights acquired under this act, Henry Ford, his heirs, representatives, and assigns, and the company, its successors and assigns, shall, so far as applicable, be subject, except as herein specifically otherwise provided, to all the terms, provisions, obligations, restrictions, and limitations of the Federal power act of June 10, 1920."

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to submit an amendment, for the information of the House, to section 23 of the bill, and ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an amendment which he proposes to introduce at the proper place. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the amendment referred to:

Amendment offered by Mr. WILLIAMSON: Page 18, line 16, after the word "offer," insert "and to carry out the purposes of this act"; and after the word "assigns," in line 19 on same page, strike out the period, insert a comma, and add: "it being the intent hereof to bind Henry Ford, his heirs, representatives, and assigns, upon all contracts, leases, deeds, transfers, and conveyances executed by said company as fully and completely as though he had personally executed such instruments," so that the section will read:

"SEC. 23. All of the contracts, leases, deeds, transfers, and conveyances necessary to effectuate the acceptance of said offer and to carry out the purposes of this act shall be binding upon the United States, and jointly and severally upon Henry Ford, his heirs, representatives, and assigns, and the company to be incorporated by him, its successors, and assigns, it being the intent hereof to bind Henry Ford, his heirs, representatives, and assigns upon all contracts, leases, deeds, transfers, and conveyances executed by said company as fully and completely as though he had personally executed such instruments."

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MAPES, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 518) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to sell to Henry Ford nitrate plant No. 1, at Sheffield, Ala.; nitrate plant No. 2, at Muscle Shoals, Ala.; Waco Quarry, near Russellville, Ala.; and to lease to the corporation to be incorporated by him Dam No. 2 and Dam No. 3 (as designated in H. Doc. 1262, 64th Cong., 1st sess.), including power stations when constructed as provided herein, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

INVESTIGATION OF THE SHIPPING BOARD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following committee authorized by the House for the investigation of the Shipping Board: Mr. WHITE of Maine, Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, Mr. LEHLBACH, Mr. LINEBERGER, Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee, Mr. BANKHEAD, and Mr. CONNALLY of Texas.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up a privileged bill, which was unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means. It will take only a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. Was it done by agreement with the gentleman from New York?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will withdraw it for the present.

THE LATE EX-PRESIDENT WILSON.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a memorial address delivered by the Hon. Joseph P. Tumulty in regard to the late ex-President Wilson, at the Academy of Music in Brooklyn, be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a memorial address delivered upon ex-President Wilson by Mr. Tumulty. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me, I insert the following:

ADDRESS BY JOSEPH P. TUMULTY AT THE MEMORIAL EXERCISES FOR WOODROW WILSON, UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE BROOKLYN WOODROW WILSON MEMORIAL COMMITTEE, HELD AT THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, BROOKLYN, N. Y., FEBRUARY 24, 1924.

Mr. Chairman, Judge Garvin, my friends, it is with deep-felt emotion that I find myself your speaker this afternoon, for I come to eulogize a devoted friend, a world leader, a preeminent statesman, a Christian gentleman, and a martyr to the cause of humanity.

This solemn, impressive memorial service for one who loved all mankind, renews tender and affectionate ties of friendship, ties that recall heroic days of martial strife, passion, devotion, consecration, and religious fervor to do right and justice by all—days when, in preparation for the mightiest conflict in the history of civilization, we saw the spirit of a free and knightly Nation express itself with a patriotic intensity and zeal equaled only by the medieval crusaders.

But, my friends, although the leader of this mighty outpouring of nationalistic earnestness and fervency be dead, let this be not a day of grief but a day of triumph and dedication.

Verily a mighty figure has fallen, but the indomitable and unconquerable spirit of Woodrow Wilson is still with us, an invisible and welcome guest of a world in which it struggled—not vainly—to free mankind from the thralldom, the bitterness, the rancour, the enslavement, and the hatreds of war.

And so, we are here to-day resolved that the dead shall not have died in vain and with burning hope in our hearts that the valorous cause of peace for which he ordained his life, fought, suffered, and gave the last full measure of devotion, shall, in the Providence of God, working through the efforts of those he left behind, be brought closer to ultimate realization. No ideal like that of peace can be blotted out any more than the everlasting hills can be destroyed. God does not permit waste.

Yes, my friends, Woodrow Wilson is as great and as noble in death as in life. With the shroud drawn, partisan rancor, personal hatred, and the envy of little men are held at bay and forever silenced, and now with bared heads we stand in reverential awe before the tomb to honor him who gave his body, his mind, his soul—yes, his very all for the sacred truths upon which our own Magna Charta was founded; and for the saving of a world from the cruel and blighting plague of war.

With Woodrow Wilson, "right was more precious than peace." With him as our leader and inspiration, "we fought for the things we have always carried nearest our hearts, for democracy, for the right of those who submit to authority to have a voice in their own government, for the rights and liberties of small nations, for a universal dominance of right by such a concert of free peoples as shall bring peace and safety to all nations and make the world itself, at last, free."

Woodrow Wilson, with a vision clear, saw the broad horizons of life and sought to interpret the feeling and aspiration of peace that came to him, hot and bloody, out of the trenches, that spirit that has cried down through the centuries for peace, for everlasting peace, the cry that he seemed to hear above the hiss of shrapnel and the roar of the cannonading. Who shall say that the seed of peace, planted by him, freshened by his sacrifices, vitalized by his sorrows, is not again to be renewed by his pains, his sufferings, his death, and will not in God's good time come to real fruition? His vision seemed to see the things that to us were unseen. With unflinching courage he trod the hard, stony way with the hope in his heart that in his deathless struggle for peace humanity could be saved from a renewal of this barbarous, savage, bloody thing called war. Yes, he not only sought to save the world, but he died to preserve inviolate the landmarks of Christianity and civilization.

And now that this courageous figure has passed from its temporal stage, with charity in our hearts for those whose malice and perfidy conceived unjust attacks upon him, we recall that his enemies laughed his statesmanship to scorn, called it impotent, futile, and without result; said there was no use appealing to moral force in a world in which the forces of civilization were engaged in a veritable death grapple; and yet it requires neither the vision of a seer nor that of a philosopher to understand that the mightiest blows struck at German morale and prestige were those found in the immortal preachments of Woodrow Wilson—preachments that went like shot and shell to destroy what appeared to be the impregnable fortress of German power. Von Tirpitz, in his memoirs, stressed the effect of Wilson's submarine notes. Ludendorff declares in his book that "'the Wilson propaganda' that found root in Berlin and finally grew there eventually convinced the German people that it was not they themselves but the Government and militarism that the United States was warring against. This was the seed of dissension that ruined morale at home." Von Tirpitz further states that "Only the transmitting to Germany of the threatening notes of President Wilson, when he inveighed against 'my submarine campaign' during the latter stages of the war, prevented Japan from coming to us in a great Germano-Japanese alliance, which would have ended the war at once." The persistent note writing of Woodrow Wilson, so often the subject of song and jest, was as mighty a force in winning the war as the consummate strategy of Joffre and Foch. You recall how the javelins of political slander were hurled at what was called the miserable, puerile policy of watchful waiting. The President's traducers said it was weak, vacillating, contemptible, and yet, my friends, when Abraham Lincoln, the great emancipator, faced a crisis in Mexico similar to that which confronted Woodrow Wilson, his policy was essentially the same. This is proved by Government records recently brought to light by Prof. Walter L. Davis, of the history department of the College of Puget Sound. Lincoln, according to these records, watchfully waited and indicated his aversion to aggressive action by appointing as minister to Mexico the very man who had bitterly opposed American interference 15 years before. He also issued the following instructions to his new minister:

> "For a few years past the condition of Mexico has been so unsettled as to raise the question on both sides of the Atlantic whether the time has not come when some foreign power ought, in the general interest of society, to intervene, to establish a protectorate or some other form of government in that country and guarantee its continuance there.
> "You will not fail," continues Lincoln, "to assure the Government of Mexico that the President neither has, nor can ever have, any sympathy with such designs in whatever quarter they may arise or whatever character they take on." * * *

You will find in the public utterances of Woodrow Wilson on Mexico the same breadth of vision, the same human sympathy, the same magnanimity, as are found in the utterances of Lincoln.

Let me read what Woodrow Wilson said on Mexico when a great crisis in that country confronted him:

> "The situation in Mexico," he said, "must be given a little more time to work itself out in the new circumstances. I believe that only a little while will be necessary. * * * We must exercise the self-restraint of a really great nation which realizes its own strength and scorns to misuse it. I am more interested in the fortunes of oppressed men, women, and children than in property rights whatever. * * * The people of Mexico are striving for the rights that are fundamental to their lives and happiness—15,000,000 oppressed men, overburdened women, and pitiful children in virtual bondage in their own home of fertile lands and inexhaustible treasure."

But in spite of this magnanimity of purpose his enemies smugly shrugged their shoulders and said with disdain:

> "Well, what's the use? What can you expect from a dreamer of dreams, a mere doctrinaire? Doesn't Wilson, the historian, know that force and force alone can bring that grizzly old warrior, Huerta, to his senses?"

Ah, my friends, it was disheartening to find bitter criticism of this policy from the outside and depressing to find the enemies of watchful waiting "boring from within" through certain of his Cabinet officers.

> "And one denies, and one forsakes, and still unquestioning he goes, who has his lonely thoughts."

The critics of his broad, humanitarian policy in Mexico said that the only antidote for what was happening there was force and intervention, and they honorably urged this view upon the President, but without succeeding in bringing about the consummation so dear to their hearts.

But, little by little, the usurper, Huerta, was being isolated. By moral pressure every day his power and prestige were perceptibly crumbling. His collapse was not far away when the President declared, "We shall not, I believe, be obliged to alter our policy of watchful waiting."

And the campaign of Woodrow Wilson to force Huerta finally triumphed. On July 15, 1913, Huerta resigned and departed from Mexico. Wilson's humanity and broad statesmanship had won over the system of cruel oppression for which the "unspeakable Huerta" had stood. You recall, do you not, that when Lincoln announced his doctrine of a house divided against itself, his friends were bitter in their criticism; they said it was a foolish utterance; others said it was ahead of its time, that it would drive away a good many voters from the Republican ranks, and that it would mean his defeat.

Lincoln was adamant, and in replying to his critics said:

> "I would rather be defeated with this expression in the speech and uphold it and discuss it before the people than be victorious without it."

When Woodrow Wilson advocated a League of Nations people called him a dreamer, idealist, an altruist, "ahead of his time." But he was indifferent to criticism and in one of his western speeches said, "If I felt that I personally stood in the way of this settlement, I would be glad to die that it might be consummated." In an admirable speech on the western trip, broken in health but indomitable in spirit, calling upon God to strengthen his hand in the battle he was making for peace, Woodrow Wilson said, "I believe in God. If I did not, I would go crazy. If I thought the direction of the disordered affairs of this world depended upon our finite intelligence, I should not know how to reason my way to sanity, and I do not believe there is any body of men, however they concert their power or their influence, that can defeat this great enterprise, which is the enterprise of divine mercy and peace and good will."

Woodrow Wilson hated war and dreaded it in all the fibers of his soul—hated it and dreaded it because he had an imagination and a heart; an imagination which showed his senstive perception of the anguish and the dying which war entails, a heart which yearned and ached over every dying soldier and bleeded afresh with each new-made wound.

He understood better than his critics the basis of the Nation's impatience for war, but that in no way hurried him into rash or precipitate action. At a private dinner in Washington he took cognizance of this critical situation and, addressing a group of Senators and Congressmen and high dignitaries of state, he spoke of the impatience of the country which then manifested itself, saying:

> "I wish that whenever an impulse of impatience comes upon us, whenever an impulse to settle a thing some short way tempts us, we might close the door and take down some old stories of what American idealists and statesmen did in the past and not let any counsel in that does not sound in the authentic voice of American tradition. Then we shall be certain what the lines of the future are, because we shall know we are steering by the lines of the past. We shall know that no temporary convenience, no temporary expediency, will lead us either to be rash or to be cowardly. I would be just as much ashamed to be rash as I would to be a coward. Valor is self-respecting. Valor is circumspect. Valor strikes only when it is right to strike. Valor withholds itself from all small implications and entanglements and waits for the great opportunity when the sword will flash as if it carried the light of heaven upon its blade."

They said he was cold; that he was aloof. Yes, like Lincoln, "that brooding spirit had no familiars." It never spoke out in complete "self-revelation." "It was a very lonely spirit that comprehended men without fully communing with them, as if, in spite of all its genial efforts at comradeship, it dwelt apart, saw its visions of duty where no man looked on."

Yes; there was an aloofness and an aloneness about Woodrow Wilson, but it was the aloofness and the aloneness of the mountain peak looking down upon the valleys and seeing humanity, not as a thing of shreds and patches, a thing divided into races, religions, clans, and blocs, but a big, pulsating whole, made up of struggling men, women, and children of all races and creeds. That great heart of Woodrow Wilson sought to comprehend the interests of these heterogeneous elements and understand their lives and their tragedies far, far away from those artificial lines that divide men.

Woodrow Wilson was not only great but he was human. But this humanness was made out of too fine a fiber to be used for self-exploitation, nor would he ever permit himself to be so used. The trouble with his peculiar kind of humanness was this: It did not bubble, it did not effervesce, it did not sparkle; and so they called him cold when he was only shy; they mistook his gentility for austerity. But that kind of a man will live in the hearts and thoughts of men forever.

You remember Lincoln's statement that God must have loved the poor because he made so many of them. I am reminded of the passionate devotion and love of the average man which seemed to set on fire every utterance Woodrow Wilson made. Many of you will recall his visit to this very city on May 11, 1914, to make an address at the service held in memory of those who lost their lives at Vera Cruz, Mexico.

On that occasion he said:

> "When I look at you, I feel as if I also and we all were enlisted men—not enlisted in your particular branch of the service, but enlisted to serve the country, no matter what may come, even though we may sacrifice our lives in the arduous endeavor. We are expected to put the utmost energy of every power that we have into the service of our fellow men, never sparing ourselves, not condescending to think of what is going to happen to ourselves, but ready, if need be, to go to the utter length of complete self-sacrifice. As I stand and look at you to-day and think of these spirits that have gone from us, I know that the road is clearer for the future. These boys have shown us the way, and it is easier to walk on it because they have gone before and shown us how. May God grant to all of us that vision of patriotic service which here in solemnity and grief is borne in upon our hearts and consciences!"

And then again, in the following lines, Woodrow Wilson's devotion and understanding of the problems of the average man radiates the altruism of the passionate Democrat:

> "Life, gentlemen—the life of society, the life of the world—has constantly to be fed from the bottom. It has to be fed by those great sources of strength which are constantly rising in new generations. Red blood has to be pumped into it. New fiber has to be supplied. That is the reason I have always said that I believed in popular institutions. If you can guess beforehand whom your rulers are going to be, you can guess with a very great certainty that most of them will not be fit to rule. The beauty of popular institutions is that you do not know where the man is going to come from, and you do not care, so he is the right man. You do not know whether he will come from the avenue or from the alley. You do not know whether he will come from the city or the farm. You do not know whether you will ever have heard that name before or not. Therefore you do not limit at any point your supply of new strength. You do not say it has got to come through the blood of a particular family or through the processes of a particular training, or by anything except the native impulse and genius of the man himself.
> "The humblest hovel, therefore, may produce your greatest man. A very humble hovel did produce one of your greatest men. That is the process of life, this constant surging up of the new strength of unnamed, unrecognized, uncatalogued men who are just getting into the running, who are just coming up from the masses of the unrecognized multitude. You do not know when you will see above the level masses of the crowd some great stature lifted head and shoulders above the rest, shouldering its way, not violently but gently, to the front and saying, 'Here am I; follow me.' And his voice will be your voice, his thought will be your thought, and you will follow him as if you were following the best things in yourselves."

And so, my friends, who shall say that these struggles and efforts for peace of Woodrow Wilson are in vain? How beautifully and artistically does God manipulate the scenes of life and thus weave His immortal spell!

Those who execrated Woodrow Wilson, those who knocked, knocked, knocked at the door of his sick room, spying upon a weary President, pursuing him like a deer set upon by snarling hounds, are now in the shadow of exile and disgrace, resting under the blight and stigma of a Nation's shame and reproach, while the great spirit of Woodrow Wilson takes flight.

> "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

From his lofty eminence of fame and everlasting glory we seem to see him looking down upon us through wistful eyes and saying:

> "We have begun a fight that, it may be, will take many a generation to complete, the fight against special privilege; but you know that men are not put into this world to go the path of ease. They are put into this world to go the path of pain and struggle. There are men who have fallen by the wayside; blood without stint has been shed; men have sacrificed everything in this sometimes blind but always instinctive and constant struggle; America has undertaken to lead the way; America has undertaken to be the haven of hope, the opportunity for all men. Don't look forward too much. Don't look at the road ahead of you in dismay. Look at the road behind you. Don't you see how far up the hill we have come? Don't you see what those low and damp miasmatic levels were from which we have slowly led the way? Don't you see the rows of men come, not upon the lower level but upon the upper, like the rays of the rising sun? Don't you see the light starting and don't you see the light illuminating all nations? Don't you know that you are coming more and more into the beauty of its radiance? And then trust your guides, imperfect as they are, and some day, when we are dead, men will come and point at the distant upland with a great shout of joy and triumph and thank God that there were men who undertook to lead in the struggle. What difference does it make if we ourselves do not reach the uplands? We have given our lives to the enterprise. The world is made happier and humankind better because we have lived."

And now the end, the tragic end, the thrilling end; and as the great soul of Woodrow Wilson took flight we were reminded of the words of Paul the Apostle to Timothy:

"For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand."

"I have fought a good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith."

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I present a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York presents a resolution and asks for its immediate consideration. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

ALLEGED CHARGES AGAINST TWO MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

House Resolution 211.

Whereas a grand jury of the district court of the United States for the northern district of Illinois, eastern division, impaneled at the February term, 1924, has reported to that court that certain evidence had been submitted to them involving the payment of sums of money to two Members of Congress:

Resolved, That the Attorney General be directed to transmit to the House of Representatives, if not incompatible with the public interest, the names of the two Members of Congress and the nature of the charges made against them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, the words of the resolution fully explain its intent and purpose, and need no further explanation from me at this time.

There is a general feeling among Members of the House that on account of various rumors that are being spread broadcast throughout the land at the present time, seriously reflecting on the integrity and honesty of Members of Congress, we can not longer sit idly by and not give these rumors consideration by the House. [Applause].

The Committee on Rules have given this matter careful consideration. They fully appreciate the importance of the whole proposition and the seriousness of it, and they have directed me to report this resolution to the House and ask for a vote on the same.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from New York has just stated, in the past few days rumors have been flitting about this Capitol which cast serious reflection upon two Members of Congress and virtually upon the honor of this entire body. These rumors are based upon a report of a grand jury made to the court something like a week ago. The grand jury was engaged in the investigation of the Veterans' Bureau, but in the report made to the court it went very far afield in recommending that attention be given to certain other matters brought out during the course of the investigation. I will not read the whole report but only the part which relates to the resolution before us. The grand jury said:

Incidental to the investigation of matters of which this grand jury had jurisdiction certain other facts not directly pertaining to the Veterans' Bureau were developed by counsel for the Government which we regard of great importance.

Observe, gentlemen, that the rumors which we have heard reflecting on any Members of Congress were merely incidental to the investigation of the Veterans' Bureau case, and the grand jury admitted it had no jurisdiction in the premises. The report goes on to say:

There is no jurisdiction of them in the northern district of Illinois, but we are assured by Mr. Crim—

Who was the prosecutor retained by the Department of Justice—that he will lay them before the Attorney General and the President for consideration. We do not feel that it would subserve the best interests of the Government for this jury to make public at this time the details of these transactions. This jury feels it will suffice to report to your honor that they involve—

Then come a number of accusations against persons in Government employ and out, among them the following:

That certain sums of money were paid to two Members of Congress.

This morning two gentlemen connected with the Department of Justice, Mr. Crim and Mr. Seymour, now Acting Attorney General, requested an interview with the Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], and myself, in which they explained how this whole thing had arisen. Mr. Crim stated that a very large part of the evidence used in investigating the War Veterans' Bureau case came from crooks and criminals who were turning State's evidence, and that in asking them questions their answers frequently led far afield and that he was compelled to follow those clues as far as they went. So that on the statement of the grand jury itself this particular charge, involving two Members of Congress, is based upon the testimony of crooks and criminals.

The whole thing would not be so bad, gentlemen, if the Department of Justice had its case ready for immediate presentation, but Mr. Crim and Mr. Seymour were unable to assure us of any trial of these two Members of Congress for weeks to come, because the matter must be brought before a grand jury impaneled in the District of Columbia; their evidence is not ready and many of their witnesses, being crooks and criminals, are not immediately available because they do not know where they are or whether they can get them.

Gentlemen, that is the position this House is in to-day, with these gross slurs and insinuations cast upon Members of our body and no assurance whatever that anything is going to be done within months from now. We thought this morning, the Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and I, that we ought to take action at once. Here is a grand jury that presents to a court a statement which is made public and that among other persons suspected are two Members of Congress, but they decline to reveal their names.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Did the gentleman from Ohio, the gentleman from Tennessee, and the Speaker have any assurance that the names will be revealed on request under the resolution?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will say to the gentleman that we had no such assurance.

Mr. MADDEN. I hope there will not be any hidden reasons why they should not be revealed.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will yield.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Suppose the names are given? What are you going to do with them then?

Mr. LONGWORTH. That will be for the House, in its wisdom, to decide; but that can not come until later. I am talking about what we ought to do here and now in order to purge the House of these charges. [Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Would not the gentleman be willing to amend the resolution so as to strike out the clause in language like this, "if incompatible with the public interest"?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Well, that is the usual form.

Mr. STEAGALL. I want to offer a motion at the proper time to strike that out, because I think, if the gentleman will permit, that this case is entirely different from an ordinary case. The Constitution puts the power in the Congress to deal with a man who has been corrupted while a Member of this body, and anything a grand jury might do is trivial compared with the importance of driving out of this House any man who may have been guilty of such offenses; and if he is not guilty, the men who have made the charges ought to be held to strict accountability.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. If the gentleman from Ohio will permit, I think the gentleman is in error about saying that this is in the usual form. The usual form, when directed to the President, is to use the words "if not incompatible with the public interest," but the House or Senate either has the right to direct a Cabinet officer to make reports on such matters.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Personally, I would have no objection to demand this information forthwith.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. That is the custom. The custom is to direct a Cabinet officer and to request the President, if not incompatible with the public interest.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think I can perhaps make the situation clearer if you will allow me to proceed, but I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. In view of what the gentlemen has said in reference to the nature of the evidence offered and the character of the witnesses, I would like to make this suggestion: The request is for the names of the two Members and "the nature of the charges" made against them, and it seems to me that that would only mean whether it was bribery or larceny or something of that kind. It seems to me we should also inquire something about the nature and substance of the evidence that accompanies it. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentlemen had permitted me to proceed, perhaps none of these questions would have been asked. This is the situation. As I say, I do not want to comment now upon whose fault it was in bringing this stuff before the public. The grand jury had no jurisdiction over these matters. They were not involved in the trial of the Veterans' Bureau case and had nothing to do with it. Whether it is the fault of officials in the Department of Justice solely or of the grand jury solely I am not prepared to comment upon at this time, but the fact is that a week ago this statement was made public in the court that two Members of Congress had received money. Did anybody suppose for a moment there would not be a leak there? Did not every member of the grand jury who supported this report know that this would leak out and that names would be freely bandied about? And the worst of it all is it will be a month at least before the prosecution will even be initiated. In the meantime are we to sit here complacently and let these vile rumors fly all over the country and not compel the Department of Justice to reveal the names of these people whom they propose to indict and convict, if they can?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio five additional minutes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will only take a very short time, because the discussion of this subject revolts me. Suppose the department reveals to us to-morrow these two names and the charges. It is then possible for the gentleman so charged to arise to a question of privilege and defend themselves and show the unfounded nature of these charges, if they are unfounded. [Applause.] If they do not do that, then we have to do one of two things—either undertake the investigation of the case ourselves or leave it all to the Department of Justice. In either case, by passing this resolution we will have done the one thing that men of honor ought to do when the membership and the honor of their body is assailed. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Would it not be well to telegraph the foreman of that grand jury and ask him for the names of the two alleged Congressmen and the evidence which the grand jury may have ascertained?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Of course that information is already in the hands of the Department of Justice. The Department of Justice intends, so they say, to indict these two men and, if possible, to convict them; but so far they have declined to reveal who they are.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I want to make, with the gentleman's permission, a very brief suggestion, and that is, in proceeding with this matter, whatever may be done, from the beginning until the conclusion, ought to be done in such a temper and with such a purpose manifested as to disclose the facts and punish the guilty, if there are any guilty, and to protect the innocent, that there can be no question about the sincerity of our purpose to see that the innocent are protected and the guilty are punished. We not only owe the duty to have that purpose, but we owe the duty so to proceed that regardless of results that purpose and its execution can not be questioned.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman is exactly right, and he echoes my sentiments.

It is our solemn duty to bring to justice any and all who are guilty of corruption. Equally we must see that the reputations of innocent men are not blasted by the wild statements of irresponsible sensationalists.

I append hereto the report of the grand jury:

In the District Court of the United States of America for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division,

Special report of the United States grand jury impaneled at the February term, 1924, to inquire into certain matters pertaining to the operation of the United States Veterans' Bureau.

FREDERICK N. MASON,
Foreman.

In addition to the matters in which indictments have been returned this grand jury heard a great deal of testimony pertaining to other transactions having to do with the United States Veterans' Bureau, and it feels that it should say to your honor with respect to the contracts between the Veterans' Bureau and the Continental Chemical Co., known as the floor wax contract, and the contract between the bureau and the Society for Visual Education, that it has not found anything criminal with respect to these matters. It feels that bad judgment was used by the bureau in entering into these contracts, but it does not find anything in connection with them which justifies a formal accusation in the form of an indictment.

It heard a great deal of evidence with respect to transactions known as "Perryville," "Tupper Lake," and "Livermore." It found no basis for this grand jury prosecuting an inquiry concerning these transactions to the extent which it feels desirable for the reason that no act concerning them was committed in the jurisdiction of this court. It does believe, however, that those transactions should have further investigation by the Government, and similarly we feel the so-called subsistence contract should have further scrutiny.

Incidental to the investigation of matters of which this grand jury had jurisdiction certain other facts not directly pertaining to the Veterans' Bureau were developed by counsel for the Government which we regard of great importance. There is no jurisdiction of them in the northern district of Illinois, but we are assured by Mr. Crim that he will lay them before the Attorney General and the President for consideration. We do not feel that it would subserve the best interests of the Government for this jury to make public at this time the details of these transactions. This jury feels it will suffice to report to your honor that they involve (1) speculation by one or more officials of the Government wherein it has been asserted that official information was used for purposes of speculation; (2) that certain sums of money were paid to two Members of Congress; (3) that possession of a file of one of the departments for about a month was had by persons having no official connection with such department; (4) that money was accepted by certain individuals (not attorneys) for the purpose of obtaining clemency for prisoners through their intimacy with officials; (5) that money was collected by certain individuals (not attorneys) for obtaining through such intimacy permits for intoxicating liquor.

This jury has sat 15 days, with rare exceptions holding two sessions per day. It has heard the testimony of 44 witnesses; it wishes to commend Mr. Crim and his assistants for their work, and it feels that in the interest of justice it ought to say to your honor that the compensation of $3 per day and the present legal mileage allowed to grand jurors place a burden on jurors, particularly those who come long distances, which it feels should be relieved by appropriate legislation.

Respectfully,

——— ———, Foreman.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] has stated concisely and accurately the situation which exists relative to this very delicate matter as it appeared to, I think I may say, the Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio, and myself and to the members of the Committee on Rules. It is a very peculiar situation. I know of no precedent. A grand jury sitting in a distant city, engaged in an investigation along a particular line, obtains incidental allegations, apparently not of matters connected with the particular subject which it is investigating, and thereupon makes a report to the court which becomes public. That report is carried throughout the United States. It is carried, or has been carried, in a garbled form. On Tuesday last, after having read in various papers of the country how this story was being carried, I felt it proper to present a resolution to create a committee to investigate the matter. I would not ordinarily present a resolution based upon press reports, but bear in mind that the press reports concerning this matter were based on a grand jury report; therefore it seemed to me not only proper but extremely necessary that there should be a resolution presented and investigation had as to any allegations that might involve Members of the House of Representatives. It is an extremely delicate matter with which we are dealing. Such information as I have is that the Department of Justice is not sure of its ground as regards any Member of the House——

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The gentleman properly stated that the reason why he introduced the resolution was that it was predicated on the grand jury report. It is also usual that the grand jury report has the indorsement of the district attorney when sent out, which likewise gives to this rumor even greater force than the mere handing out of a grand jury report.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will say that I do not know the custom in that regard, but it is proper to say that the district attorney of the Chicago district apparently had nothing to do with this matter. This investigation before the grand jury was conducted by a special attorney of the Department of Justice and the district attorney in Chicago has had, from the record, nothing to do with the matter so far as I know.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I desire to say to the gentleman that in my opinion the grand jury is absolutely supreme in the matter of its reports. The district attorney or the prosecuting attorney has no control over it whatever.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. SNELL. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not know the practice as regards the grand jury procedure in the Federal court. The gentleman from Florida states that the district attorney has no control over it, and the grand jury is entitled to make its report, and of course that statement I accept. But the fact is that the grand jury has made the report and has undertaken to involve Members of Congress, so it is necessary for us to do something.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. Of course there are exceptions, but is not it the general rule that the prosecuting attorney who conducts investigations before the grand jury, does prepare the report for the grand jury, and suggests to the grand jury what shall go into it?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I can not tell the gentleman because I never have been a district attorney or a special prosecutor.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman further yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] stated a few moments ago that the special agent or assistant of the Department of Justice stated that he intended to impanel a grand jury and prosecute the cases. So evidently the report on which the gentleman has properly based a recommendation has the sanction of this special attorney.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will yield.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. My recollection of the statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] was that the special prosecutor stated that it would be some weeks and perhaps months before this could be brought into court, due to the fact that there was not now a grand jury sitting in the District of Columbia. It is my understanding that the Federal grand jury is almost in continuous session in the District of Columbia.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman from Minnesota will pardon me, I did not make exactly that statement.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I do not want to misquote the gentleman, but I got the impression that the gentleman said there was no grand jury in session and would not be for some time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I said that there would be some delay and that the delay was occasioned by the fact that they did not know where the witnesses were and did not have the papers and evidence.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Then it resolves itself into this, that what the Department of Justice now has in its possession is not legal evidence which they feel warranted in submitting to a Federal grand jury here or they would submit it now and there would be no delay. Apparently they feel that before they can make a prima facie case additional evidence must be obtained. Is not that correct?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not like to interpret the words of the Attorney, Mr. Crim. I do not like to draw even conclusions from what he said. I would prefer not to. What I think is this. If we were to appoint a special committee, that special committee would necessarily have to go to Mr. Crim or somebody else to get a beginning of its investigation, because the whole thing hinges around this report of the grand jury in Chicago. Therefore, it seems to me that we might just as well pass this resolution.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I heartily agree with the gentleman as to that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee my understanding of the facts. Mr. Crim, whom the gentleman from Tennessee has called the special prosecutor, was until very recently on the staff of the present Attorney General of the United States. He resigned from that position, if newspaper rumor is true.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Did he resign, or was he fired?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Neither he nor the Attorney General has told me, and I do not know. He left his position. Then when this exposé of the corruption in the Veterans' Bureau was made, he was appointed special attorney to conduct an investigation before the grand jury at Chicago. He, an attorney specially appointed by the Department of Justice, now comes back to Washington with the finding of the grand jury that two members of the House, our fellow members, are corrupt. That is what it means. According to newspaper statements he took the names of those two members to the President of the United States in secret conference. As a result, the good name of every Member of this House, including the gentleman's and mine, is besmirched. As for me I wish here to announce that I want no technicalities invoked. And I wish that there be no expression of opinion here as to whether there is or is not evidence, but that we all now demand an investigation of the whole House. [Applause.] The matter ought not to be delayed a minute. This is no time for us to quibble as to the authority of Mr. Crim, or his lack of authority. Neither an attorney appointed in that capacity, nor a United States District Attorney, has any authority whatever over the grand jury except to present evidence and to instruct in the law when they request it. He is absolutely prohibited from expressing any opinion to the grand jury as to what their findings ought to be. I presume he has obeyed the law—and we have no right to assume that he has not. He now comes back here with the names of two Members of this House who are said to be corrupt, and now is the time for us to demand an investigation, without a minute's delay.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. SNELL. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not quite follow the logic of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], especially at the end of what he says. He says that the special prosecutor is prevented by law from having any authority over the grand jury, and then at the same time he states that the special prosecutor has come back with the names of two Members of the House and has given them out.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. They are not names that he selected. They are the names of Members of this House selected by the grand jury in Chicago.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Precisely.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. He has simply come back and reported their names.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. In view of the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], what does the gentleman from Tennessee think of the advisability of directing this resolution to the President rather than to the Attorney General, in view of the fact that the President has the information?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the President has the information, he has it only by hearsay, and his statement to the House would be a "second-hand" statement.

Mr. HASTINGS. Why not direct it to this man Crim?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course the House is as much entitled to have it as the President is.

Mr. HASTINGS. Why not direct it to Mr. Crim, the special prosecutor?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. We are entitled to have it from the Department of Justice, the same source from which the President is said to have obtained it. Why should we have to take second-hand statements? Legally, I doubt if Crim had any right to go to the President and give him information as to grand jury action, but since he chose to do so it would seem that he might recognize the fact that—I understand he is a very good lawyer—Congress itself has the right to inquire of him concerning charges to its own membership. I do not want to call upon the President for the names. We are entitled to them as a matter of right, certainly much more than the President is entitled to have them. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. I certainly never said and I have no knowledge that Mr. Crim communicated the names to the President of the United States, and I do not think anybody has.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have no knowledge of that, except such statements as the newspapers cover.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is purely a rumor.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The gentleman has just made the statement, and I think correctly, that this House is entitled to the information requested in this resolution. Then why put the words in the resolution "if not incompatible with the public interest"? Let me call the attention of the gentleman to this: I have fought this out here a number of times on committees on which I have served. You never see any such language in Senate resolutions. A Cabinet officer is a creature of this House. Why should we insert that language in respect to information desired of a Cabinet officer? With the President we do use it. If we vote down the previous question, to be moved by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], we can then strike them out.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I rather hope the amendment will be offered before the previous question is ordered.

Mr. STEAGALL. I have such an amendment at the desk now, if the gentleman from New York will allow the amendment to be offered.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman will grant me two more minutes.

Mr. SNELL. I yield the gentleman from Tennessee two more minutes.

Mr. JONES. I suggest that according to the rules of the House this resolution should contain the word "direct" instead of the word "request."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It does say "direct."

Mr. SNELL. In answer to some inquiries made here I desire to say that I am credibly informed that Mr. Crim has not given these names to the President of the United States. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to take up the time of the House in undertaking to elaborate the statements already made. Of course this is a matter of supreme importance to the membership of the House itself and to the country, and I simply desire to suggest to the chairman of the committee that, although I do not want to be put in the attitude of appearing to object or opposing the resolution agreed to in committee, there has developed here a strong sentiment upon the floor of the House for the privilege of offering an amendment to the resolution which would strike out the words "if not incompatible with the public interest" and make it a direct demand upon the Attorney General.

Mr. STEAGALL. I have that amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And I trust the chairman of the committee, before he moves the previous question, will give my colleague from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] an opportunity to offer that amendment.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I will.

Mr. BURTNESS. The question is along the line suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON]. As I heard the resolution read it called for two things, namely, the names of the persons who are under suspicion, and secondly, the nature of the charges. That resolution could, therefore, properly be obeyed by simply sending in the report such as John Doe, bribery; Richard Roe, some other offense. The question in my mind is this, whether it might not be advisable to amend the resolution so as to ask not the nature of the charges, but the nature of the evidence or information upon which the report of the grand jury was made.

Mr. SNELL. If we tried to write in too many technicalities we may not get anywhere. We wanted to get something that is plain and direct. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield me two minutes?

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I will.

Mr. FRENCH. It has been stated that this procedure is new. It has not been brought out here just what would be done. Suppose the evidence indicated first the two names, and second, the nature of the charges, such statements may be wholly irresponsible and wholly false and they might blight the life of any man however upright. It would seem that we ought to define at this time something of the nature of the procedure, and it would seem that would be in the way of a committee to take charge of this matter rather than calling for names and the nature of evidence. This is not the finding and report of the grand jury.

Mr. SNELL. We have considered that very carefully, and it is impossible for us to go any further at this time until we know where we are at as provided for in this resolution.

Mr. FRENCH. What procedure would be had?

Mr. SNELL. I can not tell the gentleman until we get the information. It will have to be left to the judgment of the House. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL].

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STEAGALL: Strike out of the resolution the words "if not incompatible with the public interest."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to consume only a few moments' time in discussing this matter. It was my intention when we met this morning to call the attention of the House to the situation in which we find ourselves, but I learned that the Rules Committee had the matter under consideration and would make some sort of report during the day. I think my amendment should be adopted and the special assistant in the Department of Justice should be required immediately to present to the House the names of the two Members at whom the Chicago grand jury report was directed. This House should be the judge of whether or not it is compatible with the public interest for the Department of Justice to furnish us with this information. These charges concern the House of Representatives above everybody else in this country. Nothing that can be done elsewhere or by any other body can be so important as the right of this House to deal with these charges. The Constitution empowers this House to expel a Member found guilty of corruption. No other action can compare to this in importance; no other punishment means so much to the public welfare as proper punishment administered by the House. The special attorney for the Department of Justice, according to newspaper reports, has given out a statement to the effect that he is not going to furnish this House with the names of the two Members against whom charges of corruption have been made, but that he is going to proceed elsewhere to investigate those charges, intimating that they would probably be the subject of grand jury investigation.

The President, according to the newspapers, issued a statement of very similar import. The power which the Constitution lodges in this House is put there for the purpose of protecting the country and the membership of this House against having its action influenced and legislation controlled by Members known to be corrupt. The important thing for this House and for the country is that we shall exercise the power intrusted to us under the Constitution and act for the public welfare. Are we to sit here for six months, or a year, or two years, or until the terms of every Member of this House shall expire, while a grand jury is dragging out an investigation of these charges, and the House be denied the informaton necessary to enable us to ascertan whether Members of the House are guilty of these charges which the press has carried from one end of the land to the other? It is our right, it is our prerogative, it is our duty to act for ourselves in this matter.

The Constitution gives us the power, and we ought to assert it by calling on the Assistant Attorney General or the special assistant in the Attorney General's office to give us this information immediately. He should be required to furnish it now and not left to decide whether he thinks it wise or best to do so. Nothing else the House can do can possibly approach this matter in importance both to the body and to the country. We ought not to lose a day or an hour in having this matter brought to the full understanding of this House and proper action taken on it. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CRAMTON, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted for printing under the rule the conference report on the bill and accompanying statement (H. R. 5078) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes.

SOLDIERS' ADJUSTED COMPENSATION.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to offer a suggestion in the nature of a real adjusted compensation proposal.

We agreed to pay the soldier who fought our battles $30 per month. This is how we carried out our part of the contract:

First. We practically compelled him to insure his life—a life dedicated to his country—and deducted out of his meager pay the cost of the insurance. In other words, we made him pay for the risk he was taking in his country's cause. It is almost unbelievable that a sane country could ever have imposed such a penalty on patriotism.

The country insured its ships, its food and supplies, its munitions, its cannon and its shells, but the men of blood and flesh, who were to use them, were taxed heavily because they wore their country's uniform and were risking their lives in defense of the Nation's honor.

That was a foolish and unjust course to pursue. It has long been the practice of employers all over the country to carry the insurance of their employees—the theory being that the risk of the employee is the risk of the employer. How much greater was this true where the employer was the Government of the United States and the employees were the soldiers and sailors who were to offer their lives in the defense of their country?

But it is not too late to right the wrong, and we ought to do that first of all before we talk of a bonus.

Then we made our patriotic soldiers and sailors make allotments for the benefit of their dependents. Of course, we should never have drafted men with dependents. There never was any necessity for it. But we did it.

Now, the net result of these two mistakes was to reduce the pay of the soldiers at the front and in the camps by $20 per month.

If we are honest about this talk of adjusted compensation; if we really mean what we say about adjusting their pay, let us return to every one of them the $20 per month by which their agreed pay was unjustly diminished. That would be real adjusted compensation.

I do not say that that is enough. I do not say that we ought not later to go further; but before we do anything else we should first accord to them this measure of justice.

What will it amount to? On the average, $270 to every enlisted man.

How will we do it?

By issuing to them certificates of indebtedness for the amount due them, with 4 per cent interest from November 30, 1918.

And I would not tag any strings on it. I would let them do whatever they damn please with it—negotiate, pledge, keep, or spend it.

What will it cost the Government?

Not a cent to-day except for the printing and distribution.

One year from the passage of this bill it will cost us about $21,000,000 for interest and $50,000,000 to go into a sinking fund for amortization. In 10 years the burden will have faded into nothingness.

I have had the proposal before Congress since March 29, 1920, as appears by the following summary:

House bills introduced by Hon. Anthony J. Griffin, Member of Congress, of New York.

Congress.	Number of bill.	Date of introduction.	Features.
Sixty-sixth.....	H. R. 13333...	Mar. 29, 1920	Return of war-risk insurance premiums and allotments.
Sixty-seventh..	H. R. 257.....	Apr. 11, 1921	Return of war-risk insurance premiums and allotments.
Sixty-seventh..	H. R. 10276...	Feb. 3, 1922	Return of war-risk insurance premiums and paid-up insurance.
Sixty-eighth...	H. R. 764.....	Dec. 5, 1923	Return of war-risk insurance premiums and allotments.
Sixty-eighth...	H. R. 7701....	Mar. 6, 1924	Return of war-risk insurance premiums and allotments with interest.
Sixty-eighth...	H. R. 7702....	Mar. 6, 1924	Return of war-risk insurance premiums and allotments with interest and paid-up insurance.

In the last two bills introduced to-day I have added interest from November 30, 1918, as a feature which will augment the average amount coming to the ex-service men by about $40. Under my plan, therefore, the average payment will be about $270 to each beneficiary.

I have also restored the insurance feature contained in my bill of February 3, 1922 (H. R. 10276). This is purely elective, but the offer is made attractive by increasing the face of the policy by 25 per cent.

But the vital and distinguishing factor in my bills has been the logical purpose to adjust the compensation of the ex-service men by restoring to them what was improperly deducted from their pay. If we owe them at all, as is so often stressed as though it were a mere business proposition, we owe them the whole of the $30 a month which we agreed to give them; and the only logical and strictly just way of paying that obligation is to restore to them the war-risk insurance premiums and the allotments deducted from their pay, with interest at 4 per cent from November 30, 1918.

MUSCLE SHOALS.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, while the admirers of nature stand in awe and watch the many and wonderful developments take place in this great country others stand in fear and trembling that all the natural resources may be transferred to private interests for undue consideration.

Civilization is merely a product of cooperation, and cooperation grows out of contact—the contact of men with men and with the facts, forces, laws, and resources of nature.

When humanity first made its start along the winding and ever-widening pathway which we call history it attracted but little attention.

Compared with his surroundings man was of but little concern and placed in rather an embarrassing position to achieve mere existence. However, he had some advantages that the lower animals did not possess. He possessed reason and had a creative instinct.

He possessed the same thought that his descendants of to-day have, and achieved the same ambition to do something, get ahead. By bringing his mind and muscles in cooperation he began to progress.

When the great Creator fashioned this universe He formed the surface of this earth rather uneven, and purposely so, in order to meet all the requirements which it took to satisfy the many curiosities of man. He made the mountain peaks with descending slopes that sediment might automatically be delivered to the plains below; the streams to be a drainage system for the water which might be collected in the valleys; these peculiar formations were not especially adapted to any one continent or country, but found in all countries; thus it so happened that Muscle Shoals appears on the map to bring about so much argument and contention.

This disposition of nature has come into prominence and is destined to be of very great use to man unless selfishness and jealousy predominate and retard its progress.

It takes a man quite a while to ascertain what is placed at his command and convenience, and after this is discovered it still takes time to develop and place at the service of the public what nature intended for all to enjoy. And then often such circumstances so prevail as to allow special privileges to predominate over equal rights. Will it be so with Muscle Shoals, which, if properly developed, equitably utilized, will be of vast importance to all the people of the Government; fertilizer will be manufactured and delivered to every State in the Union for the use and benefit of the farmer and grower at half the present cost. Moreover, many other articles of usefulness in every home will be manufactured.

This great plant if carried on to completion will not only be a benefit to all who live in a radius of 500 miles, but will be an example and model for many other similar projects to be started on other waterways in the country.

When some great genius appears and places his ideas in operation in some form of usefulness, the ideas released are immediately put in operation by other persons in other places, thus everybody receiving a benefit thereby.

Now, this great project of nature's own design which is partially developed and the completion of which is creating more or less contention and criticism is far from having reached a conclusion.

The Muscle Shoals properly crystallized and a definite conclusion ascertained such as would meet with universal approval and prove in the end to have been the right conclusion would mean a great profit to a large number of people.

The question before the House is whether or not Mr. Ford, a person who has clearly demonstrated to the world that he has made, so far as wealth is concerned, the greatest success of any living person, is clearly capable and able to take this proposition of Muscle Shoals, bring it to a completion, set it in operation, render it productive and very useful, should be granted the rights and privileges to do so. We will admit it is a very large responsibility for us to turn over to anyone that gigantic proposition, to turn over the power which belongs to 110,000,000 people to a single individual, or a corporation to be controlled by an individual; but if there is no other person or body of persons who will accept it and take the same responsibility, what other course is there open to us?

The question naturally arises, Why do not other concerns or other private individuals make investigation and come in competition with Mr. Ford? It seems that the great and paramount difficulty is that it is beyond the power of most concerns, and then there are others who would like to see the Government continue to own, complete, and operate the plant, with hope that it would not be successful in its operation and the production of fertilizer, which, if produced and placed on the market, would be very harmful to other nitrate and fertilizer concerns.

The contract seems to be a fair and equitable one and not open to or subject to fraud, and if not accepted the only alternative is Government ownership and operation, which, in view of the character of the project, would be, in the minds of many, not only a failure but disaster and disappointment to the hopes of the farmers and other users of commercial fertilizers.

The proper course, in my opinion, is to sell this tangible project to private individuals or to some corporation on such conditions as Congress has prescribed, lease the power for a reasonable and equitable rental, give American capital and ingenuity an opportunity to work for the benefit and welfare of humanity, where a great water power can be developed, reserving such rights and privileges as the Government thinks would be useful to it in time of need, and at the same time giving an opportunity for relief, not only to this great Southland but to the entire country, by making a high grade of fertilizer at a reasonable price.

Inasmuch as a number of other speakers have vividly presented facts in the way of figures to show the cost of the equipment and the terms of the lease, I will not consume the time to make a restatement of that which has been so clearly set forth.

In conclusion, may we be permitted to view the situation from an unselfish and unbiased mind. This great enterprise, Muscle Shoals, on which the vision of this entire country is focused, is on and is a part of one of our great inland waterways, the Tennessee River, many miles in length, flowing through a wonderful farming country, the draining system for millions of acres of fertile land, which comprise a portion of the great Cotton Belt, which has not only clothed America but inhabitants of other countries for many years, and the long-continued use of this once fertile soil has greatly weakened it in fertility. In other portions of the country, for hundreds of miles in every direction, the lands which have been cultivated for, lo, these many years have, also, become very greatly weakened and badly in need of rehabilitation. The virgin plains of the great West are rapidly losing their strength and failing in production and are much in need of high-class fertilizer to replenish them and again bring them back to their own former strength.

Looking at the situation from an unselfish angle and in the manner thus presented, we are considering only the welfare of the entire people of this Government, and trusting that whatever is done will be done in a patriotic spirit and to accomplish a substantial relief for all who are engaged in agriculture or in a position to be a user of the products of agriculture.

It seems to me that, considering the situation as a whole, the greatest amount of good will be rendered to the largest number of people by passing the bill or resolution which is now under consideration, and I therefore urge its passage. [Applause.]

AMENDMENT OF THE REVENUE ACT OF 1921.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I call up a privileged bill, H. R. 6901, with reference to credits and refunds of taxes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa calls up for consideration the bill H. R. 6901, claiming that it is privileged. The Clerk will report it by title.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, let us hear what it is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know. The gentleman from Iowa claims it is privileged.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is a unanimous report from the Committee on Ways and Means, and it merely seeks to extend the present law respecting the claims of the taxpayers. It has to come in by the 15th of March in order to be of any value.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6901) to amend the revenue act of 1921.

Be it enacted, etc., That the time within which a taxpayer, who, at the time of the passage of this act, is entitled to file a claim for refund under section 252 of the revenue act of 1921, as amended by the act of March 4, 1923, is hereby extended to and including April 1, 1925: Provided, That such taxpayer has filed, prior to filing such claim, or shall file therewith, a waiver extending to and including April 1, 1926, the time for the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to make an additional assessment for the year or years to which the claim for refund relates: Provided further, That nothing herein shall in any way abridge or affect the right of a taxpayer under the first proviso of the said section 252 of the revenue act of 1921 as amended by the act of March 4, 1923, to file a refund claim before the expiration of two years from the time the tax was paid.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

"That the second proviso of subdivision (a) of section 252 of the revenue act of 1921 as amended by the act entitled 'An act to amend the revenue act of 1921 in respect to credits and refunds,' approved March 4, 1923, is amended to read as follows: 'Provided further, That if the taxpayer has, within five years from the time the return for the taxable year 1917 was due, filed a waiver of his right to have the taxes due for such taxable year determined and assessed within five years after the return was filed, or if he has, on or before June 15, 1924, filed such a waiver in respect of the taxes due for the taxable year 1918, then such credit or refund relating to the taxes for the year in respect of which the waiver was filed shall be allowed or made if claim therefor is filed either on or before April 1, 1925, or within two years from the time the tax was paid.'"

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended so as to read: "A bill to amend section 252 of the revenue act of 1921 in respect of credits and refunds."

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. GREEN of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

THE CUSTOMS SERVICE.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, when the great American subject of the tariff is being discussed by the people in political campaigns, and the arguments pro and con are being made as to a low or high tariff and the effect upon American prosperity, little thought is given to the matter of the machinery to make the tariff effective either as a matter of protection for American industry or as a source of revenue for the carrying on of the Government.

It is appreciated in a general way that the tariff or duty must be collected, but as to the manner and means of doing it that is a matter of detail that the general taxpayer thinks little about.

The administration of a tariff act involves great detail. The effective administration of it can only be accomplished by men of intelligence, honesty, and energy. It is not a simple task. The men who do the real work must have a thorough knowledge of the provisions of the law; they must have wide knowledge of merchandise; they must be painstaking; their integrity must be beyond reproach, and they must be imbued with the zeal of service.

Outside of the receipts from income taxes, the receipts from the duties upon imported merchandise constitute the largest source of revenue for the carrying on of the Government.

1923	562,189,039.00	11,651,166.00	2.07	3,781,259,144.00

It will be noted that the customs receipts for the fiscal year 1923 were the largest collected during any fiscal year and exceeded the receipts of the previous year by approximately $204,644,000.

The imports during the year 1923 were valued at approximately $3,781,000,000, an increase of $1,173,000,000 over the value of the imports during the preceding year.

The maintenance of the service, notwithstanding the tremendous increase in amount of work, was increased only $493,579.

The cost of collection of duties was reduced from 347 mills per dollar to 231 mills.

Notwithstanding the enormous increase in value of imports and the amount of duties collected, the number of employees in the customs service has been decreased since 1911:

Fiscal year.	Number of employees.	Imports.	Receipts.
1911	8,089	$1,527,226,105.00	$314,497,071.24
1914	7,577	1,893,925,657.00	292,320,014.51
1922	6,659	2,608,009,008.00	357,544,712.00
1923	7,171	3,781,259,114.00	562,189,039.00

The efficiency and morale of the customs service is rapidly deteriorating. The pay is not sufficient to maintain a family upon. There has not been an increase in salary to meet the competition with other lines of effort.

The rate at present is as follows:

Rates of compensation and number of employees.

$301–$999	249

In the Buffalo district, which I represent, there are 106 full-time customs employees. Of these, there are 22 at $1,640 per year, three at $1,600, 39 at $1,460, 1 at $1,380, 17 at $1,277.50, 2 at $1,200, 1 at $900, and 2 at $840. The average salary is $1,376 per year. Most of these men are required to be men of ability and wide knowledge.

The collector of the port of Buffalo, in writing to me upon the subject, says:

Let me impress upon you that the customs service is made up of a body of highly trained and conscientious men. I make bold to say that the customs laws and other laws and regulations which the customs officer is required to know—and know accurately—are quite as complicated, quite as technical as are those of the legal profession, the medical profession, or the scientific profession, and the judgment required of the ordinary customs officer is quite equal to that of the successful business man.

Understand further that the customs force in this district, at least, is required to work seven days in the week, much of this being night work; fully one-third of the work is night work.

Rarely is the customs man able to take his Thanksgiving dinner, his Christmas dinner, or his New Year's dinner with his family. His Fourth of July fireworks are enjoyed in a railroad yard far removed from his wife and children. Lucky, indeed, is the customs man if he is able to accompany his family to church on Sunday.

* * * * * * *

Let me add finally that if something is not done the whole morale will be broken down, because we are finding it more difficult every day to maintain our force on our present average compensation of $1,376.

Compare the scale of pay of customs employees with the scale in other employment. The following table appeared in the New York Times in December, 1923:

The entrance salary for clerks in the customs service in the New York district is $1,000. It is upon men of the type who are willing to work for that pay that the service rests. Under the law when there is a vacancy in a higher grade, the vacancy must be filled from those in the lower grade if certified by the Civil Service Commission.

It is not possible to go out and pick up men who are capable of doing the work in the service. They should be men trained in the service. If the foundation upon which the service rests is not solid it is not difficult to appreciate what is going to happen unless an adequate compensation is given to call competent men into the service.

It has been reported to me that men are leaving the service every day, and that it is not possible to secure men equipped to take their places.

A statement recently submitted by Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Moss is instructive:

The comparative outside commercial salary scale runs from 40 to 200 per cent higher for these places. For illustration, guards, checkers, and inspectors get from $5 to $10 per diem, as compared with our $3 to $6 scale. Liquidators, withdrawal clerks, and entry clerks get at least 50 per cent more in commercial life. Merchandise examiners, with a salary range here of $1,500 to $3,500, are receiving outside salaries from $3,000 to $15,000. Many of our best examiners have left the customs service because of outside bidding for their service.

As examples of the gains customs employees have obtained by going into private business may be mentioned:

D. W., an examiner of oriental merchandise, receiving maximum compensation of $3,500 per annum; now customs adviser of an established oriental importing firm at a salary of $15,000 per annum and participation in profits.

A. M., a clerk to an examiner, receiving $1,800 per annum, resigned to accept $3,000 per annum with D. W., and now receiving $3,000 per annum.

D. L., formerly examiner of silk wearing apparel at maximum Government salary, $3,500 per annum; now head of glove department of large manufacturing and importing concern, at $15,000 per annum.

P. McG., formerly examiner of silk fabrics at $3,000 per annum, now customs broker, netted in 1923, $18,000.

G. F. L., formerly law clerk and assistant attorney, at $3,500 per annum, now member of established law firm; net earnings 1923, $14,000, plus participation in profits.

The situation is summarized by Secretary Mellon:

> The more I have looked into this question of the compensation in the customs service the more I have been impressed with the absolute necessity of relief. It is a highly technical service. It requires men of considerable education. They have to understand the laws and the regulations, and the amount of revenue collected depends very largely on their knowledge. The employment of incompetent men there may make a great deal of difference in the actual collection of the revenue. The salaries for a number of years have been very much below the salaries of similar occupations. They are about one-half of the salaries paid to people alongside who are doing work of a similar character; and the men have been looking forward to an increase and have been led to believe that there would be an increase. The consequence of all that is that the morale of the service is going down and has been going down for several years, and it is cumulative, and it has now reached a point where it is really serious.
> The men are going out and, of course, getting very much better compensation; and it has come to this, too, that it is impossible to recruit from a class of people capable of performing the duties of the service. The lists given to us are not eligibles at all; and why? Because it is impossible to get people there at the beginning rates who are at all capable. We can not get the talent that is necessary at the salaries paid.

The situation is absurd. An incompetent man in such a service is a financial loss to the Government and to the taxpayers. A competent man can justify proper pay. In the business world it is almost axiomatic that it is good business to pay good salaries. Why should the Government be so loathe to apply business principles to the conduct of its business?

The Budget Bureau seems to be set upon awaiting the report of the reclassification board. Over a year has elapsed and that matter is still in the air. From the present outlook the customs service will have been totally demoralized before results are obtained from the reclassification act. Unless the reclassification proposition is settled in this Congress and appropriations made accordingly, no increases will probably be available until the fiscal year 1926.

The Secretary of the Treasury was authorized by chapter 251, signed March 4, 1923, to increase the pay of customs employees 30 per cent, but he can not do it unless funds are provided by Congress. He has worked out a proposal that the pay of the employees be increased 40 per cent for the lowest paid and working down to 10 per cent for the highest paid. The total amount of the increase for 6,754 employees would be $3,313,075. The Senate has added $2,500,000 to the pending appropriation bill covering the Treasury Department. This will go far toward relieving the situation.

Standing upon a technicality of the failure of the Reclassification Board to reclassify as to the field service, the Budget Bureau seems willing to stand by and see the customs service demoralized. It is unwilling to approve appropriations that the morale of that service may be maintained but is perfectly willing to approve the expenditure of millions upon millions additional for the attempted enforcement of the unpopular prohibition amendment, that has brought disaster and blight upon our land.

The deficiency bill that is shortly to come before the House carries an item of appropriation of approximately $13,000,000 to provide a Coast Guard navy to engage in warfare against the enemy, rum.

The men in the customs service may go without bread, they may be obliged to live in hovels, their children may be denied education, their wives may not enjoy the ordinary pleasures and comforts of life, the collection of the customs to relieve the burdens of taxation upon the people and to protect the workingmen of the country from foreign competition may be abandoned or inefficiently done, but we must, regardless of any other consideration of sensible government, see to it that our people be protected against the Demon.

We will raise a new navy, to conduct open warfare with shot and shell, with destroyers and torpedo boats and mine sweepers, with a large personnel of officers and enlisted men. Our shores will reverberate with the sound of battle.

One item in the deficiency bill amounting to $12,194,900 is for boats. Another item is for pay and allowances for officers and enlisted men, amounting to $945,179.

It is proposed to transfer from the Navy to the Coast Guard 2 mine sweepers and 20 destroyers.

It is also proposed to construct 223 cabin cruiser motor boats.

The appropriation also provides for 149 additional commanders and lieutenant commanders, 419 additional warrant officers, and 3,789 enlisted men.

After they have spent this money the cost of maintenance estimated for each year is $10,500,000.

Thus comes to pass that the prohibition department has an army and navy of its own.

> Should once the world resolve to abolish
> All that's ridiculous and foolish,
> It would have nothing left to do.
> —Butler.

Let us retain some semblance of common sense and not devote all of the taxpayers' money to endeavoring to prevent somebody from getting a drink. We have got the prohibition proposition upon our backs, and it is proper that while it is here that it be enforced, but why let the whole Government go to pot in doing it. It is much more important at the present moment to appropriate sufficient moneys to prevent the customs service from going to pieces. This is also true with reference to other branches of the Government service.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, March 7, 1924, at 12 o'clock noon.

M'NEIL ISLAND PENITENTIARY.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, a few months ago a man was tried in the United States court in South Carolina and was sentenced to the McNeil Island Penitentiary on the coast of the Pacific Ocean. I criticized the Government officials for sending that man so far away from the place of trial. I did that for the purpose of finding out whether there was any law requiring such a sentence and to ascertain why he was not sentenced to a penitentiary nearer the place of trial. I took up the matter with the Attorney General's office and I am glad to have received a letter this morning which explains the matter and shows that it was not necessary to have entailed that expense upon the Government. I ask that the letter may be printed in the RECORD. I had intended to propose an amendment to the law, but under the circumstances it is not now necessary to do so.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., March 1, 1924.

Hon. N. B. DIAL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR DIAL: The necessary information to enable the department to make a satisfactory reply to your letter of January 15, 1924, written with respect to the case of a prisoner who was sentenced by the United States judge for the eastern district of South Carolina to imprisonment in the United States penitentiary at McNeil Island, has very recently been received.

Careful investigation shows that the United States attorney for the eastern district of South Carolina held the erroneous impression that the McNeil Island Penitentiary had been designated for military prisoners sentenced to a term of more than 10 years. No record of such a designation can be found in the department. That no such designation was ever made is evident from the fact that the McNeil Island Penitentiary is not as well adapted for the incarceration of dangerous characters as either the Atlanta Penitentiary or the Leavenworth Penitentiary, since it has only a barbed-wire inclosure instead of a permanent wall. The district attorney evidently advised the court of the impression that he had, and the prisoner was sentenced without the department knowing of the action taken by the court.

It is the fixed policy of the department to incarcerate prisoners in the penitentiary nearest to the place of conviction.

Yours very truly,

A. T. SEYMOUR,
Acting Attorney General.

BRIGHT ANGEL TRAIL, GRAND CANYON NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter dated March 5, 1924, from Hon. RALPH H. CAMERON, addressed to Hon. REED SMOOT, chairman Senate conferees on House bill 5078, the Interior Department appropriation bill, relative to an item appropriating $100,000 for the purchase of the Bright Angel Trail, Grand Canyon National Park, Ariz.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

MARCH 5, 1924.

In re item appropriating $100,000 for the purchase of the Bright Angel Trail, Grand Canyon National Park.

Hon. REED SMOOT,
Chairman Senate Conferees on H. R. 5078,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Section 2418 of the Revised Statutes of Arizona (1913), providing for the jurisdiction and powers of the board of supervisors, subsection 10, provides that the board shall have power to—

> "sell at public auction at the courthouse door, after 30 days' previous notice given by publication in a newspaper in the county, and convey to the highest bidder for cash any property, real or personal, belonging to the county, paying the proceeds into the county treasury for the use of the county."

The proposed item in this bill provides that the said sum of $100,000 if appropriated—

> "to be available until expended for payment to the county of Coconino, State of Arizona, for the construction, under the supervision of the National Park Service, of a road from Maine, Ariz., to the south boundary of the Grand Canyon National Park," etc.

It will be seen, therefore, that the proposed item of $100,000 if appropriated will not be paid over to the county of Coconino and deposited in the county treasury. In other words, the consideration proposed to the county of Coconino for this toll road and trail is a remote promise to expend $100,000 on a road almost wholly within forest areas.

Senator ASHURST in his remarks on this item on February 25, 1924, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 3053, says:

> "In other words, the $100,000 proposed to be appropriated is not to be paid into the treasury of the county to become cash assets of the county; the $100,000 will be expended, I repeat, under the supervision of the National Park Service for the construction of a road some 62 to 63 miles in length to the national park, from the great artery of auto traffic, the Santa Fe Trail, to the Grand Canyon."

Under the statutes of Arizona before the board of supervisors can sell real property—for instance, a road or trail—the same must under appropriate proceedings be declared no longer of a public use, be condemned, and then sold. According to the figures of the Department of the Interior, from October, 1922, to September 30, 1923, the number of persons who used this trail was 7,130, and the source of net revenue to the county was more than $4,000. Can it be said, therefore, that this trail has no public use in order to come within the statute for condemnation?

It is a question in my mind, should the Board of Supervisors of Coconino County transfer this toll road and trail contrary to the statute, and in doing so not receive and place in the county treasury the consideration therefor, whether they would not be liable to indictment.

It has been stated that I have some interest in certain mining claims within the Grand Canyon National Park which have been the subject of litigation. I reiterate that I have not at the present time, and have not had for many years prior to the date of the creation of the Grand Canyon National Park in 1919, any interest in claims title to which is being litigated by the Government of the United States.

It has also been said that the water from two springs on the Bright Angel Trail has been polluted with typhoid germs. Title to one of these springs is in the county of Coconino, Ariz.; the other in a mining location in which I have had no interest for many years.

I wish to add, further, should the $100,000 be paid to the county of Coconino, as proposed by this legislation, the whole amount thereof could not be applied to the building of the proposed road under the laws of the State of Arizonia.

Therefore, in view of the law, it is my opinion if this proposed legislation is enacted it can not be consummated, and is illegal.

With kind personal regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

RALPH H. CAMERON.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Farrell, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill

(H. R. 6901) to amend section 252 of the revenue act of 1921 in respect of credits and refunds, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

INVESTIGATION OF INTERNAL REVENUE BUREAU.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, Senate Resolution 168 was offered to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. A similar resolution is pending before the Finance Committee. The Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate have reported back favorably Senate Resolution 168, and I ask, with the consent of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], who is the author of the resolution, that it may be referred to the Committee on Finance. I have the assurance of that committee that tomorrow it will be considered, and that action will be taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is so referred.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that on the 4th instant the President had approved and signed the bill (S. 2583) granting a franking privilege to Edith Bolling Wilson.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6901) to amend section 252 of the revenue act of 1921 in respect of credits and refunds, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF AGRICULTURE (S. DOC. NO. 58).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I invite the attention of the Congress to the accompanying report of the Secretary of State concerning requests made by the Secretary of Agriculture that legislation be obtained that will enable an appropriation of $10,045 to be made for the expenses of nine delegates to the meeting of the General Assembly of the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome in May next, and an appropriation of $5,000 to enable the United States to meet the obligation which would be incurred in requesting the admission to the institute of Hawaii, the Philippines, Porto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

I quite agree with the views of the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Agriculture that it is important to the agricultural interests of the United States that this country should be adequately represented in the general assembly of the institute, and that the United States should have in the assembly a voting strength and influence equal to that of any other country. I therefore commend the requests to the favorable consideration of the Congress.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 7, 1924.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 6349) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 15, which the Secretary will report.

The READING CLERK. On page 15, line 8, the committee proposes to strike out "$13,680,140" and insert "$16,180,140," so as to read:

For collecting the revenue from customs and for the detection and prevention of frauds upon the customs revenue, including not to exceed $15,000 for the hire of motor-propelled, passenger-carrying vehicles, $16,180,140—

And so forth.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, in the consideration of a bill which appropriates $700,000,000, we have arrived at an item which I feel I ought to oppose, and to save, if possible, the taxpayers of the country $2,500,000. It seems that when we consider the question of saving $2,000,000 to the taxpayers of the country the Senate does not care anything about it. This is a small amount of money—only $2,000,000.

I want to take up the item to show that we are now appropriating $4,000,000 more that was appropriated during the Democratic administration and during the last administration for this purpose. The appropriation last year was $12,000,000 for the collection of customs. The House, I suppose, because of the difficulty in getting good men to serve, on account of the salaries, increased the appropriation to $13,000,000, an increase over last year of $1,500,000. When the bill came to the Senate the Senate Committee on Appropriations concluded they would go two better and so increased it $2,500,000.

I happened to be present when Mr. Mellon came before the committee. I said, "Mr. Mellon, this has not been estimated for." He said he thought he could get an estimate for it and that it would come down later. I was not present when he returned, as I had business on the floor of the Senate at that time, but when he came back he came without the estimate. He could not get an estimate. He could not get the Budget to increase the estimate from $13,000,000 to $16,000,000, although he tried to do so. Why? Because the Budget and the President, I suppose, thought that $13,000,000 was sufficient.

Now, let us look at the history of this matter. Senators talk about reducing expenses. Let us see. Under the Democratic administration in 1915 it cost $10,000,000 for the collection of customs of the Government; in 1916 it was $10,150,000; in 1917 it was $10,000,000; in 1918 it was $9,800,000, with a deficiency of $300,000, which made a little over $10,000,000; in 1919 it was $10,500,000; in 1920 it was $10,000,000; in 1921 it was $11,300,000; in 1922 it was $11,320,000; in 1923 it was $11,323,000; and in 1924 it was $12,000,000. That was for last year.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. OVERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Has the Senator from North Carolina the figures before him showing the total receipts from customs during the years he has named, in order that we may properly make the comparison?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think it makes any difference about the amount of receipts from customs. Of course, under the present high tariff law those receipts have increased greatly; but it does not cost any more to collect $500 than it costs to collect $1.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator will admit that there is a difference between the present situation and that which formerly existed, arising from the fact that there are many thousands of dollars' worth of merchandise which now comes in upon which customs are collected which formerly came in free. The absolutely necessary work involved in handling the shipments of merchandise which has to be examined and passed upon is more than ten times what it formerly was.

Mr. OVERMAN. Of course, there is no handling necessary as to the merchandise which comes in free.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. If there has been no estimate by the Budget Bureau for this appropriation, is it not subject to a point of order?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; and I am going to make the point of order, because it is not estimated for.

Mr. President, though I do not think the present chairman of the Committee on Appropriations would be subject to the criticism, I have found in my long service in the Senate that the rules do not amount to very much. If the chairman of a committee is in favor of a proposition, and has a majority back of him, what does a rule amount to? The present chairman of the committee knows the rules of the Senate, for he has been on the Rules Committee, and I know he is one of the best parliamentarians of the body. This item of appropriation has not been estimated for. The department estimated for $13,680,140 and the House of Representatives gave them $13,680,140. The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate now proposes to increase the item to $16,180,140, making an increase over the appropriation of last year of more than $4,000,000 for the collection of customs and revenues, and $2,500,000 over the amount proposed by the House, and $2,500,000 more than the sum estimated for by the Budget Bureau. Is the Senate going to approve of that? The Senate does not seem to care much about spending money. We provided for an appropriation of $500,000 here the other day for an institution in this city, but the House of Representatives would not for a minute agree to that appropriation, and they rejected it.

Mr. President, I think we ought to consider the taxpayers of the country. I do not want the Republicans this year to go before the people and say, "We are saving money and reducing expenses," as was contended here on yesterday, when, as a matter of fact, in this one item the expenditures have been increased from $11,300,000 in 1921 to $16,180,140 for this year, making an increase larger than ever before, and it is proposed to appropriate $16,180,000, notwithstanding the estimates of all the officials concerned except Mr. Mellon himself, who comes down and tries to get this increased allowance, and does get it against the Budget Bureau estimate.

So I express the hope that the Senate will consider the matter. Let us try to save the taxpayers of this country this enormous amount of money, which the Budget Bureau has stated is not needed. That statement is proven by the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury tried to get the appropriation estimated for as a supplemental estimate, but could not do so, with all his power and influence, for the President and General Lord knew that $13,680,000 was sufficient.

Therefore, Mr. President, the appropriation not being estimated for, I make the point of order against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is ready to rule. The rule prohibits the offering of amendments increasing the amount of an appropriation if they have not been estimated for, but it applies to such amendments only when offered by individual Senators. The first paragraph of Rule XVI permits any standing committee to propose such amendments. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, it is true, as stated by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], that the appropriation here proposed by the committee for the purpose of collecting customs duties is larger than formerly; that it has been increased. However, it must be remembered that the work required to be done is very great, much greater than it has been heretofore. The Government is now collecting many millions a month from customs duties, whereas formerly it collected hardly a fraction of the amount now collected. All imported merchandise has to be handled by laborers and clerks in order to see that the Government receives the amounts which are properly due upon the various character of imports. It is due to the importers at this end of the line who have purchased the goods, and it is due to those who ship them, as well as to the Government of the United States, to see that there shall be a fair and correct collection of the customs duties on all imported merchandise under the law.

The present condition may be stated to be this: There have been for some years past—I should say for as many as four or five years—very strong pleas made before the Committee on Appropriations for an increase of the salaries of the employees in the New York Customhouse. Those employees have made heart-rending appeals and, in my judgment, they have given good reasons for their complaints, because the wages which the department has been permitted to pay to the employees of that service are below those which are paid to persons similarly employed in the Post Office Department and in other lines of business which are conducted by private corporations and by private individuals.

Under the law the Post Office Department arranged the pay of its own employees after meetings and action by committees of both Houses and after action by Congress itself. Yet bills have been introduced on the other side to increase the pay of the postal employees. The postal employees working along the same lines and, in fact, even intermixed with the employees of the customs service, receive about $250 more per annum than has been allowed to the customs laborers.

Every year there have been very strong arguments presented to increase the compensation of customs employees, but we have not felt, in view of the work of classifying the Government employees which is carried on and the law for that purpose which is being applied to the compensation of labor under all the departments, that we should raise the salaries of the customs employees. So they have waited from day to day and year to year, as others have done.

Last year on the 4th of March Congress passed what is called the Calder Act. The distress was such that it seemed necessary to give customs employees some relief, and so that bill was passed allowing an increase of wages not to exceed in any case 30 per cent. The law, however, became almost inapplicable because the appropriation which had been made prior to that time was not sufficient to provide the necessary funds, and consequently the Calder law could not be put into effect. Besides this the number of employees needed to be very greatly increased to take care of the expanding business. The complaint before us was that not only would the salaries and wages be too small after July, but in the meantime the deficiency appropriation that had already been determined upon by the House under the law was too small to provide for the necessary payments up to the first of next July.

The distinguished Senator from North Carolina, I think, stepped out of the room just previous to the time when the consideration of this bill was completed, and I wish to say that the Senator from Tennessee was absent because of other public business; so that they may well be unacquainted with the argument that was presented by the collectors of the ports of Seattle, San Francisco, and New York and their assistants who have to deal with the matter of labor.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is it not provided by the Budget law that no chief clerk or head of a department shall be permitted to come before a committee and ask for a greater appropriation than has been estimated for? Is not that the law, and is it not a crime to act contrary to that provision of the law?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator has the law before him, and I will let him answer that question; but if we send for officers of the Government to give evidence and furnish information, are they to be blamed for appearing before the committee?

Mr. OVERMAN. If we send for them they probably have to come down.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will look at the law again he will find that Cabinet officers and the employees to whom he has referred may not come before the committee and undertake to override the Budget, but it is not denied to the Senate and the House of Representatives to send for any one or all of them and question them.

Mr. OVERMAN. If we send for the customs officers that is another question, and the Secretary of the Treasury, I presume, would have the right to come if he wanted to, but the heads of the various bureaus and divisions have no right to come and it is a crime for them to do so to seek for increased appropriations unless we send for them.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator will remember that he did not favor the Budget law and I did not vote for it, but we take shelter under it, as the Senator is now doing.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am trying to take shelter under a law which has been enacted by Congress.

Mr. WARREN. That is all right, but is the Senator ready to forfeit our right to send for whatever officials of the Government we may wish to hear? Secretary Mellon did not come before the committee without an invitation. Pressure in regard to the situation in the customs service as well as the situation in the Internal Revenue Bureau comes to the Committee on Appropriations from all directions and all sides. Hence information is asked for, and the committee through its clerk invites the proper officials to come before it to give evidence. I do not know whether it is true that Secretary Mellon went to the Budget and made a plea for this additional appropriation, but the Senator is right in saying that we have not an estimate of the Budget for that particular part of the appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the facts about this matter are that when the bill was under consideration before the Appropriations Committee Secretary Mellon appeared and this occurred, as shown on pages 22 and 23 of the hearings:

Secretary MELLON. There is another matter which does not come in under any communication as yet from the department, and that is relating to the customs service. It is a matter primarily for the Director of the Budget, but it has been taken up with the Director of the Budget and with the President lately; and as it is hardly appropriate for the Secretary of the Treasury to bring it before your committee, I should like to ask whether there may be an opportunity for the Director of the Budget and myself to appear on the question of an additional appropriation for the customs service.

I call the attention of the Chair to this because of a motion which I intend to make in a few moments.

The CHAIRMAN. What time would you suggest?

Secretary MELLON. We can arrange it for whatever time may be convenient for you.

Senator OVERMAN. It depends upon when the Budget sends down the estimate. The estimate from the Budget has not yet come in.

Secretary MELLON. This was not included in the estimate of the Budget at all.

I call especial attention to the testimony of the Secretary.

Mr. OVERMAN. He did not get General Lord to come with him, did he?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am reading the testimony just as it appears, and will come to that question in a moment, I think:

Senator OVERMAN. You want to have them make a supplemental estimate?

Secretary MELLON. It is of that nature.

Senator OVERMAN. We should like to get it down before this bill is reported out.

Secretary MELLON. How soon may that be?

The CHAIRMAN. Can you come to-morrow morning at 10.30 or some time to-morrow morning?

Secretary MELLON. I will see. I am not entirely sure.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose you come to-morrow, if it is convenient; if not, not later than the next day. We want to push the bill along.

Secretary MELLON. Very well. I will advise you as to that. I am not sure whether the Director of the Budget can be here then or not. He may possibly be out of town.

I need not read further.

Again, on page 149 of the record, Secretary Mellon appeared again. Neither Secretary Mellon nor the Director of the Budget ever estimated for this item. There is no Budget recommendation for it.

If the Chair will look at page 15 of the bill, this is the committee amendment increasing the appropriation for this purpose from $13,680,140 to $16,180,140. The rule of the Senate on the subject, Rule XVI, reads in part as follows:

All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation—

And this is both; this is specifically for the Customs Service—unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law—

And there is no law for it—or treaty stipulation, or act—

And there is no treaty stipulation or act for it—or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session—

And there is no resolution previously passed by the Senate during this session—or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate—

And that has not been done—or proposed in pursuance of an estimate submitted in accordance with law.

There is no estimate for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Tennessee tell the Chair what the status of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate is, if it is not a standing committee of the Senate?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is a standing committee, but it is not within the provision of this rule. If that were so, then the Appropriations Committee could report any amendment of any kind to any bill, and I do not think that was ever intended. Frequently, I know, the Chair has held that it could not do it. Of course, if the Chair takes that position, it could be done.

Mr. President, I want to say that I agree entirely with the Senator from North Carolina that this is an unnecessary appropriation. It is an increase of over $2,000,000 without any justifiable reasons being given—they are not to be found in the hearings—except the ipse dixit of the Secretary of the Treasury, and perhaps some clerk told him that it was necessary to increase the amount $2,000,000.

If we want to legislate in that way and if the Chair holds that the Committee on Appropriations is all powerful under the rules and can add any amendment increasing any appropriation that it desires, if that is the true meaning of the rule, the amendment is in order; but surely the Senate ought not to agree to it if it is in order. It ought to vote it down. There is no ground stated in the hearings anywhere that is sufficient upon which to predicate an enormous increase of this appropriation such as the one suggested here.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have known for the last three years, at least, that the Government of the United States was losing millions of dollars by not having the proper help to examine in detail the merchandise entering into the United States on which duties are to be paid; not $1,000,000 but millions of dollars every year. The last time I was in New York I went through the customhouse there, and it was so jammed and crowded with merchandise that it was almost impossible to get through. Merchandise coming into the port of New York had been there for nearly 30 days, and the importers were asking and pleading that some help should be secured in order that they could pay their custom dues upon the merchandise and allow it to enter into commerce. So, Mr. President, I favored this appropriation, because I knew that it meant money to the United States Treasury. Senators complain about the increase of $1,000,000, as compared with the year 1919. What are the results? During the year 1919 the percentage of expense of collecting money for the Treasury of the United States on imports was 5.46 per cent, while the cost of collection for 1923 was only 2.07 per cent. In other words, the cost of collecting each dollar on goods coming into this country in the year 1923 was less than half what it was in the year 1919.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator, I assume, is quoting figures for the entire country, for all the customhouses.

Mr. SMOOT. I am quoting figures for the entire country; and while I speak of New York, and I will admit that is the most congested place in the United States, nearly every customhouse has asked for additional help—it will be found in the House hearings beginning on page 658—showing that it is necessary to have 1,178 more employees in the service if the service is to be run in the proper way.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator permit me here to read what Secretary Mellon said this money was going to be used for, and then let me ask a question about it?

Mr. SMOOT. I will come to that, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to call the Senator's attention to this now. Secretary Mellon says it is to increase salaries. Now, does not the present reclassification act increase the salaries of these employees? Is it possible that we are going to make a lump-sum appropriation to increase the compensation of these particular employees and at the same time give them the increases of salary that are provided for in the reclassification act? Does the Senator think that is right?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say again that this year there will be a bonus of $240 for the field service. It is true that all the employees in the District of Columbia have been classified and allocated under the reclassification act, but that has not been done in the case of the field service.

Mr. McKELLAR. When will we get to the field service, in the opinion of the Senator?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that they are at it now.

Mr. McKELLAR. Can we get the result of their work by July 1?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it can not be done.

Mr. McKELLAR. In all the other bills we are appropriating on the assumption that we will get on the new basis by the 1st of July, and provision is made in this bill for the payment of salaries according to the reclassification act.

Mr. SMOOT. Why, certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. We are raising their salaries in that way and now we come along and propose to give the Secretary of the Treasury $2,000,000 more for further salary increases to the same employees.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand that this increased sum is in the nature of a bonus to the employees?

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; I spoke of the bonus because of the fact that for the last four or five years all employees in the field service have received the $240 bonus. There will be no bonus for the employees in the District of Columbia this year, and the provision in the bill specifically states that they shall be paid under the reclassification act; but the field service has not been reclassified, and therefore we can not make that provision for the field service. Before this session of Congress adjourns, therefore, there will be presented a bill, applying to the field service, carrying a general bonus of $240. That, however, does not change at all the salaries of these employees.

Mr. BORAH. I do not understand this yet. Do I understand that this amount—whether we call it a bonus, or an increase of salary, or whatever it is called—is to cover an increase of salary?

Mr. McKELLAR. It covers increases of salary.

Mr. SMOOT. A part of it is to increase the salaries, and I will tell the Senator why; but the great bulk of it is to provide additional employees that are absolutely necessary.

Mr. OVERMAN. I deny that, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator can deny it all he pleases. I say it is true.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am quoting the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let us clear this up by quoting just what Secretary Mellon says about it. It will take only a moment. He says:

> The more I have looked into this question of the compensation in the customs service the more I have been impressed with the absolute necessity of relief. It is a highly technical service. It requires men of considerable education. They have to understand the laws and the regulations, and the amount of revenue collected depends very largely on their knowledge. The employment of incompetent men there may make a great deal of difference in the actual collection of the revenue. The salaries for a number of years have been very much below the salaries of similar occupations. They are about one-half of the salaries paid to people alongside who are doing work of a similar character, and the men have been looking forward to an increase and have been led to believe that there would be an increase. The consequence of all that is that the morale of the service is going down and has been going down for several years; and it is cumulative, and it has now reached a point where it is really serious.

So it is perfectly clear that this appropriation is intended for an increase of salaries, and at the same time we have passed a law providing for reclassification, which will take care of that very thing.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senate will just let me state the facts in the case, I shall be glad to do it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not Mr. Mellon state the facts?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senate will give me a chance, I will do it.

Mr. President, the appropriation act for the current fiscal year, ending June 30, 1924, carried an appropriation of $12,100,000. The House in this bill increased that appropriation to $13,680,140. That increase was for the increase of salaries. The House provided that. The Senate committee provides that there shall be an increase of employees in this service, because it is absolutely necessary.

Mr. OVERMAN. To the extent of $2,500,000.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. GLASS. So that in the last analysis, then, one part of the appropriation is for the increase of employees and the other part, and perhaps the greater part, is for the increase of salaries?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the whole amount of the increase asked for was $3,664,555. That was the amount of the increase that was asked for. The House gave $1,580,140 increase for the increase of salaries. The Senate committee added to that.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. How does the Senator know that?

Mr. SMOOT. I know it because of the fact that it was so stated before the committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. Before our committee?

Mr. SMOOT. Before the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. I never heard any such statement.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator was not present.

Mr. OVERMAN. Who stated it?

Mr. SMOOT. It was stated on the second visit of a man whose name I will give to the Senator in just a minute.

Mr. President, as I stated, the increase in the number of employees was 1,178, distributed through all of the offices in the United States.

Instead of giving them the full amount we said, "We will not give you the $3,665,560, but we will give you $2,500,000," as stated by the Senator. What do we find? We find that men enter this service at an entrance salary of $1,000, whereas in some of the other departments of the Government they are entering at $1,400; and, mind you, the man who enters at $1,400 has to pass an examination only as a second-class clerk, while in this service the beginners must pass as first class. Not only that, but men are entering this service who will have to value merchandise to the amount of millions of dollars, upon which duties are imposed, and no human being can tell what the United States Government is losing.

Mr. President, as I stated, it is a physical impossibility for the present force of employees of these offices to handle the merchandise which comes to them, and I am told that there are cases by the thousands going through the customhouse at New York which are never opened because of the fact that there are not enough employees there to attend to the business.

As far as the question of the appropriation is concerned, if I owned the Government, had the payment of all the expenses of the Government, and collected all of the revenues of the Government, I would do just exactly as the committee is doing, except that I would go farther.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. If that is the case, why did our very able Secretary of the Treasury fail to disclose that situation to the Budget, and why did our very excellent Director of the Budget fail to see the situation as the Senator sees it? Is it possible that the Secretary of the Treasury did not know until the last minute what the necessities of his department were? Is it possible that the Director of the Budget, whom the Senator and other Senators have so often commended here, knew nothing about the business of the customs service? Why is it there is not a recommendation from the Director of the Budget?

Mr. SMOOT. I am not speaking now for the Secretary of the Treasury or for General Lord, the Director of the Budget. All the Senator can possibly say of General Lord by way of commendation I indorse with all my heart. I do not know whether this was submitted to him in time for the estimate or not. It may have been, and it may not have been; but I do know this, that if the Government of the United States wants to collect what is due, particularly at this time, when goods from all over the world are coming into the country undervalued, we had better have some men who know something about the business, and we had better have employees enough so that when the goods enter this country they can be properly valued and the man who purchases the goods from abroad can put them into the channels of trade.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I understand that the Senator's argument is that the House appropriated $1,800,000 for increases in salaries and the Senate committee recommended $2,500,000 for an increase in the number of officials.

Mr. SMOOT. No——

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I think about the reverse of that is the fact. The House put on an item to increase the force, and our committee put on several million dollars for increases in pay. I do not want to be understood as opposing the increases in pay, because I am in favor of them. The testimony before the committee clearly indicated that the customs service was losing some of its most valuable men every day because they could not live on the salaries they were receiving, and they would go out and get other employment; but it is well to understand what the facts are.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the facts are these, that the Government of the United States is paying its employees in the customs service in New York $1,000 a year, with a $240 bonus, and the very men who work alongside of them at daily labor at the docks get 50 per cent more than they do.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I want to say that I had occasion twice during the present fiscal year to pass through the New York customhouse, and I want to indorse everything the Senator from Utah has said about the conditions at the New York customs office. The most ridiculous piece of alleged economy ever heard of is the attempt to deny this appropriation. Not only have I observed the conditions there, but I know of the wages, and I know of the losses in appraisals because of lack of appropriations for more help, and also because of inability to get competent men to do the work.

Mr. SMOOT. I thank the Senator. I do not want to bring into this discussion any distinction between a white man and a colored man, but I want to say now that about the only man we can get to enter for certain work in the customs service is the colored man. Is there any man who would follow this method if it were his own business? Some colored men are just as bright as white men for this service, and I only speak of it as existing. It is not because men are not interested in this work. Mr. President, whenever they enter this service they advance, through the education given them in the positions under their Government, until they become men of importance in the service.

I suppose most of the Senators here know Mr. Fix and Mr. Davis, and I could go on down the list. They were young men who entered the service at $1,000, without any bonus. Are they still in the Government service? No; the Government does not pay that class of men half what they can get elsewhere, and we are losing them.

I want to say, Mr. President, that if something is not done, and done quickly, the whole service will go to pieces.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The only object I have in interrupting the Senator is to get information, for I want to be able to vote intelligently on this amendment. It is stated by the Senator that a certain amount of the appropriation is to be used to increase salaries and that a certain other amount is to be used to increase the force; but there is nothing in the language of the bill which indicates that.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; I suppose we could not show that. This is a general appropriation.

Mr. NORRIS. I know it is; but does the law limit the number of employees?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it does not. The appropriation limits the number of employees.

Mr. NORRIS. There is no limit stated here.

Mr. SMOOT. But the amount limits the number.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that; but there is nothing in this language in the bill which would prohibit the person in charge from using it all for increases in salaries or using it all for increasing the force. It seems to me, therefore, it is not an intelligent way of legislating. We ought to designate how much the force should be increased and how much of the appropriation could be used in increases in salaries.

Mr. GLASS. If I may interrupt, I will say to the Senator that the Secretary of the Treasury presented a detailed statement to the committee showing just what increases of force the service required, and at what points, all the way through; but very much the greater part of this amount, it may as well be stated plainly, is for increases of salaries.

Mr. NORRIS. That is all edifying and gives me what I want to know; but, at the same time, that provision does not go into the law. I do not understand why we should not stipulate in the appropriation act itself the increases in the number of employees and the increases in salaries.

Mr. SMOOT. Just as soon as the field service is classified and the allocations made under the classification law, then the appropriations will be made in the way the Senator suggests. The appropriation has always been made in this way in the past.

Mr. NORRIS. When a person comes to enforce this law, he will look at the law and he will not be bound by what the Secretary of the Treasury said before the committee. The present Secretary of the Treasury may be out of office and some other man may be in that office who may have a different idea from that of the one who is there now.

Mr. GLASS. It is a lump-sum appropriation, to be paid out by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the only law found on the statute books affecting the salaries of these employees is what is known as the Calder law, and the Calder law authorizes increases in salaries, but in no case to exceed 30 per cent. I have a copy of the law here.

Mr. NORRIS. That would not rectify what I think is a wrong method of legislating.

Mr. SMOOT. It would not answer the Senator's question; but, as I said, just as soon as the reclassification is made in the field service the appropriations will be made for so many clerks in grade 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, or 6, in class 1, 2, 3, 4, or 5, or whatever the case may be.

Mr. NORRIS. That provision ought to be in this bill, it seems to me.

Mr. SMOOT. That will be put into the law just as soon as the reclassification is made.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I want to present to the Senate certain aspects of this situation which have not yet been laid before it in any detail, because I have come to believe that the situation in our customhouses has reached the stage where we are facing a very grave danger. I have looked into this matter with the help of the collector of the port of New York, a gentleman whom I know intimately, and in whom I have entire confidence. He has a level, businesslike head on his shoulders, and when he describes the situation he knows what he is talking about.

I have had furnished to me a copy of a special report made by two officials of the Treasury Department, a Mr. Emmett S. Kyte, special agent, and Mr. Joseph W. Wheatley, a customs agent at large, who made an exhaustive investigation of the conditions in the customhouse. That report is long, and I shall attempt to read but a very small portion of it. I will pick out portions here and there, and endeavor to portray the situation which exists there.

As Senators know, these men start in in the customs service at $1,000 a year, plus the bonus of $240, which makes a total of $1,240. They start in at a lower salary than is paid employees in any other department of the Government; $1,400 being the minimum in other departments, such as the Post Office Department, for similar work.

Mr. NORRIS. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Why is that so?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Because the law was never amended, until the passage of the Calder bill last year. That bill authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to lift the limit of pay for laborers and others in the lower classifications; but no appropriation was made to permit the lifting of the limit, so they are drawing to-day just what they have drawn for a generation.

Mr. NORRIS. Is the law applying to the Treasury Department different from the law applying to other departments?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The law puts a maximum limit on the salaries the employees shall receive.

Mr. NORRIS. What I am asking about in particular is this: I do not quite understand why the beginner is compelled to start in the customs service at $1,000 a year, whereas in every other department he starts in at $1,400.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The law does it. Just now it is lack of appropriations that prevents the beginner from getting any more.

Mr. NORRIS. I can not see how the lack of appropriation would affect the law. If we have a different law about a beginner in the Treasury Department from the law applying to the beginner in the Interior Department, we ought to rectify that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. As I said a moment ago, prior to the passage of the Calder bill last year, the Secretary of the Treasury was limited to a certain designated maximum in fixing the salaries of those in the lower grades in the customs service. The Calder bill authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to lift that maximum fixed figure not to exceed 30 per cent.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me to say that the Calder law passed on the 4th day of March, weeks after the appropriation bills had passed?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. No appropriation has ever been made to meet the spirit and intent of the Calder law, so the men are still subject in effect to the old limitation.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask the Senator another question. Do the appraisers, whose salaries this particular item covers, necessarily have to be of the lower grade?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They have to start at the bottom as laborers and clerks and move up through the channel of promotion to higher salaries as assistant appraisers, appraisers, inspectors, and various other positions. It is a professional, technical service requiring experience and skill and, most of all, character.

Mr. SMOOT. In other words, I will say to the Senator, there are 3,339 employees that fall within the salary grade of $1,200 and below.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me quote portions of this report.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have not yielded. I ask permission to do this in such fashion as that the facts will come out in sequence.

The man who sweeps the street in front of the customhouse is paid $5 per day.

The customhouse employee with his bonus gets about $4 a day, and with usual overtime and double-time the man who sweeps the street gets $42 a week. The customhouse employee will make about $24 a week.

The casual laborer, recruited mainly from the floating population, for emergency work like snow removal, is paid at the same rate.

The longshoremen who work alongside the customs laborers, with similar tasks—

That is, handling packing boxes, shifting them about, opening them, showing them to appraisers who come along and examine the goods, and then packing them up and shoving them about, along with the longshoremen employed by the steamship companies—draw 80 cents an hour and $1.20 per hour overtime.

Eighty cents an hour for an 8-hour day is $6.40 a day, or $2.40 more than the Government employees working right alongside of him in overalls and doing the same work receive. I shall not go into the other classes of employees in the city of New York. Here is what the men say about conditions in the service to-day:

Many men with initiative, courage, and ability have regretfully left the customs service for employment more justly compensated and more plentiful in opportunity for advancement. Each loss of this character was an economic waste to the Government, as time and money must both be expended to fit each successor with a special knowledge essential to the conduct of operations in the customs. Promotions to do this are progressively made through the service, leaving eventually a minor vacancy to be filled, and at this point a deplorable situation exists. The present entrance salary in the customhouse is $1,000. The most that can be offered by resort to any expedient is $1,240.

Now listen to this:

In view of the wages and salaries paid in industrial and commercial pursuits this does not attract the caliber of men the customs service requires. The eligible list of the civil service from which certifications are made for employment in the customs produces mainly individuals of alien races with small knowledge of English, and others who are deficient in mental, moral, and physical qualities, which make them inadaptable to customs work. In some of the divisions the executives have grown weary of attempting to fill vacancies because of the character of eligibles willing to accept employment, and, though their personnel is below normal and their work in arrears, they go along as best they can. In some of them eligibles are accepted who are known to be deficient because none better are obtainable. To meet the "peak" stresses in the work of the various divisions temporary transfers from division to division are resorted to, each to the detriment of the specialized work from which employees are taken. The liquidating division in particular is complaining of the numerous details of liquidators to other work while that of the liquidating division is far behind.

Now, listen with care to this:

The importing public has long known of this situation, and it is a safe assumption that the dishonest importers are taking advantage of it to the great loss of the revenue. We are convinced that at this one point the Government is losing in revenue a sum of money largely in excess of any that would be required to restore the service to a normal basis.

With the steady and continuous loss of efficient, honorable, and self-respecting employees, and the absorption into the service of incapable and subnormal individuals, the customs service is withering in its branches and rotting at its roots.

If there is to be a protest against this increase in the appropriation, let it be done in the face of this official report by the two investigators sent to New York to examine into the situation. If the Senate wants this service to rot at its roots, let it deny this increase, for that is what is going on. The report continues:

This condition of decadence is a serious menace not only to governmental interests but to private interests dependent upon the integrity of the customs administration.

I am going to read just a portion of the testimony given before the Committee on Appropriations by a Mr. Levett, representing the Merchants' Association of New York. He said the Merchants' Association had received many, many letters from both importers and exporters in the city. As a result the Merchants' Association made an investigation of its own. They went through the customhouse and on the piers where the packing boxes are handled. He makes this observation:

I might instance one matter that came right before us, where we saw the examiner at work, the appraisers' assistant, and I said to him—and I might say that at that time I had a representative from General Lord's office with me—I said, "I suppose you verify that case?" He had a sense of humor, and he said:

"Sure. This is a case of hosiery. You see the box measures 3 feet by 2 feet by 4 feet, and those little boxes inside are 4 inches by 6 inches by 1 inch. All I have to do is to calculate the number of inches in the boxes and count them, and if the case is full it verifies the invoice, and I have verified the case."

And he had not looked at a piece of hosiery!

That went on right under the eyes of the representatives of the New York Merchant's Association. Why was it so? The man did not have time to do the work. There are not enough of them.

We went into another office, where we saw an examiner with a pile of invoices 13 or 14 inches high. I said, "What are those?" He said:

"Those are things we ought to look into. We are somewhat suspicious as to the correctness of them. But I have made up my mind we will have to push them along. We have not time."

That is the kind of supervision to which the imports of our country are subjected when they reach the customhouse or piers in the city of New York. Everybody knows that knows anything at all that that kind of supervision or lack of it means the loss of millions of dollars and is an open invitation to corruption.

Now, let us see whether the service is being operated economically. I have here the figures of the imports and exports from the port of New York, the number of vessels, the cost of collection, and the number of employees, tabulated from 1914 to 1923, inclusive. Let us see how the business has grown and see how the service has shrunk at the same time. In 1914 the value of the imports was $1,029,600,000. The number of employees in 1914—and this may be interesting to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], because I want to paint this picture to him as it actually exists—the number of employees in the New York customs service in 1914 was 3,186. To-day there are 2,864; that is, 200 less than there were 10 years ago. The business in imports, however, has increased from $1,029,000,000 to $1,770,000,000. It has increased in value of imports about 75 per cent. The number of employees has decreased in that period. The cost of collection back in 1914 was $0.0227. The cost of collection in 1923 was $0.0165. The cost of collection in 1923 is by far lower than any year since 1914. The cost of collection has gone up to as high as 4 cents in 1918 and 1919. It is down to 1¾ cents now. So that no charge of extravagance can be made. It is the lowest cost of collection in the history of the customhouse. It has fewer employees than it had 10 years ago. The business has increased 80 per cent in the value of imports alone.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator is referring to New York?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. If he will pardon me for saying just one word, those figures are substantially the same as the reductions in the Boston customhouse.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; they have been reduced everywhere.

Mr. LODGE. They have been brought away down. There has been no increase, as the Senator knows, for many years.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not since away back in the early seventies. These men are still straining along under that old pay.

Mr. LODGE. They are miserably paid, and the amendment ought to be agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Every Senator knows that since 1914 the cost of living has increased 66 per cent. The Bureau of Labor Statistics, in the Department of Labor, produces those figures for us in reliable form, and yet apparently there are Senators here who will say not one more penny shall be paid to these men, and are fighting any increase. My contention is that if we are to treat these men decently——

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, the Senator must not misrepresent those of us who are fighting the increase. We vote for the $1,800,000 increase.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And there should be more employees.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think so. But the Senator said we did not want to pay them one more penny. I do, and voted for it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am glad the Senator thinks so, but judging from the general tenor of the observations made apparently the item is attacked in its entirety.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, has my colleague called attention to the difficulty in getting new employees?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; I read from this report that they can not get people except those who speak broken English. I myself have seen the eligible list furnished to the clerk of the port at New York, and it looks like a roll call of the army of the Soviet Republic.

Mr. COPELAND. My experience in the administrative department of New York is that it is because of the low basis of beginners' salaries. It is most important to start in the service men who are going to be qualified when they reach their promotion. To my mind it is very important that provision be made for ample salary at the start, so that we can have the right kind of employees in the department.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask to have inserted in the RECORD the tabulation from which I quoted a few figures.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it will be printed in the RECORD.

The tabulation is as follows:

Comparative statement of transactions at port of New York.

Fiscal year.	Vessels entered and cleared.	Documents issued to vessels.	Entries of merchandise.	Value of imports.	Value of exports.	Total receipts.	Drawbacks paid.	Protests filed.	Number employed.	Cost to collect.

[1] Increase 282 searchers.

[2] Increase of 89 in average number of employees is occasioned by change in status of 51 extra or temporary laborers to permanent, and the addition of 43 employees in the four principal offices, 39 being openers and packers in the appraiser's department.

[3] Transactions for calendar year ended Dec. 31, 1923.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, of course, the Members of the Senate know that I am very heartily in favor of fair and just compensation for all employees of the Government. My uniform course here has been to vote in favor of increases whenever and wherever they were right and proper. In taking the position I have about this item to-day I have not changed that course in the slightest. It is a question of how it should be done, and the facts are so plain that I do not see how the amendment can be successfully defended. It may be that the salaries of those employees are too small. I am quite convinced that that is so, but the first thing I want to say about that is that we have already provided for that very thing in the reclassification act.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The reclassification act will not increase salaries until it goes into effect. Then it operates automatically, and the money now proposed to be given by way of increase in a lump sum then becomes applicable to the new set-up; that is all.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We would not be twice raising the salaries.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to submit the very highest authority, as it seems to me, on such matters in this body. For now more than seven years I have served in the Senate with the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], who has been here longer than has any of us. He is one the most competent and efficient Senators of whom I know. He understands the workings of the Government in all of its departments as well as does any man in the Senate. In taking the position I am taking in reference to the reclassification act, and the increase of salaries proposed by it, I am taking precisely the same position which was taken in the committee by the distinguished chairman of the committee. I will read from page 161 of the record of the committee hearings what the chairman of the committee then said.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Secretary—

The chairman of the committee was addressing the Secretary of the Treasury—

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Secretary, there is one feature that perhaps I ought not to mention, and yet I will. The classification that is now under way intends in its provisions to cut down nobody's salary, and to pay the salaries that the employees are receiving now or more. If a 30 per cent raise of salary or a 50 per cent raise of salary is made right down through, say, in the Treasury, the question will come up later in the classification, if they are not classified in the meantime, as to just where those will go; so that care ought to be taken, if we raise these salaries, to see that they do not exceed the amount that may be fixed under the most liberal terms of classification, or we will have trouble with every department of the Government. You realize what would happen if you undertook to raise salaries 30 per cent or 50 per cent right through, and we consented to it, and then adopted the classification for all the other departments. I agree with you that the salaries probably are too low.

Mr. WADSWORTH rose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one moment. That is precisely what I have stated here. The reclassification act will take effect in all human probability by the 1st of July next, when the pending bill will go into effect; and yet we are taking a recommendation which comes from the Treasury Department without the backing of the Budget Bureau, instead of first considering the effect of the classification act.

I say that to adopt a provision of this kind, permitting a lump-sum appropriation——

Mr. WARREN rose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one moment—which will increase salaries on an average of 30 per cent——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will give the percentages to the Senator in a moment. To increase the salaries by from 10 to 40 per cent, or an average of about 30 per cent, would be unwise legislation. I do not believe in lump-sum appropriations anyway. It is bad legislation whenever we indulge in it. It is a willful waste of the people's money in many instances.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I will pause to yield to the chairman of the committee, if he desires me to do so.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee is correct in his quotation from my statement in the committee. As to the classification law, in the first place it will not become effective until the 1st day of July next. It covers employees in the District of Columbia only, because the classifications as to those employees have been made. It is different, however, with employees in the field service and the employees in the customs service, including the service at San Francisco, Seattle, Boston, and other cities, who are covered by this appropriation. They are all in the same category, in a way. The classification act can not operate so as to become effective during the next fiscal year as to the field-service men. The consequence is that the only relief which may be afforded to them will be through the understanding which we have already had, namely, that they shall have a bonus after the 1st of July.

Now comes this particular case, which in New York and perhaps in the other cities is somewhat problematical, and is different from the others, because those employees are still receiving the salaries which they received back probably 100 years ago plus the bonus only; so that one, for instance, whose basic salary is $900 receives $1,140. Such an employee would have to suffer from now until some time probably 18 months from now before he would be able to secure the advantages of the classification which would then be in force. In the meantime here is a law which was passed on the 4th day of last March giving the employees the right to an increase of salary, except as to laborers, not exceeding 30 per cent of the wages that they have been receiving. That gave us the law governing the matter.

Then, what the Senator from Tennessee has read—and I thank him for his kindly compliments addressed to me, and appreciate them very much——

Mr. McKELLAR. They are deserved or I would not have paid them.

Mr. WARREN. We put the department on their guard, advising them that they must not increase the salaries of any of these men more than 30 per cent, and, probably, not so much; otherwise it would be necessary to go back and decrease salaries, and to decrease a man's salary after a year would disrupt his business very much more than it would to pay too small a salary in the meantime.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is, as I understand the Senator from Wyoming, in the event that the classification act should provide salaries somewhat lower than those allowed under this temporary increase?

Mr. WARREN. Yes. I gave them notice, and in a sotto voce conversation, after some of them had left the room, I stated that that danger was one as to which the committee trusted to their honor to see that they did not go beyond the amount proposed by the classification act. I then turned to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who was present, and who was a member of the committee which reported the classification measure, and, as I understood, he indorsed what I had said.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was just going to quote from the record of hearings before the committee to show that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] took exactly the opposite position when the hearings were held which he now takes before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I will read what the Senator from Utah said.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire that the Senator shall do it now, because I have not taken the position which he suggests.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will read what the Senator said and let him see.

Mr. SMOOT. I will explain it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I read now——

Mr. WARREN. I was about to read what the Senator from Utah stated, because, as I understand, the Senator from Utah indorses what I have said.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me read what the Senator from Utah said. The Senator from Wyoming had argued that the reclassification act was to go into effect and that the adoption of this amendment would bring about an unequal adjustment of salaries. Here is what the Senator from Utah said about it:

> And just as Senator WARREN says, if you now arbitrarily raise a salary, we will say, 50 per cent, and that 50 per cent is higher than the classification bill will allow the employee to receive after it is in force, then you will have trouble with the employees.

Mr. SMOOT. There certainly would be trouble with the employees.

Mr. McKELLAR. I can imagine the Senator from Utah taking issue with the Secretary of the Treasury, saying, "It will not do for us to do that; we must follow the reclassification act, which is intended to put all employees on an equal, fair, and just basis, and we ought not to pass this kind of legislation for one bureau of your department."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am delighted to yield to my friend from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, my statement was, as the Senator has quoted:

> And just as Senator WARREN says, if you now arbitrarily raise a salary, we will say, 50 per cent, and that 50 per cent is higher than the classification bill will allow the employee to receive after it is in force, then you will have trouble with the employees.

There is not any doubt about that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not a particle; and that is why we ought not to adopt this amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. There was not a solitary word spoken to indicate that there was going to be a 50 per cent increase. I merely wished to emphasize in an exaggerated way what the Senator from Wyoming had said, so as to demonstrate beyond question that those who were to raise the salaries were not to raise them above what the classification act would provide.

I will say to the Senator that when the classification is made and the allocation is brought about under the act there will not be one of the employees whose entrance salary falls under $1,000 but whose salary will be increased beyond the salary which will be provided for in this appropriation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then, why not leave it to the classification act? There ought not to be unequal increases at this time out of a lump-sum appropriation which gives to the department carte blanche to increase the salary of this man and leave the other man without an increase or to increase the salary of one woman and leave another woman without an increase. What we ought to do is to have uniform salaries for all the employees of the Government doing similar work.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the proposed increases in the salaries of customs employees are given in a list in the House hearings.

Mr. McKELLAR. They are in the Senate hearings also.

Mr. SMOOT. I believe I did have them put in the Senate hearings.

Mr. McKELLAR. Now, let me make a further suggestion. Much has been said about salaries. Let us see whether the salaries of the customs service employees are so unequal and inadequate and so different from salaries of other employees of the Government. The Secretary gave the salaries as they are now, and from his statement it appears that there are 249 who get from $301 to $999—I suppose those are largely charwomen and others who work only part time—there are 844 who get from $1,000 to $1,199—and, of course, all these figures are with the bonus—there are 1,292 that get from $1,200 to $1,399; there are 1,203 who get from $1,400 to $1,599; there are 805 who get from $1,600 to $1,799; there are 789 who get from $1,800 to $1,999; there are 760 who get from $2,000 to $2,199; there are 170 who get from $2,200 to $2,399; there are 313 who get from $2,400 to $2,599; there are 23 who get from $2,600 to $2,799; there are 38 who get from $2,800 to $2,999; there are 93 who get from $3,000 to $3,199; there are 36 who get from $3,200 to $3,399; there are 49 who get from $3,400 to $3,599; there are 29 who get from $3,600 to $3,799; there is one in the class drawing a salary of from $3,800 to $3,999; there are 26 who get from $4,000 to $4,199; there are 16 who get from $4,200 to $4,399; and there are 18 who get from $4,400 up.

Now, what are the percentages of proposed increases in those various grades? In the first grade the increase is 40 per cent, in the second it is 40 per cent, in the third and fourth classes it is 35 per cent, in the fifth class it is 30 per cent, in the sixth class it is 30 per cent, in the seventh class it is 27 per cent, in the eighth class it is 25 per cent, in the ninth class it is 25 per cent, in the tenth class it is 20 per cent, in the eleventh class it is 20 per cent, in the twelfth class it is 15 per cent, in the thirteenth and fourteenth classes it is 15 per cent, in the last five classes it is 10 per cent. So that the average increase is considerably over 30 per cent and the total increase is $3,319,075.

Mr. President, if we are going to increase the salaries of these employees under a lump-sum appropriation, if we are going merely to single out from all the clerks and the employees of the Government these particular employees and give them a lump-sum increase of over $3,000,000, will that be fair to the other clerks of the Government, especially when Congress has already passed a reclassification act that will go into effect presumably on the 1st day of July of this year? Why not leave it to that reclassification act? It ought to be left to that act.

Then, there is another matter. Senators know that I did not vote for the Budget act. I think the Budget Bureau is a useless piece of machinery. I have never seen a better illustration of its being a completely useless piece of machinery than the present amendment. Here we have a Director of the Budget, and we have a Secretary of the Treasury, and he went before the Director of the Budget, and the Director of the Budget fixed the compensation and salaries of these employees. The matter went to the House, and the bill was passed according to the Budget's estimate; but when the bill came to the Senate, what did the Senate committee do? They said, "Can you not go and get the approval of the Director of the Budget for this increase?" That is the law. That is what the Republican Party has stood for. We have told the people of the United States that we have an efficient administration. We have told them that we have a Budget system that saves the country millions of dollars a year. We ought to stand by it. The committee, however, said: "Mr. Secretary, you must get an approval by the Budget of this increase and have it sent down here." He said yes; he realized that it was not proper to bring it up without the approval of the Budget, and said: "I will get the approval of the Budget. The Director of the Budget will come down and give you a revised estimate, including this item of over $2,000,000"; but did he do it? No. Evidently the Director of the Budget had an eye single to his duty, and he declined to come before the committee or to give an additional estimate, and this appropriation is made by the committee without the approval of the Director of the Budget; and, in fact, in defiance of the recommendation of the Director of the Budget.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. McKELLAR. Surely.

Mr. WARREN. At the time the Senator is speaking of the Director of the Budget was out of town. He was out of town for several days; so I imagine that the Secretary of the Treasury did not have an opportunity to communicate with him in time for him to get up here before the committee concluded its consideration of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Surely, however, he is not the only one connected with that great office who could have done this. He has his assistants. He has an assistant director. There is no reason in the world why the Budget Bureau could not have come here by one of its officers and approved this increase, if it was sound. You Republicans are swearing by the Budget, but whenever you want to increase an appropriation you disregard the Director of the Budget.

I agree with what the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] said about the present Director of the Budget. He is an honest, conscientious, fair-minded man, trying to do his duty. You Republicans, who put him in his place, ought to stand by him. I am not under obligations to stand by him, one way or another. I voted against the Budget system.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McKELLAR. Surely.

Mr. FESS. I appreciate what the Senator is saying from almost every angle from which he has spoken——

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad the Senator does.

Mr. FESS. But I want to ask the Senator whether he does not agree that there can not be a uniform scale of salary which will work equitably all over the country, making the compensation in all the localities just the same?

Mr. McKELLAR. Why, of course I do. That is why I voted for the reclassification bill, by which we established a Reclassification Commission and directed that commission to take into consideration all the facts and circumstances, to get all the facts before it, and to report upon a fair and a just classification of the employees of the Government, taking all these facts into consideration, and not permitting them to be paid in a haphazard manner, such as is provided in this bill. If the Senator believes in the reclassification act—I believe he voted for it; and if so, I am sure he believes in it—he ought to stand by it. If it was good enough to be voted for, it is good enough to stand by. We ought not to violate it before it is put into effect.

Mr. FESS. If the Senator will permit me, I do not mean to have it understood that I am supporting the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will not support it.

Mr. FESS. I mean simply to say that it is more difficult to live in one city than in other cities, and consequently I recognize that one customhouse in which I was not long ago is very much crippled because it has not efficient men. It can get the men, but it can not get the proper type of men. It seems to me that a fact we ought to take into consideration is the difference in the requirements of various localities.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the Senator know that the Director of the Budget, as the law commands him to do, has looked into all these things and has made a report on the matter; and does not the Senator feel that having done so, and having declined to make this recommendation, we ought to stand by him; and especially ought we not to stand by him when there can not be any injustice done, because the reclassification will take place in the summer time, when this bill will go into effect, and whatever salaries may be fixed upon or may have been fixed upon already as just and fair salaries for this class of employees will be paid them and ought to be paid them? I am in favor of paying them a fair wage.

Mr. FESS. If the Senator will permit me, I will state to him that I have always stood by the recommendation of the Director of the Budget except when I wanted to reduce the estimate.

Mr. McKELLAR. This is to increase it by over $2,000,000.

Mr. FESS. I do not now recall having voted at any time to increase the appropriation over the recommendation of the director, but I did vote several times to reduce the appropriation.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator that if he sits here while these appropriation bills are being handled he will hear the Director of the Budget overruled more times probably than he can count. We overrule him whenever we want an appropriation. Last year—not, perhaps, when this bill was being considered, but when some other appropriation bill was being considered—I asked the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] time and again, "Does not that overrule your Director of the Budget?" He replied, "Yes"; and it is in the RECORD. My recollection is that there were some 65 occasions in a very short space of time when the Director of the Budget had been overruled and an increase in the appropriation made.

Mind you, I never have been in favor of turning over to the Director of the Budget the right to legislate on the question of salaries. I was opposed to it. I believe it is an incubus, and I believe it is not the way to legislate. It just gives the heads of departments and the heads of bureaus another avenue to get greater appropriations, according to my judgment, because they first go to the Director of the Budget and get everything possible out of him, and if they do not get all they want they then go to the Appropriations Committee of the House and get everything in the world they can get there, and what they can not get there they come to the Appropriations Committee of the Senate for; and both the House committee and the Senate committee, I am sorry to say, overrule the Director of the Budget.

Mr. President, this is unwise legislation. It is unnecessary legislation. There is no reason in the world why these employees, just like all the other employees of the Government, can not wait until the reclassification act takes effect. I want to say in this connection that the chairman of the committee, as I read his language, and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], as I read his language, had exactly the same view about it when the testimony was taken. They suggested that view to the Secretary of the Treasury, and since that time for some reason it has been changed.

Mr. President, the increased appropriation ought not to be made. The amendment ought to be defeated.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I desire to speak very briefly on the pending amendment.

I happen to represent, in part, a State the limits of which are in close proximity to two of the large customhouses of the country; that is, those located at the port of New York and the port of Philadelphia. While I am not prepared to defend entirely the system through which we are attempting to secure this needed relief—there may be some weaknesses in it, and I believe there are—we are facing facts and not dealing with theories.

I did not have the opportunity of being in the Chamber when the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] was speaking, and I hope I will not repeat his argument. I believe he outlined the fact that at the present time, when civil-service examinations are called for in order to fill vacancies existing in these two great offices—and I do not doubt that the same condition prevails in other ports, because practically all ports are necessarily located near large producing centers—it is impossible to get men to take the examination in sufficient numbers to fill the vacancies; and when, through unusual efforts, they succeed in getting them to go before the commission, and they in turn succeed in receiving marks sufficient to qualify, they last only a very short time in the service. They recognize immediately, by their contact with men in private service working by their sides, as it were, that the inequality of the salaries is such that they simply can not be retained in the service.

I very much prefer the system of raising salaries through classification, or through a definite bill such as has been provided for the postal employees. As I said at the outset, however, this is a condition and not a theory. We are facing, I hope, a year of big imports, and a great volume of merchandise is now lying at the port of Philadelphia and the port of New York without sufficient help to take care of it. Business men are appealing to the Senators from those States, at least—perhaps the Senators from interior States do not hear so much about it—for some relief so that they can get their imports from the customshouse, and we are undoubtedly losing hundreds of thousands of dollars in income, and the business interests of the country likewise are losing a great deal of money.

The Congress has already gone on record as indorsing an increase in salaries in this department. The Calder Act provided, as I recall, for a 30 per cent increase. I agree that that is not the wisest type of legislation. As I said a moment ago, I think increases should be provided by definite classifications, although usually private business does not adopt that method. I have every confidence, and I am sure every other Senator has, that the Secretary of the Treasury will use whatever increase is allowed by Congress in such a way that it will improve the service. Why, in the name of Heaven, would he use it for any other purpose?

When we recognize that to-day the entering salary of a clerk in the customhouse is $1,000, and that if the appropriation would permit the maximum increase permitted by law of 30 per cent it would allow an increase of only $300, which would mean a salary of $1,300, certainly no one can claim that such a salary is a high salary in these days. As a matter of fact, as I understand from computation, the amount provided by the amendment will allow an increase of only approximately 20 per cent, so that the 30 per cent would not be provided under the appropriation in any event.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] suggested, in answer to a question of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS], that he agreed at least that it was almost impossible to provide a code of salaries which would be relatively proper for different sections of the country. As the chairman of the Joint Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, which is now considering prospective salary increases throughout the country, or bills providing for them, at least, no fact has become more apparent to me than that fact. It is absolutely impossible to provide proper compensation by giving to a Government employee in the city of New York the same salary that is given to a Government employee in some other section of the country.

I think this is a matter in which we must reach a solution which will to some extent remove the present inequalities. It is all very well to talk about the classification act; I believe it is undoubtedly a step in the right direction; but a classification act has not yet been presented to provide for the force outside of the District of Columbia, and from all the information we can get it is entirely uncertain when it will be ready. In the meantime, we are facing this situation.

When it is provided, if it is founded on any fair consideration of expenses and of Government salaries as compared with other salaries, it must provide for a remuneration along the lines made possible by the amendment we are now considering. The only point in adopting the amendment is to make sure that we provide for somewhere near a fair salary, which will be provided anyhow when the classification act is finally presented and adopted, so that it can apply to the field force.

While this situation can be attacked on questions of Budget procedure, as I recognize, and may possibly be subject to points of order to be decided by the Chair, on the question of not being estimated for or on some other ground under our rules, when we are facing a situation such as has been laid before us we must meet the situation as it is. I will read only one paragraph from the report of the hearings before the committee. Mr. Freed, the representative of the Treasury Department, stated that—

> We have this situation right in New York in our weighers' department: We have weighers' laborers that are employed by the Government getting $840 a year and the bonus of $240, which makes their pay a little less than $3 a day. Working right alongside of them are laborers employed by the contracting weighers who are getting between $5 and $6 a day. The result is that every time a contracting weigher has a vacancy he takes one of our best weighers, and we have to take on a new man who does not know anything about the game, and a poor man at that, because all the good laborers are working for private concerns. We have a lot of broken-down laborers working for us.

How could the result be any different than is laid out by the representative of the Treasury Department?

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. EDGE. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator from New Jersey, as I understand his observations, is appealing for an increase in the compensation to be allowed to employees in the customs service, particularly in the city of New York.

Mr. EDGE. Not particularly in any city, Mr. President, but covering the entire service.

Mr. KING. And is also making an appeal for an increase in the salaries of substantially all the employees of the Government. Does the Senator appreciate the fact that in the States and under the Federal Government we have materially increased the compensation of the employees during the past three years, and that now about 6½ per cent of all the earnings of the people of the United States are required to pay the compensation of those who hold public office, and that approximately 17 per cent of all the earnings of all the people of the United States are required to meet the taxes which annually are levied against the people of the United States?

Does the Senator appreciate the fact that the farmers of the United States—and there are more engaged in agriculture than in any other occupation—earn on an average less than $500 per annum; that in private life there are millions of clerks, stenographers, and various other employees whose earnings are from $50 to $75 and $100 a month? Does the Senator appreciate the fact that for most vacancies in the Government service there are large numbers of applicants? The Senator must be aware of the fact that if in his own State there is a vacancy in the Rural Delivery Service, or in the post office, there would be a multitude of applicants for the position; at least that is the case in many States with which I am familiar.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. EDGE. I thought the Senator was propounding a question.

Mr. KING. It is more than a question; and the good nature of the Senator, of course, will forgive my trespassing.

I am in sympathy with high wages. I believe better service can be gotten from employees who receive adequate compensation, as a rule. I should like to see greater compensation paid in all activities of life. Yet we must bear in mind this fact, that if we raise wages and salaries to a higher level all over the United States, it reacts in an increase in the prices of all commodities, so that much of the advance in wages is lost in the increased price of commodities.

The Senator, from his practical life and experience, realizes that a few years ago $100 a month would purchase far more than $200 a month will purchase now, and the man who was making $50 to $75 a month in a rural community felt that he was quite opulent, because of the great purchasing power of the dollar.

I realize the fact that the purchasing power of the dollar has been reduced, but if we would bring about better conditions and remove the disparity which now exists between commodities and labor, it seems to me we must adopt a rather comprehensive plan, rather than go at it in piecemeal style.

We must remember, moreover, that we are guardians of the Treasury; we impose taxes upon the people. There is a demand for a diminution in taxes, and we have bills before Congress which call for the appropriation of between five and six billion dollars. Instead of diminishing taxes, if we meet the demands of the able Senator from New Jersey and a number of other Senators and Representatives, we will be compelled to lay taxes upon the American people in excess of the present levy by from one to two billion dollars.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I desire to speak only about one minute more, and then he can have the floor to make a tax speech, and I will be entirely satisfied to yield the floor.

I am glad the Senator appreciates the lessening in the purchasing power of the dollar. Some of us, recognizing that fact, are trying in some fair and equitable manner to bring it into practical effect, so that the employees of the Government at least will know that we recognize that fact.

I am just as strongly in favor of equitable tax reduction as can be the Senator from Utah, but I am not in favor of it, I want it clearly understood, to the extent of reducing taxes at the expense of failing to recognize the services of the employees of the Government.

I not only contend, but I am quite sure I am right in the statement, that, generally speaking, the employees of the Government receive smaller salaries than are paid to employees in any other activities in the country doing like work. I see no reason for that. We can save money in many directions; we can cut down many expenditures; we can cut down the $50,000,000 deficit for the maintenance of the merchant marine, in which I think the Senator from Utah probably to an extent agrees with me; but it is absolutely unfair, in my judgment, and beyond justification, not to recognize that the employees of the Government are entitled to a fair living wage, and when we are starting employees at $840 a year in these days, or even a thousand dollars for clerks, who must have a certain amount of education, of course, before they can qualify as clerks, spending a certain length of time in order to acquire the knowledge necessary, it is unappreciative, in my judgment, on the part of the Government to attempt to deny a proper increase to meet the very point the Senator from Utah makes—the lessened purchasing power of the dollar.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. EDGE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FESS. The situation in the customhouse at New York has been apparent for some time. Why is it that this additional relief was not recommended by the Budget Director?

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I can not answer that in detail. As the Senator says, I believe the condition has been recognized. I can not speak for the Budget Director, of course, but it is my general impression that there had been a willingness evinced to allow the increases, but in some way the estimate was put in without this having been given full consideration. I am only saying that in a general way, because I am not entirely sure of my ground.

Mr. FESS. I am asking purely to get information. I have wondered whether under the present law the Director of the Budget is free to make a recommendation where there is any provision for it. In other words, I believe in the Budget system and I want that we shall adhere to it as best we can, and I always hesitate to vote for anything which does not appear to have been sufficiently valuable to be recommended by the Director of the Budget.

Mr. EDGE. I am afraid I can not answer the Senator in detail as to just what happened when the matter was presented to the Director of the Budget.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I do not want my position in this matter to be misunderstood. I voted for an increase of $1,800,000 in the salaries of the customs employees in New York about whom we are talking. But when it is sought to increase the appropriation by $4,000,000, I think that is unreasonable.

What are the facts in the case? The arguments made by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] and the arguments made by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] have all been heard by the Budget. The Budget turned the increase down. Those arguments have been heard by the President, who sent the Budget estimate to Congress, and the President turned it down. The matter was brought before the House of Representatives, and for days and days this argument was made before the committee in the House; but it was turned down and they were given only $1,500,000, which I voted for in the committee of the Senate.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. The Congress did not turn it down when it passed the so-called Calder bill, permitting a 30 per cent increase.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am talking about this appropriation, this very bill, in the consideration of which all of the arguments the Senator from New Jersey has made and those the Senator from New York has made were presented. The inspectors of the service, who had been sent out to investigate, were also heard.

The Budget people are honorable people. The President is an honorable man. He investigated the facts. He sent the estimate to Congress, saying that $1,800,000 was a sufficient increase, and the House gave that. But when the bill came to the Senate, the Secretary of the Treasury came before the Senate Committee on Appropriation, and his testimony was read to the Senate this morning. I asked him a few questions. I asked him how it happened that the bill came from the Budget without an estimate for this appropriation. He said he expected to get such an estimate. I said, "That is all right, Mr. Secretary; go and get your supplementary estimate and send it to us." He went, and in a few days he came back without any estimate. I take it for granted the Budget Bureau refused to give it. It was said that Mr. Lord was out of the city. What difference does that make? There are four men there who could pass on it. The others could have made the estimate without Mr. Lord being there. Mr. Lord was out of the city, and he had refused before to send the estimate to Congress for $16,000,000, and refused this time to send the estimate to Congress for $16,000,000. The Senate committee, after hearing all these facts, which are admitted, and after the matter was turned down by the President and turned down by the Budget and turned down by the House, are asking the Senate to increase the appropriation by the enormous amount of $4,000,000 of honest taxpayers' money.

The senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] read an inspector's report this morning. I am glad he did read it, because that inspector's report was before the Budget. The Senator said that I am not in favor of increasing these salaries, but I am. I want to pay these laborers what is due them. I know the conditions under which they work. I voted for the increase of $1,500,000, but I am not going to vote to increase it out of all proportion, beyond anything suggested, except by Senators upon the floor of the Senate. They are the ones who say it ought to be increased to $16,000,000, not the men in authority whose duty it is to investigate and pass upon the question. Shall we take the testimony of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who knows very little about it, as he shows by his statement? He says part of it is for increased salaries, and part of it for increase in the number of employees. Is that for the purpose of election? Is it the intention just before the election to have 100,000 new employees or 10,000 added? No; I do not charge that. I say it is for the purpose of making a lump-sum appropriation, which we have all been preaching against, so that no one in authority will be in a position to grant a salary of $10,000 or $25,000, or whatever he might please.

The lump-sum principle is all wrong. Let us stand by the Budget in this case. Let us stand by the President. Let us stand by the House of Representatives and not go to these extremes in increasing appropriations from $10,000,000 or $12,000,000, as they were several years ago, to $16,000,000, an increase of approximately $6,000,000. How can Senators face their constituents if they do that? How can you appear before your constituents if you do that, my countrymen? What are you going to say when you are trying to tell the poor farmers, who are getting only $500 a year, that you have voted for an appropriation to increase these employees' salaries and pay some of them $5,000 or $10,000 or $15,000 a year? Is that your policy? Do not talk any more, Senators, about economy and reform and decreasing expenses when I have shown that there is to be an increase of $2,500,000, and when the bills have all passed I will show that you have increased the expenses during your Republican administration over $200,000,000. Now, you can do as you please. I am trying to save the taxpayers $2,500,000, which the President says you ought to do, the Budget says you ought to do, and the House of Representatives says you ought to do. I am standing by them.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. KING. For information I would like to know whether, if this large increased appropriation is made, there is any provision in the bill allocating it to any particular individuals or group of individuals, or is it in lump-sum form so that the administrator may pay large salaries of $5,000 or $6,000 to whomsoever he may please and to such individuals as he may please?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is the same old lump-sum proposition we have been trying for 10 years to knock out and against which the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] have been arrayed that allows an official to make salaries just what he pleases and to show favoritism to whomever he pleases. That is what it means and that is what it is.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think I ought to say that probably the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] did not hear me when I said——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Will the Senator speak a little louder so we may hear him?

Mr. WARREN. I will undertake it. What I was about to say was that this appropriation comes under the law enacted on the 4th day of March of last year, known as the Calder law. That law positively forbids an increase of more than 30 per cent in any salary. This appropriation will not allow 30 per cent to be added, but it might reach about 15 or 18 per cent. That is the only safeguard that we have.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] says it is a lump sum; but it has been such for a great many years. There is a law that has been alluded to by the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], and it is under that law of more than 50 years ago that it is provided that certain positions are confined, for instance, to $1,000 as the limit for a lot of men in other lines, as has been so well explained. Laborers who work for the Government around and in front of and with those men get more than 30 per cent more than do these particular men who are working for this branch of the Government, because of the old law which prohibits liberal salaries. The classification act is not yet effective and probably will not be made effective until more than a year from now, so that the appropriation for the coming fiscal year must be made upon the best information we can get as to the present salaries and such conditions as we may make which come under the Calder Act.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I am very much impressed with the argument made by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] about the unwisdom of lump-sum appropriations. I would prefer a specific appropriation increasing the salaries of the customs employees. I do not care who is responsible for failure to increase these salaries, whether it is the President or the Budget or the Congress, we are confronted with a situation here that gives us an opportunity to remove a great injustice to faithful employees. The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has disclosed a deplorable situation among customs employees in New York. The information that has come to me from Boston confirms what he has described. It is not New York alone, but Boston, San Francisco, Seattle, in fact every port where customs employees are employed, discloses the same experience.

I for one do not intend by my vote to prevent or delay for one day the paying of a living wage to customs employees in New York, Boston, San Francisco, or anywhere else.

I have received several communications on this subject from the collector of customs in Boston. They are most enlightening. Since 1913 the average increase in the salary of customs employees has been 33 per cent, which is less than any other class of private employees in the whole country. The increase to the class of employees next ranking those of customs, the compositors and typesetting-machine operators in newspaper offices, has been about 65 per cent. The increase in the cost of living in the period since 1913 has been 60 to 70 per cent. So that the customs employees, during the time that there has been an increase of nearly 70 per cent in the cost of living in this country, have had only an increase of 33 per cent in their wages. All classes of private employees have had their wages increased since 1913 over 65 per cent, and many of them in excess of 100 per cent.

I do not care to be responsible for denying these men a living wage.

Let us bear in mind that these employees are not mere clerks, are not engaged in doing manual labor, but men who must have character, men of integrity, of sound judgment, of ability, and possessed with patience, intelligence, and personality. I think it is a very shortsighted policy to deny these men the increases which they long ago deserved. I do not care who is responsible, I am not going to share the responsibility any longer. The conditions are such that capable and ambitious young men will not enter the service. We are responsible if the very serious impairment continues. We should seize this opportunity to remedy conditions by voting for this appropriation.

I confess that I am very much impressed with the argument of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] and the argument of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] that this may be a somewhat irregular procedure, but the situation is so critical and it is so certain that this branch of the service is being impaired—and it is an important branch of the public service and increasingly important as we increase these duties—that I shall vote without any hesitancy for this appropriation. I do not propose to let technicalities interfere with speedily granting these employees a fair wage.

I think that the Government ought to lead in giving its employees the best possible living and working conditions. In many respects we do surpass conditions provided and wages paid by private employers. In the matter of hours of labor our Government has usually led, but in the matter of wages to certain employees—I mean outside of the mere clerical positions, that class of employees where character is necessary, where integrity is important, where efficiency is highly desirable—we have lagged behind and we are now far behind what private employers are paying to employees in corresponding positions. Among those employees that are grossly and shamefully underpaid I include chiefly the postal and the customs employees. Their work is exacting, their responsibility serious; they must be honest and upright, and we ought not by giving them miserable salaries subject them and their families to the discomforts and want against which their stations in the public service should be a guaranty. Indeed, we ought not to subject them to the temptation of crass indifference, if not worse, that underpayment invites.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. All of that statement I approve fully——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I know the Senator does.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator understands that I not only have been favorable to salary increases, but have stood for them and worked for them and voted for them in committee and on the floor of the Senate at all times. But recently we enacted a law providing for reclassification of all the employees of the Government, so as to give them a fair and just and even liberal wage. That law is being put into operation now. It is expected to be put into operation in every department of the Government, both here in Washington and in the field service, by the 1st of July.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] said it would be another year before it could be put into operation.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is not in accordance with the proof before the committee. My recollection of the proof before the committee is that in the field service it was expected to be completed by the 1st day of July. Now, if that is correct, ought we not to stand by the law which we ourselves have made for the increase of salaries? The Senator said these men are worthy of an increase. Let us assume that they are. Then let us take the Postal Service. Why should we not raise them in like manner and give them a lump sum of three or four million dollars or ten or fifteen million dollars, and have them raised just before the reclassification act takes effect? Take the rural carriers—their salaries are not adequate, perhaps. Why should not we raise them by a lump-sum appropriation before the reclassification act takes effect? If we are going to do it for one class of our employees, why not do it for every class, so as to let them all be treated alike?

That is my reason for opposing this particular increase, and that is intensified by the particular situation that our good friends, who usually stand by the Budget, are now repudiating the Budget. The Budget does not provide for this increase in appropriation. I have no doubt that General Lord takes the same view of it that some of us take; that it is a matter of reclassification of the employees, so that all will be treated alike. That is my position, not because I am opposed to increased salaries or to fair and just salaries. I am very much in favor of them, but we ought to accomplish that purpose to all alike.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. It is regrettable that the proposition is put before us in this manner of a lump-sum appropriation, but the information which the Senator from Wyoming conveys to me is that the reclassification law will not be operative for another year.

Mr. WARREN. That is as to the field service. As it applies to Government employees in the District of Columbia, it will be effective the 1st of July, but the field service reclassification, which covers these particular items, has hardly been commenced so far as the reclassification is concerned.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. If the amendment should be defeated is there any provision in the reclassification law to give these customs employees an increased salary?

Mr. WARREN. No.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. So that we are confronted with the alternative that if we are going to increase the wages of these employees we must accept this amendment or let the matter go without any increase until some indefinite time?

Mr. WARREN. Until the reclassification is made.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will not that be true of all other departments in the field service? In other words, we are taking this one out from among them all and raising these particular men's salaries, but we are leaving every other department of the field service out. I do not think that is fair.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator, however, overlooks one important point. The employees in all other services have had their salaries increased from time to time, but we are now discussing a service the employees of which have not had an advancement in their compensation since the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] was born, young as he is, or old as he might be, and as I hope he will be, at some time in the distant future. It is the lack of having received a just increase of compensation which concerns this particular service. These men, especially in the lower grades, have never yet had an advance of their salary, so far, the law has provided.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I refuse to delay action until some indefinite time when reclassification is possible, for I am sincerely impressed with the fact that these employees deserve an immediate increase of salary. I am convinced of that by the argument not only of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and the information which he has submitted here, but also from reports which have been sent to me by the collector of customs at Boston, and from the statements of the men themselves who have waited upon me and disclosed the shameful wage scales. I do know that these men have been penalized and that they and their families are suffering and in real need as a result of the inadequate wage which is paid by this Government to these men of unusual capacity, of character, of efficiency, and of ability. It is about time for the Government to pay decent wages to men whom it expects to be honest and to handle its money and goods with safety if we expect to maintain good service.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts one other element which he omitted to state, and that is the tremendous increase in the physical operations at the port of Boston and at the port of New York, where the importations are so greatly in excess of former years that the actual physical labors have increased very materially. I do not know what the exact percentage is.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I thank the Senator for his suggestion. The figures show that the cost of the collection of custom duties in Boston has been reduced in the last year from $4\frac{7}{10}$ cents to $1\frac{4}{10}$ cents. The same thing is also true as to New York. Thus the figures show that about the same number of employees have been doing the very large amount of extra work which has been required.

Mr. BAYARD. And that they have been doing far more than their individual share.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. When I spoke upon the pending matter some time ago I called attention to the fact that a law, known as the Calder Act, had been passed authorizing an increase of 30 per cent in the wages of these employees. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that as to this class of employees every one admits that the reclassification law will afford to every one of them an increase of salary. In some of the departments of the Government the employees are now drawing salaries pretty nearly as high as they will receive under the classification law. That is not true, however, as to the customs service. This service is the poorest paid service in the Government of the United States.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I supported in the Finance Committee the Calder bill, and I certainly agree with all that has been said about the poor salaries paid customs employees. I will also say while I am on my feet that I think the long delay by Congress and all concerned in reclassifying Government employees is a disgrace. The matter should have been done long ago. It is the old story of procrastination, delay, and inefficiency in handling the business of the Government, and Congress is the worst offender and sets the bad example easily followed by the departments. We are now confronted with another case of postponement if we oppose this amendment. I do not intend to be a party to it. I purpose to see that faithful servants who work for the people of the United States are paid a decent wage, and I will therefore help to bring that about by voting for the pending amendment.

I ask that I may be permitted to have inserted in the RECORD two letters from the collector of customs of Boston and a chart which illustrates the point he has set out in the information referred to about increases in wages among different classes of employees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters and chart are as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
UNITED STATES CUSTOMS SERVICE,
OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR, DISTRICT NO. 4,
Boston, Mass., December 17, 1923.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In continuance of our conversation in your office the other day in regard to the increase in business at this port, the increase in the cost of living in Boston and in Massachusetts, and the lack of increase in the compensation of Government employees in this service, I beg to inclose you two charts prepared by one of the clerks in my force. The first chart explains rather graphically the abnormal increase in the amount of business which the present force have been called upon to perform. You will observe that the increase in revenues of the last fiscal year amounts to nearly 350 per cent, whereas the cost of collecting a dollar at this port was reduced from $4\frac{7}{10}$ to $1\frac{4}{10}$ cents, a figure lower even than the cost at the port of New York. The second chart shows increases in the cost of living in Boston and in Massachusetts during the last 10 years as compared to the increased compensation of Government employees in the customs service, including the bonus of $240, during the same period. I do not suppose it would be possible to have these charts printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, but I believe it would be extremely useful to the movement now on foot if by any chance this could be done.

With best wishes, I am

Sincerely yours, W. W. LUFKIN, (Inclosures.) Collector.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
UNITED STATES CUSTOMS SERVICE,
OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR, DISTRICT NO. 4,
Boston, Mass., January 8, 1924.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am taking the liberty of submitting to you under another cover a brief and inclosures prepared by the committee on personnel of the employees of the customs service in the district of Massachusetts, and beg to ask your indulgence in giving the petition of these men and women your consideration.

I do not think I was ever considered, while a Member of Congress, a spendthrift or an enthusiastic champion of general increases in Government salaries. Two years' experience here, however, has convinced me that the employees as a whole in the customs service at this port are grossly underpaid and are finding it almost impossible to make both ends meet. This result can have but one effect, to wit, dissatisfaction and a spirit of unrest among the members of our force. This is particularly lamentable at this time with the increased business and resulting responsibility which these employees must shoulder. The inclosed charts tell the story pretty generally, but I desire to call attention particularly to the following points:

1. The increased compensation of the various skilled trades in the city of Boston since the year 1913 as compared with the increased compensation of the employees of the customs service.

2. The increase in the cost of living in Boston and in Massachusetts during the past 10 years as compared with the increased compensation of customs employees.

3. The increase in the amount of business at the port of Boston for the fiscal year 1923 over the fiscal year 1922, showing an increase in the value of imports of almost 100 per cent and an increase in the amount of money collected of over 300 per cent.

4. In spite of the magnitude of business conducted during the fiscal year 1923, our personnel was only increased a total of 22 people and the cost of collecting a dollar was decreased from $4\frac{7}{10}$ cents to $1\frac{4}{10}$ cents. This latter figure, I am informed, is the lowest of any large port in the United States.

In view of these facts, I am firmly of the opinion that if the efficiency and morale of the personnel at this port are to be maintained some recognition must be made of the employees in the way of increased compensation. These men and women have been led to believe for a number of years that the so-called reclassification bill would cure all these ills. Unfortunately, this legislation seems destined to further postponement, with the result that some other means of relief is necessary.

With apologies for troubling you in this matter, I am,

Sincerely yours,

W. W. LUFKIN, Collector.

BOSTON, MASS., January 4, 1924.

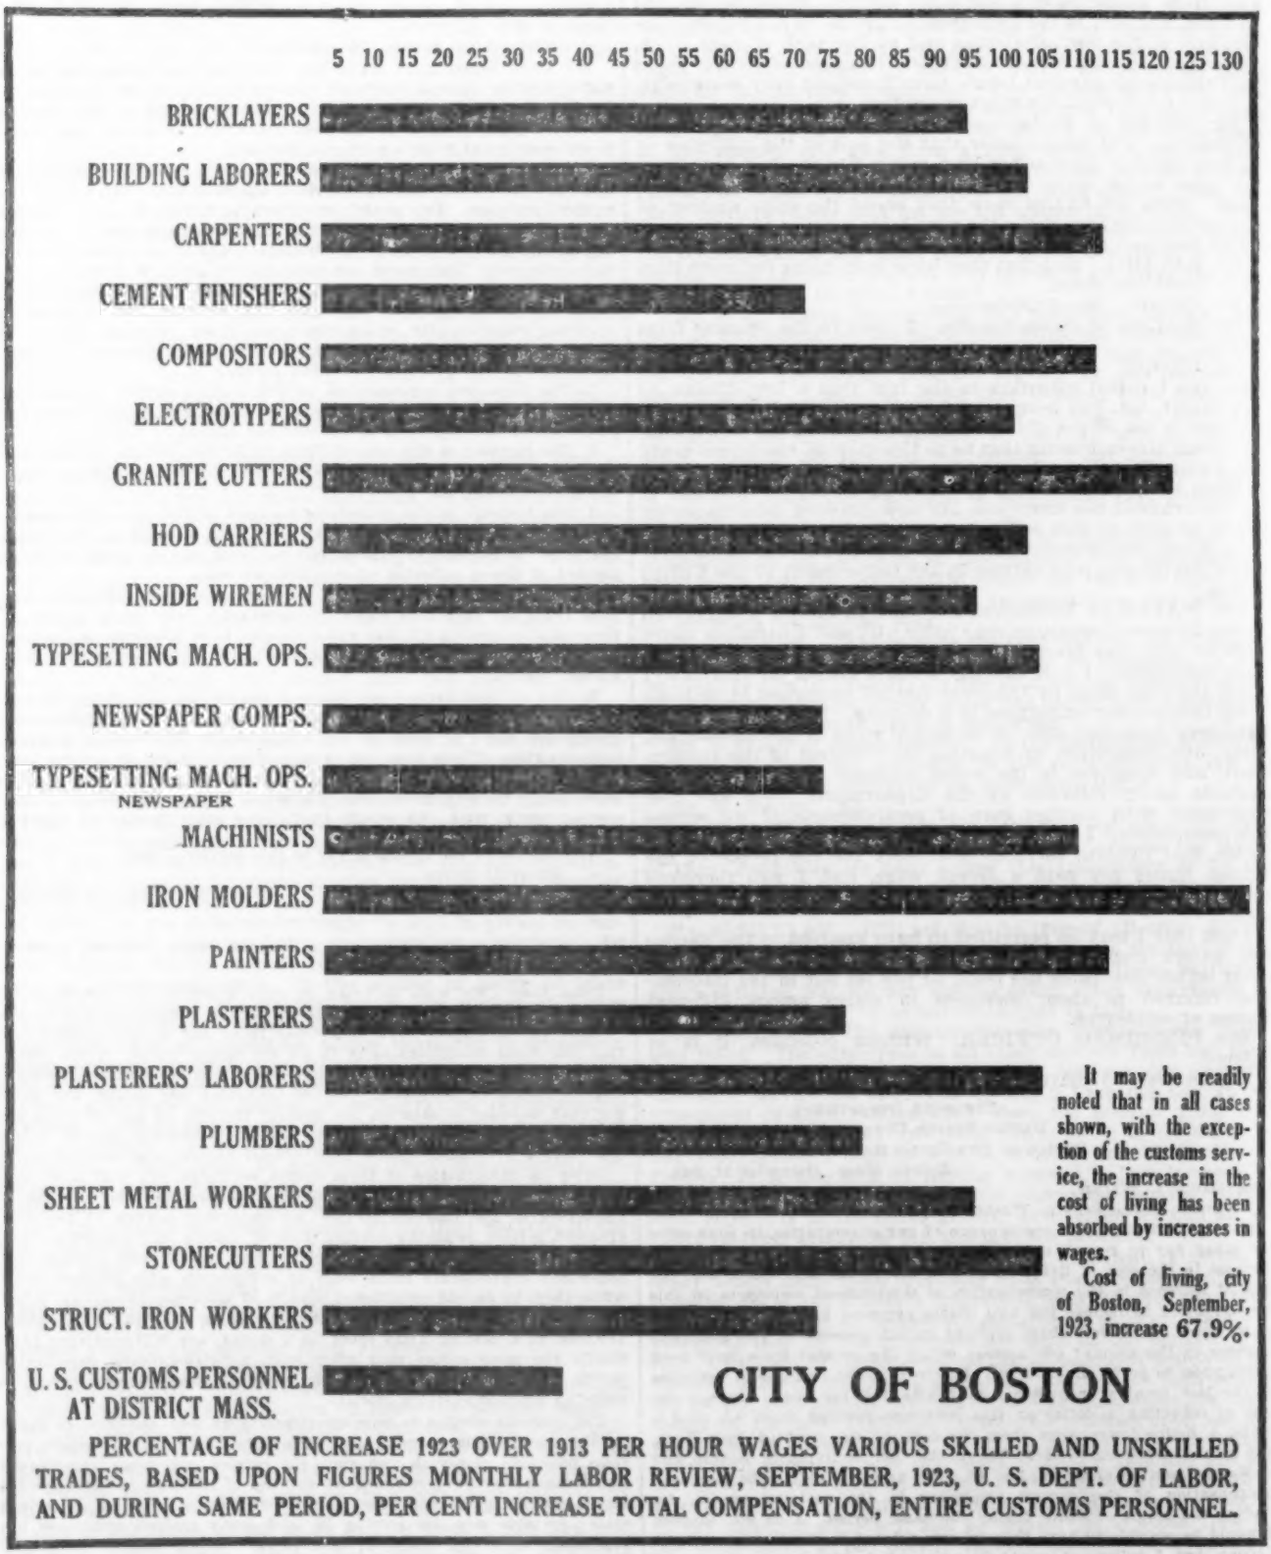
To Members of Congress:



DEAR SIRS: We wish to bring to your attention by means of the attached charts the conditions existing in the customs service to-day.

Some of the charts show local conditions, but it is evidently true that the same conditions exist in all the larger ports. These charts in general graphically depict the increase of customs business, receipts, and expenditures, personnel, cost of collection per dollar, the small per cent increase of salaries, the general increase of pay of those employed in 21 representative trades, and the increased cost of living. The figures are taken wholly from official records and are authentic.

After an examination of these charts we think you will agree that something should be done immediately to increase the salaries of employees in the customs service, an important branch of the Government service requiring trained men of ability and integrity. Our employees have seen salaries in other more recent and perhaps less important departments made more in accordance with present needs, while they, in an old established branch of Government service, bringing into the Treasury of the United States in the year 1923, $562,189,039, at a cost of 2.034 cents on a dollar, are still receiving practically the same salary year after year, notwithstanding complicated tariffs, increased cost of living, or years of experience necessary to make an efficient customs official.

The customs service is now unattractive to men qualified to carry on the work, while formerly men of ability and integrity sought customs positions now such men shun the service, and many experienced and trained men have resigned on account of inability to exist on the small salaries paid, with the result that service is in a precarious state; no able men are coming in, and many trained employees are resigning.

An investigation into the conditions existing in our service will show how urgently money is needed to carry on efficiently, and the heroic measures taken by collectors and other officials to keep the imports and exports moving with the small amount of money available for this purpose, imposing many times double service of em-

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the reading clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL FARM LOAN BUREAU.

Salaries: For six members of the board, at $10,000 each; for personal services in the District of Columbia in accordance with the classification act of 1923, and for personal services in the field, $137,000; in all, $197,000, payable from assessments upon Federal and joint-stock land banks;

For salaries of four reviewing appraisers at not to exceed $5,000 each per annum, and the traveling expenses of such reviewing appraisers, $15,000, in all, $35,000, payable from assessments upon Federal and joint-stock land banks;

For traveling expenses of the members of the board and its officers and employees; per diem in lieu of subsistence, not exceeding $4; and contingent and miscellaneous expenses, including books of reference and maps, and exclusive of stationery and printing and binding; and for the examination of national farm loan associations, including personal services and traveling expenses; $122,040, payable from assessments upon Federal and joint-stock land banks: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $2,500 per annum: Provided further, That $2,500 of this sum may be expended for clerk hire in the District of Columbia;

In all, Federal Farm Loan Bureau, $354,040.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I notice in the bill these items with reference to the Farm Loan Board. I have a bill pending to reduce the number of members of this board, and also to reduce their salaries. If this appropriation should be made, and if that bill should pass, I presume that the entire appropriation would not be used?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly not. If the bill referred to by the Senator from Idaho becomes a law, of course the whole of this appropriation would not be used.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I intended to ask the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] with reference to this matter. Does this $197,000 in the first paragraph provide for the $25,000 paid to Mr. Lobdell?

Mr. SMOOT. No; that is paid by the 12 regional banks, as I understand. There is no appropriation for that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is there another appropriation for it?

Mr. SMOOT. No; there is no appropriation for that. That is paid by the banks themselves.

Mr. McKELLAR. What authority of law have these 12 banks to pay a financial agent $25,000, or any other salary?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not say offhand just what the law is, nor do I know, really, whether there is any specific law for it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am inclined to think that there is not, but it is a matter that we ought to look into, because, in the first place, I think such an office is wholly unnecessary. The work was done by the Farm Loan Board before Mr. Lobdell took it over, and there ought to be some provision about it. Of course it will not come in here. It is not included in this appropriation.

Mr. SMOOT. No; it is not included in this appropriation, and I will say to the Senator that the only reason I can assign for the banks having employed Mr. Lobdell or any other man for the purposes for which he was employed is that all of the banks had to have some agency whereby they could sell their bonds, and I think there was an understanding between all of the banks that they would have Mr. Lobdell attend to that for all of them. There is no need, however, of going into that question at this time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, while I am on that subject I will say that my information is that Mr. Lobdell did the work as a member of the board before he resigned.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true. He was chairman of the board.

Mr. McKELLAR. He was chairman of the board, and did this work. Then he resigned as a member of the board, and became an employee of the several banks at a greatly increased salary. If Mr. Lobdell, as chairman of the board, could do that work and did do it, then his successor as chairman of the board should do that work, and in that way the $25,000 that is now being paid to Mr. Lobdell would be saved.

While I am still on that subject I want to say this: The Senator knows that while the loans of the farm loan banks have increased in a very small percentage in the last four years, the expenses of running that department have increased several hundred per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is wrong when he says that Mr. Lobdell as chairman of the board had anything whatever to do with selling the bonds for these individual banks. That was done by the banks themselves; but after he left the board the banks did hire him for the purpose of selling the bonds, and the present chairman of the board—the man holding the position which Mr. Lobdell occupied for a time—has no authority to sell and is not called upon to sell these bonds.

Mr. McKELLAR. Can the Senator, without trouble, tell us under just what appropriation the matter connected with Mr. Lobdell can be dealt with?

Mr. SMOOT. We have nothing to do with that.

Mr. WARREN. Let me say to the Senator that there will be no appropriation of that kind.

Mr. SMOOT. That comes from the business of the banks themselves.

Mr. McKELLAR. The banks are a governmental agency and we control them, and there must be some way of preventing that work being transferred from the banks to this agent at $25,000 a year.

Here is what I want to say: We are talking about doing good for the farmers, and yet we are allowing the expenses of the Farm Loan Board to be increased several hundred per cent. I am going to bring here the figures—I have them in my office and I am going to bring them here—showing that their expenses have increased several hundred per cent in the last few years; but there is no corresponding increase of business. In that way money that was intended for the farmers is being in part dissipated, and it ought not to be done.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think this is the proper time to go into a detailed discussion of that matter, but when the time comes I think the Senate and the country ought to know everything connected with it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, it may be that the matter I am about to mention was discussed when I was not in the Chamber. It is on page 2. It is the provision about "the average of the salaries of the total number of persons under any grade," and so forth. Was that discussed?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] asked that that go over until the committee amendments were agreed to, and then, at the request of the Senator, I shall make a complete statement of the reasons for this provision.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator in his statement will say whether or not in his judgment it is subject to a point of order, because, if it is subject to a point of order, I want to make the point of order against it. I think it is new legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that this provision passed the House, and I am quite sure a point of order will not lie against it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall raise the question, however.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I want to take occasion to make one observation in view of what my colleague [Mr. SMOOT] has stated respecting the appropriations carried in the bill for the Farm Loan Board.

If these appropriations are too large, or if compensation is paid to any one individual under this appropriation in excess of what we think is right, it seems to me that it would be subject to emendation.

Mr. SMOOT. But Mr. Lobdell is employed by the banks themselves, not by the Federal Farm Loan Board. The Federal Farm Loan Board has nothing whatever to do with hiring him or paying him. He acts as an agent for these banks; and while I do not know how much each bank pays, the total payment is $25,000 per annum.

Mr. KING. I did not have in mind alone the case of Mr. Lobdell, who, as we all know, served with a great deal of ability as a member—and, indeed, as I recall now, as the chairman—of this very important Federal agency. I had in mind the criticisms which have been leveled for some time against the entire organization. An echo of that criticism comes now from my distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] when he states in substance that the operating expenses of the Farm Loan Board have been materially increased. He has stated the percentage. It seems to me rather higher than what I recollected, so I refrain from stating what the percentage is; but it is a fact that there have been serious criticisms against the Farm Loan Board by reason of the large increase, it is alleged, in the personnel not only in Washington but in various parts of the United States where its operations carry it; and there was a great deal of criticism growing out of the employment of Mr. Lobdell either by the board or by banks, as my colleague has stated, or agencies who dealt in the securities of the farm-loan organization, that criticism resting upon the statement that Mr. Lobdell retired from a position where he received $10,000 a year and accepted employment at a compensation of $25,000 a year.

It is obvious that Mr. Lobdell has some place in this organization which would subject him to some control by the Federal Government. Whether or not the compensation which he has obtained is too great, measured by the value and importance of his services, I now express no opinion; but it would seem to me that if it is too great Congress in this appropriation bill could make provision for a limitation of any compensation which is paid, directly or indirectly, by the Federal Government. Of course if his compensation is paid exclusively by outside agencies and the Federal Government is not directly or indirectly responsible therefor, Congress could not control that compensation; but it could provide, by way of a limitation upon the funds carried in the item now under consideration, that no association should be had by an agent who was receiving compensation in excess of a certain amount.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to his colleague?

Mr. KING. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I think my colleague is right in stating that such a law could be passed; but there seems to be an understanding here that this item of $197,000 is to come out of the Treasury of the United States. Not a dollar of it will come out of the Treasury of the United States. This is to be payable from the assessments on Federal and joint-stock land banks.

Mr. WARREN. That is correct.

Mr. SMOOT. In other words, the joint-stock land banks pay every cent of this, and not a penny is taken out of the Treasury of the United States.

I was going to say, in answer to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], that if he will look at the amount of loans made and the amount of bond sales and compare it with the amount of appropriations and the examinations that are being undertaken now, I am quite sure he will not say that the increase is more than the business that is undertaken and being accomplished by the employees of these banks.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in any observations I have made I have not expressed any opinion which I may have relative to the salaries, compensation, and costs of operation of this Federal agency. I do not know whether the salaries paid are too high or whether the cost of operation is too great. I only know that there have been a great many criticisms and many publications of an adverse nature which have provoked considerable criticism throughout the country; and I have felt, particularly since the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] invited the attention of the Senate to this matter some months ago, that it would be wise if it were to be fully considered by some committee of the Senate, so that if these criticisms are unmerited the full facts might be disclosed as a complete answer to the criticisms, and thus obviate the irritation which results therefrom.

Just one other observation: I am well aware, as was stated by my colleague, that these expenses are to be paid, not as a direct appropriation from the Treasury but in the manner indicated by the senior Senator from Utah. Nevertheless there is power in Congress to determine what those appropriations shall be and to limit the purposes for which they shall be made.

Otherwise, it would be a foolish and a futile thing to incorporate in this bill, or in any act of Congress, provisions with respect to the expenses of this organization. So, whether we appropriate directly from the Treasury, or appropriate indirectly through the treasuries and agencies of this great Federal organization, it is immaterial so far as the principle is concerned, and I only hope that when the bill which I am advised is pending, dealing with these organizations and with the cost of administration, is brought before the Senate for consideration the whole matter will be canvassed, to the end that the public and the Senate may be fully advised as to the facts.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, Congress has provided that the maximum salary that shall be paid to a member of the Farm Loan Board shall be $10,000 a year, and that was the salary paid to Mr. Lobdell, who was formerly chairman. No salary can be paid to any employee of the Farm Loan Bureau without the approval of the Farm Loan Board.

The Farm Loan Board has approved the payment of a salary of $25,000 to its fiscal agent. It seems to me it would be proper to insert in the bill a limitation providing that no salary shall be approved in excess of $10,000 a year. I have not an amendment prepared, but I should like to prepare such an amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the amendment could not be inserted in this bill, because it is legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that offhand I do not believe it would be wise to accept an amendment of that kind. If legislation is necessary, let us enact the legislation and fix the salary by legislation, rather than try to put such provisions in an appropriation bill.

Mr. HOWELL. Very well.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, with regard to what my colleague has said, and with respect to the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, it strikes me that an amendment limiting the use of this appropriation for the payment of a salary above any sum named would be in order on an appropriation bill.

Mr. WARREN. We are not appropriating for that. This appropriation is for other employees.

Mr. NORRIS. That salary comes from the board?

Mr. WARREN. It does.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the Senator from Wyoming is right about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading.

The reading was resumed, the next amendment being under the subhead "Office of Treasurer of the United States," on page 17, at the end of line 10, to increase the appropriation for salaries for personal services in the District of Columbia in accordance with "The classification act of 1923," from $1,072,000 to $1,084,000.

Mr. KING. I notice an increase here, as in other items. The House had before it full information respecting these various items. The Budget Bureau, I have no doubt, recommends the amount passed by the House. The Senate committee has increased this item, as it has many others. What is the reason of that?

Mr. WARREN. The reason for that was presented to the committee. It is because of an arrangement of salaries of employees transferred from one department to another. It would not cost any more in the long run.

Mr. KING. It takes care of transfers from what other branches of the service?

Mr. WARREN. They are all in the Treasury Department, but various clerks are engaged in different activities. Of course, sometimes clerks are detailed from different departments, and we have sought to cut that out so far as we can, and make every tub stand on its own bottom.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the Senator if in the aggregate appropriation there is not an increase corresponding with this increase in the item now under consideration? If it is a mere transfer from one branch of the service to another, and the other branch of the service was recognized by the Budget Bureau, then the aggregate would not be increased to the extent of $12,000, which increase this item carries. I think the Senator will find that this is a new item entirely.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is wrong there.

Mr. WARREN. It may be an increase.

Mr. SMOOT. No; it is not an increase; it is a decrease.

Mr. WARREN. In the long run it is. The Senator seems to make the point that the Committee on Appropriations has no right to increase any appropriation a matter of six or eight or ten thousand dollars. I want to say that it is often shown, as in this case, that the increase is needed.

Mr. KING. I disclaim that limitation which the Chairman's statement would imply. I wish we could restrict this mighty committee, and limit its authority in increasing appropriations granted by the House; but, of course, I recognize the right of the committee, and if they believe that the House has not appropriated a sufficient sum for any matter referred to in the bill, the committee has the right to increase it, subject to the approval of the Senate, of course.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the estimate of the Budget was $1,092,000, and the House cut that down to $1,072,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. The increase is from $1,072,000 to $1,084,000. That means an increase of $12,000. Is that for an additional salary or an additional employee or does it cover a number of employees?

Mr. SMOOT. In the daily check balance division there was a decrease of 25 people; in other words, as they left the service, no others were put in their places. It develops that in order to keep up the daily check balances they have to have 6 more people. The Budget allowed them the 6 people, or $12,000, and they estimated $1,092,000, just exactly the same the Senate committee has given them. But the House did not allow them $12,000 for the 6 people they had to have in order to keep their daily check balances up, and Mr. Tate, of the department, said:

Those daily check balances have to be kept up every day, and we can not possibly keep them up with 19 people less than we had last year.

That is all there is to it. We gave them 6 additional employees.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, at the end of line 11, to increase the total appropriation for salaries in the office of the Treasurer of the United States from $1,080,000 to $1,092,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, at the end of line 23, to strike out "$3,800,000" and to insert "$3,900,000," so as to read:

For salaries and expenses of collectors of internal revenue, deputy collectors, gaugers, storekeepers, and storekeeper-gaugers, clerks, messengers, and janitors in internal-revenue offices, rent of offices outside of the District of Columbia, telephone service, injuries to horses not exceeding $250 for any horse crippled or killed, expenses of seizure and sale, and other necessary miscellaneous expenses in collecting internal-revenue taxes, $3,900,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 1, after the word "districts," to strike out "$31,235,000" and to insert "$32,235,000," so as to read:

For expenses of assessing and collecting the internal-revenue taxes, including the employment of the necessary officers, attorneys, experts, agents, accountants, inspectors, deputy collectors, clerks, janitors, and messengers in the District of Columbia and the several collection districts, to be appointed as provided by law, telegraph and telephone service, rental of quarters outside the District of Columbia, postage, freight, express, and other necessary miscellaneous expenses, and the purchase of such supplies, equipment, furniture, mechanical devices, law books and books of reference, and such other articles as may be necessary for use in the District of Columbia and the several collection districts, $32,235,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 12, after the word "notwithstanding," to strike out the additional proviso in the following words:

Provided further, That no money herein appropriated for the enforcement of the national prohibition act shall be used to pay for storage in any private warehouse of intoxicating liquors or other property seized pursuant to said act, where there is available for that purpose space in a Government warehouse in the judicial district wherein such property was seized or in an adjacent judicial district; and when such seized property is stored in an adjacent district, the jurisdiction over such property in the district wherein it was seized shall not be affected thereby—

And in lieu thereof to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That no money herein appropriated for the enforcement of the national prohibition act, the customs laws, or internal revenue laws shall be used to pay for storage in any private warehouse of intoxicating liquors or other property in connection therewith, seized pursuant to said act, where there is available for that purpose space in a Government warehouse or other suitable Government property in the judicial district wherein such property was seized or in an adjacent judicial district, and when such seized property is stored in an adjacent district the jurisdiction over such property in the district wherein it was seized shall not be affected thereby. No charges for storing such liquors or other property in a private warehouse shall be disallowed when the seizing officers have approved the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to page 25, line 6, the last paragraph read being as follows:

Total, Coast Guard, exclusive of commandant's office, $10,516,944.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the Senator in charge of the bill if there is an item in the bill for the construction of motor vessels for the Coast Guard, to be used in the prevention of smuggling?

Mr. WARREN. I assume the Senator's inquiry is with relation to the so-called rum running?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is.

Mr. WARREN. That appropriation is in the deficiency bill, which has not yet passed the House.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Secret Service," on page 28, at the end of line 19, to increase the appropriation for suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes, etc., from $425,000 to $433,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public Health Service," on page 33, line 7, to increase the appropriation for the maintenance and expenses of the Division of Venereal Diseases, established by sections 3 and 4, Chapter XV, of the act approved July 9, 1918, including personal and other services in the field and in the District of Columbia, from $25,000 to $149,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, there should be a committee amendment inserted on page 33, after line 7. It does not increase the appropriation, but it makes the bill as it was as it passed the House. It was intended to be included here, but was left out through error.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 33, line 7, after the numerals "$149,000," insert a comma and the following:

of which sum $25,000 shall be allotted to the States for cooperative work in the prevention and control of such diseases.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, that is a considerable increase, from $25,000 to $149,000.

Mr. WARREN. It is not an increase.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am speaking about the amendment as printed. The committee proposes to increase from $25,000 to $149,000. Can the committee give any reason for that?

Mr. WARREN. There are a great many reasons which seem to show that it is necessary. We had an abundance of testimony, both oral and in letters. The appropriation is going down very fast. Last year it was between two and three hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. FLETCHER. Is it within the estimate?

Mr. WARREN. Oh, yes; it was estimated for.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "New Orleans, La., mint," on page 35, line 2, to increase the appropriation for wages of workmen and other employees, from $3,720 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public buildings, Office of Supervising Architect," on page 38, line 18, to increase the appropriation for the completion of the Carville, La., National Leper Home, from $145,000 to $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for New York Subtreasury, on page 39, after line 9, to insert:

For construction of underground passageway from assay office building to subtreasury basement vaults, and changes incident thereto in assay office and subtreasury buildings, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, at the end of line 25, to strike out "$350,000" and insert "$400,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

Remodeling, etc., public buildings: For remodeling, enlarging, and extending completed and occupied public buildings, including any necessary and incidental additions to or changes in mechanical equipment thereof, so as to provide or make available additional space in emergent cases, not to exceed an aggregate of $20,000 at any one building, $400,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Marine hospitals," on page 40, at the end of line 6, to increase the appropriation for improving existing facilities at Carville, La., Marine Hospital No. 66, from $25,000 to $31,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 10, to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 16, to insert:

Fort Stanton, N. Mex., Marine Hospital No. 9: For tent houses, deep wells, incinerator, toilets and baths, silo, smokehouse, bake oven and shelter, repair and painting of existing facilities, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 20, to insert:

New Orleans, La., Marine Hospital No. 14: For improving existing facilities, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 22, to insert:

Portland, Me., Marine Hospital No. 16: For inclosing verandas; installation of bedside lighting system, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 41, to insert:

San Francisco, Calif.: Marine Hospital No. 19: For improving existing facilities, $12,000.

Mr. WARREN. There is a change in punctuation in the San Francisco item which should be made. I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 41, line 1, after the word "California," change the colon to a comma.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 11, under the heading "Quarantine stations," to insert:

Astoria, Oreg., quarantine station: For new kitchen; materials for improvements to electric light plant, including extensions to the bulk Concord, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 14, to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 16, to insert:

Reedy Island, Delaware River, Delaware Quarantine Station: For improving existing facilities, etc., $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 42, to insert:

San Francisco, Calif., Quarantine Station: For additional facilities and improving existing facilities, etc., $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, after line 3, to insert:

San Juan (P. R.) Quarantine Station: For new refrigerating plant, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I notice on page 16, line 25, if the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill will look at it, there is an error in punctuation. The semicolon should be stricken out and a comma inserted, and the comma after the numeral should be stricken out and a semicolon inserted. The punctuation is just reversed. It is a mere matter of punctuation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objecton, the error in punctuation will be corrected.

The next amendment was, on page 45, at the end of line 7, to strike out "$75,000" and insert "$85,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

Vaults and safes: For vaults and lock-box equipments and repairs thereto in all completed and occupied public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department, and for the necessary safe equipments and repairs thereto in all public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department, whether completed and occupied or in course of construction, exclusive of personal services, except for work done by contract or for temporary job labor under exigency not exceeding at one time the sum of $50 at any one building, $85,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I am instructed by the committee to offer an amendment which I will send to the desk. I want to say in explanation that it provides for a fiscal secretary, Secretary of the Treasury, in place of what has been known as "Undersecretary." I ask that the amendment may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 1, line 9, after the numerals "$12,000," insert the following:

Fiscal Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, to be nominated by the President and appointed by him, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall hereafter receive compensation at the rate of $10,000 per annum, and shall perform such duties in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury as may be prescribed by the Secretary or by law, and under the provisions of section 177, Revised Statutes, in case of the death, resignation, absence, or sickness of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall perform the duties of the Secretary until a successor is appointed or such absence or sickness shall cease, $10,000."

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, is that in addition to the three assistants that are provided for?

Mr. WARREN. It leaves the three as they are, and the other one was stricken out; that is, "undersecretary" was stricken out, because "undersecretary" is not considered a good term.

Mr. McKELLAR. The amendment gives the title of fiscal secretary?

Mr. WARREN. Fiscal Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is not adding a new position?

Mr. SMOOT. No; he is one of the four already in existence.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I have a small amendment that I wish to offer at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming offers the following amendment, which the Secretary will report.

The READING CLERK. On page 32, line 2, after the figures "$332,910," insert:

including the purchase of newspapers and clippings from newspapers containing information relating to the prevalence of disease and the public health.

Mr. McKELLAR. What is the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. WARREN. It is a mere matter of providing that out of the contingent fund they are allowed to buy clippings from newspapers without having to advertise. It is a matter mainly for the Health Service. It is a very trifling matter.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I say that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] asked that the proviso on page 2 be passed over, and that we should take it up now, as it is a part of the bill which should be disposed of before we proceed further. We have reached the end of the Treasury Department part of the bill and I wish to settle that matter now.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well. In order that the matter be brought up, I move to strike out——

Mr. WARREN. Perhaps I should say before proceeding further that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who is chairman of the reclassification committee, will explain the matter, except that I may say that the language in this bill is the same that was employed in the Interior Department appropriation bill just passed, and is the same as in all the other bills that have been prepared, and has been adopted by the House, and, of course, becomes a part of the action transferring from the old lines into the new lines of classification.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is an amendment, in effect, to the classification act, and in order that it may be properly before the Senate I make the point of order against the language contained on page 2 of the bill, in line 6, after the numerals "1923," down to and including the end of line 19, in the following words:

the average of the salaries of the total number of persons under any grade or class thereof in any bureau, office, or other appropriation unit, shall not at any time exceed the average of the compensation rates specified for the grade by such act: Provided, That this restriction shall not apply (1) to grades 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the clerical-mechanical service, or (2) to require the reduction in salary of any person whose compensation is fixed, as of July 1, 1924, in accordance with the rules of section 6 of such act, or (3) to prevent the payment of a salary under any grade at a rate higher than the maximum rate of the grade when such higher rate is permitted by "the classification act of 1923," and is specifically authorized by other law.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think the Senator makes the point of order in order to allow me to explain the provisions of that part of the bill. With the consent of the Chair, I shall do so.

On March 4, 1923, the closing day of the last session of Congress, the act known as the classification act became a law. At that time it was hoped that following the appointment of the Classification Board, which consisted of three persons—one the Director of the Budget, one from the Civil Service Commission, and one from the Bureau of Efficiency—that the reclassification of employees in the District of Columbia would soon be made. The allocations under the bill were made. The pending provision is the result of that allocation under the reclassification law, and provides appropriations to cover every employee in the District of Columbia.

I want the Senate to understand that the Appropriations Committee have spent not days, not weeks, but I may say months almost in arriving at the salary due every employee in the District of Columbia according to the classification act and the allocation made under that act by your board. I hold in my hand that work. In this document every employee in the District of Columbia in the Government service is set forth, some 64,000 of them, who fall within the grades of the classes according to the classification law. So careful were we that the head of every department, the head of every bureau, and the head of every division reported the number of employees in every grade in every class, and the committee have taken those reports and added them up and made an appropriation to cover every person in the Government service in the District of Columbia according to the reclassification act.

I want to say to the Senate that this provision covers the work:

That in expending appropriations or portions of appropriations contained in this act for the payment for personal services in the District of Columbia in accordance with "the classification act of 1923," the average of the salaries of the total number of persons under any grade or class thereof in any bureau, office, or other appropriation unit shall not at any time exceed the average of the compensation rates specified for the grade by such act.

In other words, we have taken, for instance, class 6, and I think that is about the only class that any of the Senators have been importuned about, and I shall also tell the reasons, if my information is correct, why many employees have appealed to certain Senators and Congressmen in opposition to the provision of the bill under discussion. In class 6, for instance, we have taken every employee in grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7. We have made the appropriation for every cent for all the employees in class 6 according to the number of employees there are in class 6 in every one of the seven grades.

In view of the act and in order to carry its provisions, we have here provided that the appropriations are made upon the average of the grade within the class; in other words, if it were not so provided we should not know the exact amount that would be necessary to appropriate. In class 6, for instance, there are seven grades. The law is effective the 1st day of July next, with so many employees in the Government service in the District of Columbia in class 6, with seven grades and a certain number of employees in each grade. If there is a vacancy in the seventh grade there can be a promotion in grade 1 to grade 2, from grade 2 to grade 3, from grade 3 to grade 4, from grade 4 to grade 5, from grade 5 to grade 6, and from grade 6 to grade 7. If there is a vacancy caused for any reason in grade 2 in class 6, there can be only one advance; that is, an employee in grade 1. So, Mr. President, the appropriation was made to cover the number of persons there were in the grades of every class and every grade in every class.

Complaints have come from members of the income-tax unit. I do not say that the letter of Mr. Bright to the employees in that department——

Mr. ASHURST. The letter of whom?

Mr. SMOOT. Of Mr. Bright. He is the deputy commissioner. I do not say that his letter is altogether accurate in that statement that the classification law will prevent him from making promotions. Congress has provided how increases in salary may be made, but some of those employees have told me that their salaries will be decreased. The salaries can not be decreased unless ratings under the classification law bring the employees into a class the salary of which is not equal to the salary which they are to-day receiving. The income-tax unit is the only unit from which I have had any complaint. I have been told, though I do not know that it is true, that the salaries in that unit are higher than any other salaries for similar work in the departments. I do not say that is true; but I do say that there is no employee in the District of Columbia covered by this appropriation bill who is not provided for according to classification and the allocation of every other employee in the District under the reclassificatin act.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator what are the salaries in class 6? The salary I take it depends on the grade.

Mr. SMOOT. There are seven grades in class 6.

Mr. FLETCHER. And how do the salaries run in class 6? The classification act refers to compensation in grades and not according to classes.

Mr. SMOOT. It refers to classes also. The rates of compensation in the grades of class 6 are as follows:

The annual rate of compensation for the positions in this grade shall be, first, $1,500; second, $1,560; third, $1,620; fourth, $1,680; fifth, $1,740; sixth, $1,800; and seventh, $1,860.

While I am on this subject, I will say to the Senate that in a consolidated report covering every employee in the District of Columbia, as classified and as allocated under the classification act, we have a complete statement showing the increases of salaries as compared with the salaries they are now receiving plus the $240 bonus.

I may add here that the average increase is a little over 4 per cent; that is, over and above the basic salary provided for in past appropriations, and the $240 bonus added, there is an excess of a little over 4 per cent. The pending bill provides for the basic salaries as drawn to-day, plus the $240 bonus, and, on the average, something more than 4 per cent.

Mr. FLETCHER. Do I understand the Senator from Utah to say that the bonus will not be carried hereafter as a bonus?

Mr. SMOOT. Not in the case of Government employees in the District.

Mr. FLETCHER. But it is figured in as a part of the basic salary?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. We can show to the Senator as to any of the bureaus just what the classification law adds to the salaries of its employees. Some of the increases of salary found in the pending bill are due to the fact that the House of Representatives did not take that into consideration. Under the classification act, the appropriations for some of the bureaus have been increased $11,000; some of them have been increased $13,000; some of them have been increased $23,000; and, I think, one has been increased $35,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Do I understand the Senator to say that all of the clerks in all of the departments get at least their present salary, including the bonus, and the 4 per cent increase under the classification act?

Mr. SMOOT. The average increase is 4 per cent, I will say to the Senator. As to some of them, it is more than 4 per cent, and as to some of them, it is less than 4 per cent.

Mr. McKELLAR. But they all get some increase?

Mr. SMOOT. I think there are a few who will not get the increase.

Mr. McKELLAR. But they all would get the increase under the classification act as it stands now and necessarily so?

Mr. SMOOT. I think there are a few of them who would not do so, because they could not qualify for a position necessary.

Mr. McKELLAR. This provision would prevent a great many of them getting the increase?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no, Mr. President; this proposed provision of the law will give every single solitary Government employee in the District of Columbia just what he is entitled to under the classification act. I see the Senator from Tennessee has the same circular letter from Mr. Bright to which I referred. I do know that not a person in that division or in any other division or bureau or department of the Government will receive any other salary than that which is provided by the classification act and the allocations under that act.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield further to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will give the Senator the case of a constituent of mine from Tennessee as it was given to me. I read from a letter I have received:

I entered the Treasury Department on August 10, 1922, at a salary of $1,000, plus the $240 bonus, after several years' service in the War Department at a higher salary. It was understood, however, that an increase would be granted at the end of the six months' period, if warranted. In March, 1923, raises were received by the clerks in my office performing duties identical with mine and whose salaries ranged from $200 to $300 higher. On February 16, 1924, certain salary adjustments in grade 9 and up were made, discriminations being shown against the lower-paid clerks, although there is known to be a surplus of $150,000 on hand in the Treasury appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924.

The attached letter places the failure of promotion in the lower grades on the appropriations bill created by the Congress for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925. Inasmuch as the act is not effective until July 1, 1924, and the work performed by me has been allocated to grade 7, the minimum salary of which is $1,500, an increase of at least $260 at this time is the only equitable adjustment to be made.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that under the provisions of this bill if the employee passes and falls into class 7 with the rate of pay as stated in the letter, this bill provides money to pay it.

Mr. McKELLAR. But here is a letter from Mr. Bright, the deputy commissioner, saying—the employee happens to be a lady in this case—that she will not get it. Of course, I agree with the Senator that she ought to get it, and if it were not for this provision in this bill she would get it; but this provision of the bill will prevent her from getting that adjustment of her salary which she would get with this provision out of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I will ask the Senator to yield to me for a moment further if I may interrupt him.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am told by others that it brings about this kind of condition in the bureau: Frequently the head of a section will be getting $200 or $300 less than the employee under him in that section.

Mr. SMOOT. That can not happen after July 1, 1924.

Mr. McKELLAR. It does happen. It is like the man in jail; he is there.

Mr. SMOOT. But the classification bill will not take effect until July 1, and every employee in the income-tax unit—and the circular letter from Mr. Bright is the only one that, so far as I know, has been written, and I do not know by what authority or for what reason he wrote the letter——

Mr. McKELLAR. It is perfectly apparent why it was written. Under the provisions of this amendment it is really left to the department to fix the salaries.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no.

Mr. McKELLAR. When it comes to promotions it is.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no.

Mr. McKELLAR. They can promote from one position to another, and the result is that some of the clerks under this provision will be promoted to good places while others will be kept where they are. That is all there is to it. That is what is happening to the employees who are complaining. They know absolutely about it; they know better than either the Senator or I because they are there and are not getting the money.

Mr. SMOOT. The classification act has never been in force, and that can not happen, I will say to the Senator, under the classification act.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not under the classification act, but it can happen under this provision of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the provision carries out the classification act.

Mr. McKELLAR. If it is a part of the classification act, why put it in this appropriation bill?

Mr. SMOOT. If we did not put it in here in these words we would have to make a direct appropriation for every grade and every class and for the number of employees in each grade and in each class, and that, of course, would be out of the question.

Mr. McKELLAR. The classification act will make uniform promotions, while this provision will enable the chief of a bureau to single out employees and promote them as and when he likes to places that he likes. Some will receive their old salaries while others will go up. Now, that was not the intention of the classification act, as I understand it.

Mr. SMOOT. Just the contrary, and that would be a violation of the law if ever undertaken. There can be no advances under the classification act from one grade or class to another until there is a vacancy in a higher grade or class.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me ask the Senator a question. The provision reads:

That in expending appropriations, or portions of appropriations, contained in this act for the payment for personal services in the District of Columbia in accordance with the classification act of 1923, the average of the salaries of the total number of persons under any grade or class thereof in any bureau, office, or other appropriation unit shall not at any time exceed the average of the compensation rates specified for the grade by such act.

Suppose the salaries run from $1,200 to $1,800—let us take that—then everyone is bound by the average, which is $1,500?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no!

Mr. McKELLAR. That is what it says.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not help what that letter says; the law does not provide so.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is what Mr. Bright, the deputy commissioner, thinks it means, because he is writing to the employees, in advance of the passage of the law, saying that that is what it means.

Mr. SMOOT. If that were what it meant, then there would be only one salary in the whole unit.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am giving the Senator just what he says.

Mr. SMOOT. But it is not right. This is what the provision says: There has been appropriated, I will say, in class 6—because the letter refers largely to class 6—a certain amount of money. It is appropriated for every employee in class 6 in the District of Columbia falling under grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7.

We know the number of employees that there are in each of those grades. We have added the employees at the grades to which they were allocated under the classification act, and we have appropriated for that unit every dollar necessary to pay all of the employees in the unit. Now, we say that there shall not be paid more than the average of all of the grades within the class because of the fact that we have taken the number of the employees; there are so many in grade 1, so many in grade 2, so many in grade 3, and the average of that is the amount that we appropriate, not by way of promotions, and the law specifically provides how the promotions shall be made.

If there is a vacancy in grade 2 of class 6, there is only one way of filling it, and that is by taking an employee from grade 1 in class 6 and filling it and then filling the vacancy in grade 1. If there is a vacancy in grade 7 of class 6, then 6 goes to 7, 5 goes to 6, 4 goes to 5, 3 goes to 4, and so on all the way down the line; and there never would be any change in it until there is an appropriation made, and there is an appropriation made for every employee in the Government service in the District of Columbia.

Mr. McKELLAR. Now, if the Senator will yield for a moment, the language means something. There is not any doubt about that. I am frank to say that it is very difficult for me to understand what it does mean. I doubt if the Senator knows what it means, as learned and as astute as he is and as much knowledge as he has about these things; and I very frankly say that I think the Senator is well informed on this subject. Mr. Bright does not think it means what the Senator says, because here is what he says. Listen to this:

> On February 16, 1924, certain salary adjustments became effective. In arriving at these adjustments it has not been possible to make all of the promotions which the bureau had hoped to make. In order that there may be no misunderstanding, I assure you that the failure of many deserving employees to receive promotions contemplated at this time has been due entirely to the unavoidable conditions created by an act of Congress.

That act of Congress had not been passed when that was written, because these employees would have all had those promotions if the act of Congress had been carried out.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; that is not what it says.

Mr. McKELLAR. But Mr. Bright is undertaking now to put the blame upon the Congress before the Congress actually authorized the legislation which he desires, or which the department desires, to be put into this bill.

Now I come to the practical question.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me answer that first.

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one moment and then I will. The practical question is this:

The Senator and Mr. Bright evidently differ about this matter. So far as I am concerned, if it will help the matter along I will frankly say that I am not well enough advised to be certain about it myself. Surely when the head of a department or the real head of a department and a man who knows as much about it as the Senator from Utah differ, an ordinary wayfaring man like myself can not be presumed to know the true meaning of the language. Why does not the Senator let this go out, and frame in conference a provision that the Senator will understand and Mr. Bright will understand and all will understand? That is the way to handle it. It ought to go out.

Mr. SMOOT. No; this is the only way to handle it, and this is the only way we can ever make an appropriation to cover every employee of the Government. If Mr. Bright refers to the reclassification act of Congress, there may be cases of employees in his department who, following the examination and the allocation, will fall into a lower grade, the salary of which is less than they are being paid to-day. It can not be any other way. There may be some employees in his unit who have been advanced before any reclassification bill was passed and who are receiving more than they are entitled to receive under the reclassification act. I have not heard of a single other department of the Government where that is the case, and I am told that that is the very unit where that has been true in the past. They are bound to receive an increase of pay from what they are getting to-day if their examination under the reclassification act and the allocations lets them fall into a grade or a class that receives an amount higher than they are receiving to-day.

The Senator knows that when the reclassification bill was under consideration here the Senate committee reported a provision in the reclassification bill that there should be at no time a decrease of any employee from the amount he is now receiving. That was rejected on the floor of the Senate. It was objected to by the Senate, and was taken out; and, if Senators will remember, a number of cases were pointed to at the time where employees were drawing salaries and doing very little work. Some of the employees here were being paid not for the amount of work they did but because of the fact that they were old soldiers, for one thing. Then I have in mind two or three cases where women, widows of soldiers, were drawing salaries higher than the work would justify.

The Senate thought at the time the provision just referred to was not right, and that if any employee in the Government service could not take an examination and fall within the class and grade that would give him the salary he is now receiving he ought, in justice to every other employee in the Government service, to go to the grade to which his ability carried him. Furthermore, Mr. President, I will say that this provision will go into every one of the appropriation bills, and no employee of the Government in the District of Columbia can ever find fault with the appropriations that will be made, for we will make them according to the classification and the allocation that is made in every division, in every bureau, in every department of the Government.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, the Senator realizes that this is a very important proviso. We have passed the reclassification bill. It is now the law. Various employees will come within this class or that class, and each class will get so much money, and so on. The Senator construes this language to mean one thing. The departments up here construe it, according to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], to mean something else. At least, there is some doubt about it. I have had delegations of employees come to me, and I know that they place the same construction on it, and, as the Senator from Tennessee has pointed out, they have been led by the head officers in these departments to believe that that construction was correct.

That not being true, and the language not being plain even to the distinguished Senator from Tennessee and myself—which is not saying very much for it so far as I am concerned——

Mr. McKELLAR. Nor I.

Mr. HARRISON. Anyway, if the Senate adopts this proposition the provision can not go into conference. Does not the Senator think that if there is any doubt about it it might be well just to strike out this provision and let the matter go to conference? The Senator from Utah will be one of the conferees, and then it can be worked out so as to remove all doubt about the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. We have passed one appropriation bill now with this identical language in it.

Mr. McKELLAR. But, Mr. President, that was overlooked. Attention was not brought to it.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; it was not overlooked.

Mr. McKELLAR. A Member of the House—a very able and distinguished Republican Member from the State of Missouri, one of the most accomplished men in the Congress—was over here just a few moments ago, and he said that the provision in the Interior Department appropriation bill had entirely escaped his attention and that of other Members of the House of Representatives, and that he thought the matter ought to go to conference and be straightened out. We ought to be careful to treat these employees fairly and justly. We ought not to put in a provision here simply because we have made a mistake, possibly, in another case. If that has been done, we ought not to make the same mistake here, because this one refers to a large class of employees.

I will say that I have seen dozens of employees from my own State who were affected by this act. To use the description of one of them, the department had virtually divided the employees in that particular bureau or section or division into the sheep and the goats. The sheep are those that got increases of salary under the reclassification act; the goats are those who did not, and there are a lot of them in the goat faction. That was not the intention of the act at all. It can all be ironed out in conference; and I suggested before the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] came in that we strike out this provision and let it go to conference.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that when the first bill, the appropriation bill for the Interior Department, was before the House of Representatives, Mr. MADDEN spent over an hour explaining to the House just exactly what this provision meant.

Mr. McKELLAR. It was not argued here in the Senate at all, as I remember.

Mr. SMOOT. No; it was not, because nobody asked the question, and I thought it was so simple that nobody would want an explanation of it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator's explanation is splendid. I do not see how anybody could complain about that. He says that these parties are going to be placed and given pay according to their classification and that when some one drops out in the higher grade they will be promoted, and so forth; but the employees have a different idea about it, and they gathered that impression from the higher ups.

Mr. McKELLAR. From Mr. Bright, the deputy commissioner.

Mr. HARRISON. If there is any doubt about the language of the proposition, it does seem to me that it could be stricken out and the Senators could get together in conference, because they are going to write what they want anyhow, and they could have these people before them and come to the same conclusion that the Senator from Utah has reached.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. Bright was in my office with about 30 of the employees from his unit. I think Mr. Bright's opinion is changed since that conference. It may not be, however. The first part of that letter must refer to the reclassification act.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; it says here that he had expected to do the contrary, but that it can not be done owing to a provision in the appropriation bill. He is referring to this appropriation bill that is not yet passed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, he had no right to promise any employee in his unit that he would increase his salary unless the employee's rating under the reclassification act carried him there.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, he had not promised them at all to increase their salaries.

Mr. SMOOT. The only person that can be harmed, or whose salary will be reduced under this provision, is one that is drawing more money to-day than he is entitled to under the reclassification and the allocation given him. It can not apply to any other employee in the District of Columbia.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have just read Mr. Bright's letter——

Mr. SMOOT. I do not care what Mr. Bright says in his letter.

Mr. McKELLAR. And I have just read from the employee who says that she is not getting what she ought to get.

Mr. SMOOT. Then she will get it after July 1, because she is appropriated for according to the class and grade for which she passed her examination.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, there can not be any doubt about what Mr. Bright was referring to——

Mr. SMOOT. I do not care what he is referring to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Because he says in his letter that the act referred to is the bill making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to take the time to call attention to the debate in the House, but there are pages and pages of it, because of the fact that the House wanted to know just exactly what the provision was and how it was arrived at.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senators in the meantime allow me one moment? Taking this amendment on page 2, starting on line 11:

That this restriction shall not apply (1) to grades 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the clerical-mechanical service, or (2) to require the reduction in salary of any person whose compensation is fixed as of July 1, 1924.

Here in the classification act is a plain statement of what shall be done:

1. In computing the existing compensation of an employee, any bonus which the employee receives shall be included.

2. If the employee is receiving compensation less than the minimum rate of the grade or class thereof in which his duties fall, the compensation shall be increased to that minimum grade.

3. If the employee is receiving compensation within the range of salary prescribed for the appropriate grade at one of the rates fixed therein, no change shall be made in the existing compensation.

4. If the employee is receiving compensation within the range of salary prescribed for the appropriate grade, but not at one of the rates fixed therein, the compensation shall be increased to the next higher rate.

Mr. McKELLAR. If that is the law, why not leave that the law? Why amend it by this?

Mr. SMOOT. In order to arrive at some amount we can appropriate; and the only way we can arrive at the exact amount is exactly in the way in which we have arrived at it. This is what the law provides:

The head of each department shall allocate all positions in his department in the District of Columbia to their appropriate grades in the compensation schedules and shall fix the rate of compensation of each employee thereunder, in accordance with the rules prescribed in section 6 herein.

What is section 6? Section 6 provides:

All new appointments shall be made at the minimum rate of the appropriate grade or class thereof.

If the Senate will remember, I called particular attention to that. I said at the time that I thought there should be elasticity in the act; that if a position were allocated in class 6, grade 1, if you please, and the person taking it was exceptionally good, developed rapidly in the work which she was called upon to do, even more rapidly than perhaps others who were in that grade, I thought it would be proper that there should be a reexamination for a reclassification and that she should take the place to which she was entitled under that reexamination. But that is not the law.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am informed that the gist of this matter is that the allocations for each grade or division, instead of having been made under the reclassification law, have been made according to a rule laid down by the Bureau of Efficiency.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what the law says shall be done.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; the law says how it shall be done; but the Bureau of Efficiency has adopted a different method from that fixed in the law, and that method is found in the language which is here complained of, which virtually changes the law to conform to an opinion of the Bureau of Efficiency. If that is true, that ought not to be done in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that that is not an accurate statement of the situation.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have the authority of a Member of the House who has discussed this matter, and who knows, I think, what he is talking about. If it were not for some change of the reclassification law it would not be in here. In other words, if it was for the purpose of carrying out the reclassification law why put it in this appropriation bill? It ought not to be in this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. That is just its object—to carry out the reclassification law.

Mr. McKELLAR. We do not need another bill. We do not have to pass another bill here to carry out the provisions of a law already in existence.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President, but we have to make an appropriation in order to pay the employees who have been classified under the reclassification act, and we are making the appropriation here to carry that law out. If the appropriation were not made, of course there would not be any employment given as provided in the reclassification act.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. What is this reclassification act? I do not mean this provision; but has there not been proposed a measure providing for reclassification?

Mr. SMOOT. The field service has not been reclassified, and we will have to make our appropriations direct, as we have in the past, plus the bonus, for paying the field service; but every employee in the District of Columbia has been classified. Not only that, but under the law if any employee of the Government is dissatisfied with her classification she has a perfect right to appeal to the board.

While I am on this question I want to take up another question, because I have been asked to do so. There have been criticisms leveled at the board because of the fact that the field employees have not been classified. Mr. Wittner, an employee of the Government, appears in the public print very often. He seems to be leading the criticism against the board. I care not whether the opposition comes from Mr. Wittner or some one else, I know that the law has been carried out as near as it could be in the time allowed.

I have here a tentative compensation schedule for estimate purposes which was put out by the board for the field service. What is the law in relation to the field service? This is what the law provides:

> The board shall make a survey of the field service, and shall report to Congress at the first regular session following the passage of this act schedules of positions and grades and salaries for such services, which shall follow the principles and rules of the compensation schedules herein contained, in so far as these are applicable to the field service.

No such words as these are used as to the employees of the District of Columbia. The provision as to the employees in the District of Columbia is found in the same section.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I can not quite understand why this provision on page 2 is necessary to bring this under the reclassification act, notwithstanding what the Senator has just said. In some way the employees in the District of Columbia are to be reclassified in that act, are they not?

Mr. SMOOT. Every employee in the District of Columbia is classified, and they are set forth in this document which I have in my hand. It shows just what grades each and all fall into.

Mr. BROOKHART. In some particulars this language from lines 3 to 19 changes the provision of the reclassification act.

Mr. SMOOT. Not in the least as to the District of Columbia, and that is all we are appropriating for.

Mr. BROOKHART. It will not hurt anything to strike it out, then.

Mr. SMOOT. It will, because we say that the amount of money shall be the average of each grade in each class as allocated by the reclassification board. If that language were not there, as I said before, we would have to take up all the different classes and every grade in a class and have so many of grade 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 in each of the classes.

Mr. BROOKHART. Is all this language for the sole purpose of fixing the amount of money paid to employees in the District?

Mr. SMOOT. For the employees in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BROOKHART. It has no reference whatever to fixing the grade of pay or promotion?

Mr. SMOOT. No. They have had their examinations, and each one of them falls within a particular grade or class, and for that grade or class the compensation is specifically stated, the employees will get the compensation specified, and we are now appropriating for it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the language of the amendment itself and the letter of the deputy commissioner who has charge of the matter makes it perfectly apparent that there is something wrong about this matter.

Mr. SMOOT. Charge of what?

Mr. McKELLAR. Saying——

Mr. SMOOT. What has he charge of?

Mr. McKELLAR. He is in charge of all the employees in the Internal Revenue Department.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; just in the income-tax unit.

Mr. McKELLAR. The commissioner in charge of the income-tax unit. That is commonly called the revenue department. The other is called the customs department. We have just had some discussion about that.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we are not hearing from any of the other departments, and I have given the reason already why we hear from the one to which the Senator refers.

I will say to the Senator from Iowa that no employee, unless he is receiving more money than he is entitled to under the reclassification act, can complain of this provision. If he is receiving more than his examination would entitle him to, of course under the reclassification act he will be demoted.

Mr. BROOKHART. I think the Senator is seeking to accomplish the same purpose I have in view, but some way or other I have not been able to figure it out of this language.

Mr. SMOOT. I will show the Senator that the language will appropriate the money for every single employee in the District of Columbia according to the reclassification act and according to the examination taken by every employee.

Mr. Wittner has had a great deal to say about violation of the reclassification act and takes it upon himself to speak for the Government employees. I do not want to go into the qualifications of this man, or his character even, but I did take occasion to inquire into his qualifications and as to who he was, because he had so much adverse criticism in the press about men who were working sometimes 16 hours out of the 24 and worked every Sunday and every night for months to secure a workable classification act that would do justice to every employee. I will content myself by simply saying that every one of the five men to whom he asked the Civil Service Commission to write to testify as to his character reports against the man, and I have copies of their reports.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, that has no connection with this particular matter.

Mr. SMOOT. No; but I am now taking up the question of the field service.

Mr. McKELLAR. I never heard of the matter, so I have no objection in the world to the Senator putting it in.

Mr. SMOOT. Congressman MADDEN, Senator WARREN, and myself, members of the Appropriations Committees of the two Houses, were in Washington in July and this tentative compensation schedule for estimate purposes was placed in my hands. Just as soon as this was issued protests were received from the State Department, from the Commerce Department, from the War Department, and from the Navy Department calling attention to what the result would be if the tentative rates were put into operation and what it would do to employees of the Government and to those employed outside of the Government in certain localities. Let me call attention to only one of the many, many things. For instance, the tentative rate as to a cook was as follows: The entrance rate is $1,320; grade 2 is $1,380; grade 3, $1,440; grade 4, $1,500; grade 5, $1,560; grade 6, $1,620; grade 7, $1,680. When I called attention to that fact to a member of the civil service he said, "No; that only applies to a head cook." I said, "No; it does not. Turn to the next page and you will find the head cook provided for." And what provision was made for the head cook? He starts in at $1,500 and winds up at $1,860.

Take the employees in the Philippine Islands; in fact, take the employees anywhere outside of the United States proper, and under this tentative schedule they would be paid wages that would upset all the salary schedules in force. I heard one of the southern Senators say, "Suppose they put this rate into effect in the South to pay a cook $1,320, what would it do to us there?"

So the members of the Appropriations Committee who were in Washington went to General Lord and called his attention to the tentative schedules. It was concluded that this schedule could not be put in force, and the time for the Budget to make a report to Congress, as provided by law, would not give time to make the field classification of all the Government employees, no matter where located. What was to be done?

A classification of all the Government employees in the District of Columbia could be made in time and that was done as required by the reclassification act. Every examination paper of every employee of the Government in the District of Columbia was examined and allocation made for every employee, and I have here the result. Appropriations for every Government employee in the District of Columbia will be made and every dollar they are entitled to under their examinations and the allocations made under the reclassification act.

I do not know what could be done more than has been done. The pending amendment simply appropriates the necessary funds to carry out the law. I am the last person in the world to want low wages.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMOOT. I will yield in just a moment. I want the employees of the Government to be the best paid employees in all the world. I want their conditions and their surroundings to be the best in all the world. But I want the employees, on the other hand, to give the best that is in them to the Government. I want every employee to be classified and when that classification is made and the employee comes within a class the only thing the committee can do is to appropriate the money to pay for the position he is entitled to through his examination.

I now yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BROOKHART. I would like to inquire of the Senator what the particular reasons are for excepting grades 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the clerical mechanical service?

Mr. SMOOT. That, I will say to the Senator, is on account of the per diem pay. They are paid so much per day. There is quite a number of them in the District of Columbia. For instance, a few are hired just a few days in the year for cleaning the snow off the streets, and so forth. They are not classified, but they are paid per diem.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, upon more careful examination I am convinced that the point of order is not well taken, and I therefore withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. McKELLAR. I now move to strike out, on page 2, line 6, the words following the figures "1923" down to the end of line 19, being the language against which I made the point of order just withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the amendment? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, from the explanation that has been made here this afternoon by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] it would seem that the reclassification act, in many instances, has produced probably different results from what I understood it would. I do not know that we can remedy the situation at the present time. From information which I have received from different sources, it appears that under the reclassification act those who have been unfortunate enough to have received the smaller salaries have had their misfortunes doubly increased under the administration of the reclassification act.

For instance, I had brought to my attention the case of one person who entered the service at a salary of $1,100. This person was in another branch of the service receiving a salary of some $1,500 or $1,600 per annum. They were curtailing the force within that particular department, and properly so. This person received a transfer and under the rules had to enter the new department at the minimum salary of $1,100 a year. That person had been in the service some two years and had made an excellent record and had a splendid grade, but under the administration of the reclassification act other persons who were more fortunate in getting promotions within that time are drawing $1,400 or $1,500 a year and instead of being reclassified and put upon a just basis they are getting three or four hundred dollars a year more.

Mr. SMOOT. No matter who told the Senator that, it is not possible under the reclassification act. That woman, if the person to whom the Senator refers is a woman, took the examination and would be classified according to the examination that she herself passed. She will be paid under the classification act in the grade of the class in which she passes. There is no head of any department and there is no one on earth who can keep her out of it. The appropriation bill carries the money to pay her on that basis.

Mr. TRAMMELL. How was the grade ascertained?

Mr. SMOOT. It was ascertained by her own examination.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Does the Senator mean on the part of the unit head or the board assembled by the unit?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly, under the law. I want to say to the Senator that that woman has a perfect right to appeal to the board if she does not think her allocation is right under the classification.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I heartily agree with the Senator on that, but I say that a number of instances have come to my attention where it seems that because they were unfortunate enough to be on a minimum salary, they are retained at the minimum salary regardless of their record, regardless of the fact that they execute as much work and do their work as capably and efficiently as other clerks who get $300 or $400 a year more salary. I supposed that reclassification meant that we were going to exercise some spirit of fairness and justice, and that we were not going to keep all salaries at the minimum for those who were unfortunate enough to be drawing the minimum salary for the service they were performing, when they were performing the same work and just as efficiently as others who had been fortunate enough heretofore to get an increase of probably $300 or $400 a year.

We can say whatever we please about the question of classification and promotion, but in almost a majority of the instances, from my observation of the situation in Washington, it is a result of favoritism and not the result of efficiency and competency. I was in hopes that we would get away from favoritism and have justice extended to the employees. My impression has been from the information I have received that the same old policy of favoritism has followed through the classes of reclassification. I wish there was some way to stop it, so that all could be treated fairly and justly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR].

On a division the amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Office of the Postmaster General," on page 51, at the beginning of line 13, to strike out "$201,740; in all, $213,740," and to insert "$207,740; in all, $219,740," so as to make the paragraph read:

Postmaster General, $12,000; for personal services in the office of the Postmaster General in the District of Columbia in accordance with "the classification act of 1923," $207,740; in all, $219,740.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Salaries in bureaus and offices," on page 52, line 2, to increase the appropriation for personal services in the District of Columbia, in accordance with the classification act of 1923, in the office of the First Assistant Postmaster General from $387,500 to $396,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 13, to strike out:

In expending appropriations in the foregoing paragraphs under this title for personal services in the District of Columbia, in accordance with "the classification act of 1923," the number of persons in grades of the professional and scientific service above grade 2 shall not exceed 10 in the aggregate, and the number of persons in grades of the clerical, administrative, and fiscal service above grade 7 shall not exceed 56 in the aggregate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, at the end of line 8, to strike out "$445,000" and to insert "$455,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

For traveling expenses of inspectors, inspectors in charge, and the chief post-office inspector, and for the traveling expenses of four clerks performing stenographic and clerical assistance to post-office inspectors in the investigation of important fraud cases, $455,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of the First Assistant Postmaster General," on page 57, at the end of line 13, to increase the appropriation for compensation to watchmen, messengers, and laborers from $5,600,000 to $5,759,150.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, at the end of line 20, to increase the appropriation for allowances to third-class post offices to cover the cost of clerical services from $4,400,000 to $4,500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, at the end of line 22, to increase the appropriation for rent, light, and fuel for first, second, and third class post offices from $14,000,000 to $14,416,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, at the end of line 24, to increase the appropriation for miscellaneous items necessary and incidental to post offices of the first and second classes from $900,000 to $935,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, at the end of line 6, to increase the appropriation for car fare and bicycle allowance, including special-delivery car fare, from $950,000 to $980,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of the Second Assistant Postmaster General," on page 59, after line 18, to insert:

For the operation and maintenance of the airplane mail service between New York, N. Y., and San Francisco, Calif., via Chicago, Ill., and Omaha, Nebr., including necessary incidental expenses and employment of necessary personnel, $1,500,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if it is in order, I should like to propose to amend the amendment by inserting the sum of $3,000,000 instead of $1,500,000. My reason for that is that the air mail service——

Mr. WARREN. May I say to the Senator from Tennessee that an amendment has been prepared which carries into effect a suggestion which has been adopted by the committee, and it has been agreed that it shall be offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS]?

Mr. PHIPPS rose.

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not know that, and I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PHIPPS. I propose to offer the amendment later. It was presented by me some time ago and has been printed.

Mr. WARREN. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Colorado comes by consent of the full committee, I wish to say to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand. The idea is to permit the committee amendment to be agreed to, and that then the amendment providing for the night air mail service shall afterwards be offered by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PHIPPS. That amendment will be offered in its proper order.

Mr. WARREN. It has already been agreed to by the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. The amendment has not been adopted by the Senate, though it has been agreed to by the committee.

Mr. WARREN. I understand that the amendment providing for the appropriation of the first half of the $3,000,000 has been adopted.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; it has not as yet been adopted; and I thought the same result could be reached by inserting "$3,000,000," instead of "$1,500,000" as provided in the pending amendment. However, I am perfectly willing that the procedure shall take the course suggested by the Senator from Wyoming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the committee amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 61, line 3, to increase the appropriation for transportation of foreign mails by steamship, aircraft, or otherwise from $7,500,000 to $7,800,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General," on page 64, line 24, to strike out "$500,000" and to insert "and for operating expenses of engineering and technical personnel engaged in experimental and research activities, $600,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

For rental, purchase, exchange, and repair of canceling machines and motors, mechanical mail-handling apparatus and other labor-saving devices, including cost of power in rented buildings and miscellaneous expenses of installation and operation of same, including salaries of five traveling mechanicians and for per diem allowance of traveling mechanicians while actually traveling on official business away from their homes and their official domiciles, at a rate to be fixed by the Postmaster General, not to exceed $4 per day, and for operating expenses of engineering and technical personnel engaged in experimental and research activities, $600,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 12, after the name "District of Columbia," to strike out "$1,750,000" and to insert "$1,960,000," so as to read:

For the purchase, manufacture, and repair of mail bags and other mail containers and attachments, mail locks, keys, chains, tools, machinery, and material necessary for same, and for incidental expenses pertaining thereto, also material, machinery, and tools necessary for the manufacture and repair in the equipment shops at Washington, D. C., of such other equipment for the Postal Service as may be deemed expedient; for compensation to labor employed in the equipment shops at Washington, D. C., $1,960,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, at the beginning of line 2, to strike out "$500,000" and to insert "$300,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

For pay of rural carriers, substitutes for rural carriers on annual and sick leave, clerks in charge of rural stations, and tolls and ferriage, Rural Delivery Service, and for the incidental expenses thereof, $89,250,000, of which amount $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be immediately available for the establishment of new routes recommended and approved by the department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendments have been completed. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and is still open to amendment.

Mr. PHIPPS. I now desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 59, after line 23, it is proposed to insert the following:

For an additional amount for the installation, equipment, and operation of the airplane mail service by night flying, and to enable the department to make the additional charges for both night and day service on first-class mail matter, in accordance with existing law, $1,500,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DILL. I desire to know whether the adoption of this amendment increases the total appropriation to $3,000,000?

Mr. PHIPPS. The adoption of the amendment increases the total appropriation to $3,000,000, and will also enable the department to charge additional rates for mail matter transportation by the Air Service.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I desire to inquire if there is any fund in the appropriation to take care of a route between New Orleans and the quarantine station where the airplanes meet ships that are detained there for 24 hours.

Mr. WARREN. That is provided for by the post-office service.

Mr. PHIPPS. It comes under different items and is cared for.

Mr. BROUSSARD. If it is cared for, I am satisfied.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. On page 39, line 1, I move that the numerals "$10,000" be stricken out and that "$15,000" be substituted therefor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 39, line 1, after the word "exceeding," it is proposed to strike out "$10,000" and to insert "$15,000," so as to make the clause read:

Fairmount, Minn., post office: The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to pay from amounts heretofore appropriated for the purchase of a site and construction of a building for post-office purposes at Fairmount, Minn., a sum not exceeding $15,000 for the purchase of a suitable site.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. As I understand, that does not at all exceed the limit which has been heretofore fixed by law, and I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 61, line 18, after the words "Postmaster General," it is proposed to insert:

and to be accounted for on his certificate, which certificate shall be conclusive on the accounting officers of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming, in a word, state what the amendment proposes?

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the amendment may again be read.

Mr. McKELLAR. After that shall have been done, I should like to have the Senator from Wyoming give an explanation of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming will again be stated.

The reading clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand, the amendment refers to the appropriation for the expenses of delegates to the Universal Postal Congress at Stockholm?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is entirely satisfactory to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 57, line 22, after the numerals "$14,416,600," it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter rental of post-office premises under lease may be paid monthly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, line 12, after the word "notwithstanding," it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That none of the money here appropriated shall be expended in the commission of acts which are in violation of the national prohibition act nor for inducing others to violate the provisions of said national prohibition act.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I hope the chairman of the committee will have no objection to accepting the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I ask that the amendment be again stated? My attention was temporarily diverted to another matter.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I understand that the Chair has stated that the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. But the Senator would not object to letting it again be read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee was on his feet when the Chair made the announcement.

Mr. McKELLAR. My attention was temporarily diverted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana will be stated.

The reading clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, in the House of Representatives that amendment, perhaps, would come under the Holman rule, but I think it transgresses our rule as to legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming make a point of order against the amendment?

Mr. WARREN. I will not make a point of order, as the amendment may be considered in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I desire to bring to the attention of the Senate an amendment which was considered in the committee and was unanimously agreed to, so far as those present were concerned, although one or two Senators were absent, and the chairman of the committee was instructed to offer it on the floor of the Senate.

Some years ago there was installed from time to time in certain of the post offices in the larger cities in the United States what is known as the pneumatic tube service. That service was suspended for a time and then, later, was reinstalled in one or two of the cities. After a hearing we decided to present the recommendation of the committee in behalf of the transmission of mail by such tubes in the cities of Philadelphia and Boston at a total cost of $245,000, the expenditure in Boston for this purpose to be limited to $20,000. I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 58, after line 13, it is proposed to insert the following:

For the transmission of mail by pneumatic tubes or other similar devices in the cities of Philadelphia, Pa., and Boston, Mass., at an annual rate of expenditure not in excess of $18,500 per mile of double lines of tubes, including power, labor, and all other operating expenses, $245,000, of which not more than $20,000 shall be available for expenditure in the city of Boston: Provided, That the provisions not inconsistent herewith of the acts of April 21, 1902, and May 27, 1908, relating to the transmission of mail by pneumatic tubes or other similar devices shall be applicable hereto.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am compelled to make a point of order against the amendment. It is clearly new legislation and is subject to the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not wish to discuss the point of order. I merely wish to say that I think the amendment ought to be incorporated in the bill, and also an amendment which was left with me by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], making similar provision for St. Louis. I ask that the amendment which I send to the desk may be read. It can be disposed of at the same time as the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 58, line 13, after the numerals "$526,373.25," it is proposed to insert:

And for the city of St. Louis, Mo., $80,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. I make the same point of order against that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary be authorized to correct all totals in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will be authorized to correct the totals in the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

HOUR OF MEETING ON SUNDAY.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, when the Senate agreed to set aside Sunday next, March 9, on which to hold memorial services for the late Senators NELSON and NICHOLSON the hour was fixed for 12 o'clock. I ask unanimous consent that the hour may be changed so that the Senate may meet at 11 o'clock on Sunday morning next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADJOURNMENT TO SUNDAY.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn until 11 o'clock a. m. on Sunday, when memorial exercises will be held on the late Senators NELSON and NICHOLSON.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Sunday, March 9, 1924, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 7, 1924.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, Thou who art our refuge and strength and always near, continue the blessings of Thy wisdom and mercy unto us, unto our homes, and unto our country. In all that we are and do, O may we prove ourselves worthy of Thy bountiful gifts. Prepare us with fortitude, self-possession, and great faith for whatever may come to us. In sunshine and in shadow; in victory and in defeat; in the defense of the right; and in condemnation of the wrong, help us to be true Christian men who are seeking to do Thy will and to do of Thy good pleasure. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of privilege of the whole House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am sending to the Speaker's table a copy of this morning's Post, and of yesterday afternoon's Star, Times, and News, in all four of which papers is the allegation that a man named B. F. Dorsey is an employee of the House Office Building, or, in other words, an employee of the House of Representatives. That when arrested he had in his possession a jug of whisky which he claimed he procured for and was then taking to a Congressman in the House Office Building. I present them, Mr. Speaker, as a privilege of the whole House, and I desire to be heard.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order. A Member rising to a question of privilege of the House must present a resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. I present a resolution, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I think this is a very important matter, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the doors were closed, the Sergeant at Arms was directed to bring in absent Members, and the Clerk called the roll.

The following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson	Fairchild	McFadden	Snyder
Anthony	Fairfield	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Sproul, Ill.
Beedy	French	Michaelson	Sullivan
Berger	Fuller	Mills	Sweet
Black, Tex.	Fulmer	Nelson, Me.	Tague
Black, N. Y.	Gallivan	Nolan	Taylor, Colo.
Brand, Ohio	Gifford	O'Brien	Thomas, Ky.
Britten	Graham, Pa.	O'Connor, La.	Tincher
Buchanan	Greene, Mass.	Quayle	Vare
Canfield	Hull, Morton D.	Rainey	Ward, N. Y.
Connolly, Pa.	Johnson, S. Dak.	Reed, N. Y.	Wefald
Corning	Jost	Reed, W. Va.	Wertz

Dallinger	Kelly	Scott	Winslow
Darrow	Kendall	Sears, Fla.	Wood
Davey	Kent	Shreve	Woodruff
Dempsey	Kvale	Sites
Edmonds	Lehlbach	Snell

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and sixty-one Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the Star, Times, and News, published in Washington, D. C., yesterday afternoon, and the Post, published this morning, all state that when arrested near the House Office Building one B. F. Dorsey had in his possession a half-gallon jug of whisky which he claimed he had procured for and was taking to a Congressman in said House Office Building, where he claimed to be employed: Therefore be it Resolved, That the said B. F. Dorsey be directed to transmit to the House of Representatives the name of the Congressman whom he alleges he procured said whisky for, and instructions, if any, that were given him by such Congressman.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to amend the resolution. After the word "Resolved" strike out the balance of the resolution and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That a committee of five Members of the House be appointed by the Speaker——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I object to the modification of the resolution. The gentleman asked unanimous consent and I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move——

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman has a right to withdraw his resolution and offer a modification of it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, after the word "Resolved" strike out the balance of the resolution and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the Speaker appoint a special committee of five Members of the House to investigate——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I object to the form in which the amendment is made.

Mr. BLANTON (continuing)— to investigate as to the truth or falsity of these charges, and report back to the House at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] objected, but the Chair thinks the gentleman is entitled to modify his resolution in any way he pleases.

The gentleman from New York will state his point of order.

Mr. SNELL. In the first place, that it is not a privileged resolution. In paragraph 655 of the Manual the Chair will find this language:

But vague charges in newspaper articles, criticisms, or even misrepresentations of the Members' speeches or acts have not been entertained——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman makes his point of order I would like to state the basis of the privilege claimed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to make his point of order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Without the consent of the House, has the gentleman the right to modify his amendment?

The SPEAKER. In committee he has not, but in the House the gentleman has the right to modify his resolution.

Mr. SNELL. Has the gentleman's resolution been reduced to writing?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the modified resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker appoint a special committee of five Members of the House to investigate as to the truth or falsity of these charges and report back to the House at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the Chair's attention to paragraph 655 of the Manual. Here we find that vague charges in newspaper articles, criticisms, or even misrepresentations of the Members' speeches or acts have not been entertained as privileged matter.

There are several decisions in Hinds' Precedents that are absolutely in line with, and exactly on a parallel with, the question now before us. I will not take the time to read them to the House, but they are in Volume III, Nos. 2711–2714. In each one of these rulings vague newspaper charges were held by the Speaker not to possess privilege status, and in each case the point of order was sustained against them. Now, what do we have here, as presented by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]?

This does not have even the responsibility of the newspapers back of it; it is simply the careless and irresponsible statement of a bootlegger. It is the statement of a confessed crook and criminal, who is simply trying to free himself by turning attention to some one else. He is doing it for self-protection. Who would believe him even if he did give his name to the House? [Applause.]

It is perfectly evident he was doing this to shield his own wrongdoings, and if he did give a name to the House it would be a fictitious one.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I maintain it is beneath the dignity of this House to give any attention or consideration to such a vague and irresponsible rumor as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has presented, and has been printed in certain newspapers.

Furthermore, I am definitely informed by the Clerk of the House, the Sergeant at Arms, the Doorkeeper, and the Architect of the Capitol that no such man in recent years has been an employee around the Capitol Building.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am very sure this is not a privileged resolution and a point of order should lie against it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to be heard. I do not believe there is a Member in this House, whether there are any who are addicted to drink or not, who would buy liquor from a bootlegger; I do not believe it. [Laughter.] But there is a newspaper charge here in four Washington newspapers that an employee of the House of Representatives, in the House Office Building, was caught over here next to the House Office Building night before last with a half gallon jug of whisky under his arm, which he alleged he was taking to a Congressman.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield right there for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. The papers allege that he was taking it to a Congressman in the House Office Building; that he had procured it for a Congressman in the House Office Building, and that they had better turn him loose or the Congressman would come down there and cause them trouble.

Mr. SNELL. Did the man make the statement he was an employee of the House?

Mr. BLANTON. The papers allege that he said he is an employee of the House.

Mr. SNELL. I am officially informed that he is not an employee of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. I am asking for a House committee to investigate and report to this House as to whether this charge is true. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this is a reflection upon every Member of the House of Representatives. [Laughter.] Well, newspapers in your district and mine will report that we are shielding somebody that we ought not to shield. They will report, Mr. Speaker, that there was somebody there who ordered a half gallon jug of whisky, and when an employee of our body is caught, he flaunts the law and says, "Turn me loose, because the man I am buying this for will make you do it." I say, Mr. Speaker, that does reflect upon the integrity of the House and that does raise a question of privilege, and I submit, Mr. Speaker, the resolution is in order.

The SPEAKER. The paper, which the gentleman has placed before me, states that the man was arrested, and that he protested his arrest on the ground that the liquid burden was intended for a Representative of the House. Of course, the Chair always wishes, as the membership undoubtedly wishes, to protect the privileges of the House, but the Chair is disposed to think that the citations made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], stating that vague rumors or accusations against the House do not constitute privilege, are applicable here. This is simply a statement by an individual whom the gentleman from New York says is not an employee of the House endeavoring to excuse himself from a breach of the law by implicating a Member of the House. Obviously, the language used was to exonerate himself. The Chair does not think this is such a charge against the dignity of the House as to make it privileged. The Chair sustains the point of order. [Applause.]

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky rises to a question of personal privilege, which the gentleman will state.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, for some days it has come to my knowledge, in one way and another, that my name was being connected with the report recently made by the Chicago grand jury. My own inclination was to immediately rise and tell my fellow Members that it was not true so far as I was concerned. [Applause.] One reason I did not do so was that no specific charge had been made against me. I had assumed that in response to the resolution of the House of yesterday that by this time we would know who of this House is accused of violating the law and his official trust, but that information has not yet been received. However, a reputable morning paper contains my name and, in substance, the statement that I was one of those who would be accused.

My fellow Members, I am acting against the advice of some of my best friends in speaking now in advance of such report, but I can not longer remain silent under these statements. [Applause.]

I have served this Government in an official capacity for more than 30 years, nearly 18 of which have been as a Member of this great body. My life has been an open book. I have gone in and out among my people and among the membership of this House during these years, and this is the first time that any aspersions have ever been cast upon my personal or official integrity. Coming as I do from a Kentucky mountain district, where the people value honor higher even than human life, it is but natural that I should feel shocked at such an accusation, and while no report has yet been received, if the newspaper stories are correct and such a report does come to this House and that report should contain my name, I ask of my colleagues that a forum be immediately created wherein I can at least exercise the right established at Runnymede to stand face to face with my accusers [applause], and where the truth can be speedily disclosed.

Without any specific information I can, of course, enter into no specific denial, but I have this to say here and now. In the presence of Almighty God and these witnesses I have committed no crime. [Applause.] I have done no wrong, and I confidently rely upon a speedy vindication at the hands of my colleagues of this House.

Not only am I anxious if such a report comes in, but I insist upon an immediate investigation of any charge that may be made. Conscious as I am of the uprightness of my personal and official conduct I shall ask, yea, I shall demand, as a Member of this House the appointment by the Speaker of a committee which shall be given full power to summon and swear witnesses, to send for persons and papers, and take such action as will bring the truth to light. God helping me, I want the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. I want at least in the meanwhile to have in the minds of my friends and in the minds of my constituents and in the minds of my countrymen at least as much right as the criminal and the crook have of being presumed innocent until proven guilty. I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. KNUTSON. Reserving the right to object, what is the gentleman going to speak about?

Mr. UPSHAW. Concerning the matter before the House, in support of the brave speech of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. KNUTSON. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I simply want to say that all of our hearts have been stirred by the brave and manly words of our colleague from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY], and I feel that I would be recreant to every impulse of loyalty to the honor of this House and loyalty to a long friendship if I did not indict from my own standpoint as a citizen and as a Member of Congress the reckless way in which the Department of Justice has given publicity concerning Members of this House. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] said a striking thing yesterday when he brought out the fact that in an interview concerning this matter a representative of the Department of Justice had confessed that this testimony and these insinuations were made by men who were generally believed to be criminals and crooks. [Applause.]

Listen. It would have been the ethical act of a careful representative of the Department of Justice to have kept from the public any aspersion whatever concerning a Member of this House until they were ready to substantiate that charge. [Applause.] I feel constrained to say that as a Member of this Congress, as a loyal friend of the gentleman from Kentucky, but more than all as a friend of the honor of every Member of this House—yea, and I may say that as a known friend and defender of the cause of personal and national sobriety—I want to protest that never again shall any department of this Government broadcast any kind of aspersions against the honor of this House until they are ready to deliver the goods. [Applause.] The first word should not be spoken until the last word is ready. I indict the reckless and half-baked way in which the honor of our colleagues has been attacked, and I rejoice to give my hand to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN], whose names have been mentioned, and say to them in this presence that I have full faith in their honor as patriots and gentlemen. [Applause.]

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 2236. An act to designate the time and place of holding terms of the United States district court in the first division of the district at Kansas City; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill:

H. R. 4121. An act to extend the provisions of certain laws to the Territory of Hawaii.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8444. An act for the relief of certain nations or tribes of Indians in Montana, Idaho, and Washington.

MUSCLE SHOALS.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 518, relating to Muscle Shoals.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MAPES in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

The bill (H. R. 518) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to sell to Henry Ford nitrate plant No. 1, at Sheffield, Ala.; nitrate plant No. 2, at Muscle Shoals, Ala.; Waco Quarry, near Russellville, Ala.; and to lease to the corporation to be incorporated by him Dam No. 2 and Dam No. 3 (as designated in H. Doc. 1262, 64th Cong., 1st sess.), including power stations when constructed as provided herein, and for other purposes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan rose.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from Michigan desires to introduce an amendment to be pending before the House for consideration, and I will yield to him.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, during discussion in the House yesterday the bill was criticized because it contains no provision relating to the control of the service to be rendered by the company, or regulation of the rates or charges to be made for power or electric current. In answer to that criticism friends of the bill said that the State in which the service is performed will have control. That is mere expression of opinion. It is an important matter which ought to be made clear and free from all doubt now and in years to come. The amendment I offer would make it clear that a State in which service is rendered will have jurisdiction and control over service and rates of charges. My amendment will meet the suggestions of those who have said that the State ought to have such authority.

In preparing the amendment I have made use of some of the language of sections 19 and 20 of the Federal water power act as far as I believe they are applicable to the present situation. It will give the Federal Power Commisson authority to function in the matter of service, rates, and charges only in case the State is unable to act. I am not entirely clear as to the place in the bill to which the amendment should be offered, but I have prepared it to be offered at page 16, at the end of line 2, as a new section. I ask that the amendment may be now read. It is not offered in a spirit of criticism of or opposition to the bill. If adopted it will make the bill what its warmest advocates say it means now. It should be promptly accepted by them.

Mr. SNELL. Then the gentleman admits that the bill can be amended and Mr. Ford will accept it?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I believe that the amendment is proper and necessary. I believe it is not such an amendment as Mr. Ford will object to or that he would be justified in objecting to it. At least, I wish it to be before the House for consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the amendment that he proposes to offer to page 16 of the bill may be read by the Clerk for information.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, there was some reason for having amendments read in advance of the point at which they would be offered yesterday because we would have a chance to see them in the RECORD this morning. I do not see the advantage of having an amendment read now unless it should develop that we will not reach it this afternoon.

I shall not object to this request, but I hope it will not become a practice of gentlemen to give notice now of amendments they propose to offer later in the same day.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. STENGLE. Mr. Chairman, I object unless the gentleman can show why it should be read at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York objects.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STENGLE. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan. I understand his purpose now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York withdraws his objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan that his proposed amendment be now read for the information of the committee. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan: Page 16, at the end of line 2, add a new section:

"Whenever the company shall render or supply any public service by way of developing, distributing, or supplying electric current or power for any use or purpose for sale to customers or consumers thereof it shall abide by such reasonable regulation of such service and of rates and charges of payment therefor as may from time to time be prescribed by any duly constituted agency of the State in which the service is rendered or the rate charged, and in case such development, transmission, or distribution, or other service within a State which has not authorized or empowered a commission or other agency or agencies within said State to regulate and control the service to be rendered or the rates and charges of payment therefor, jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Federal Power Commission, to be exercised under the provisions of the Federal water power act approved June 10, 1920, or as the same may hereafter be amended as to the regulation and control of service and as to rates and charges to be made therefor, upon the complaint of any person, as defined in said act, or upon the initiative of said commission, to exercise such regulation and control until such time as the State shall have provided a commission or other authority for such regulation and control. When any service herein mentioned or any part thereof shall enter into interstate or foreign commerce the service rendered and the rates and charges therefor shall be reasonable, nondiscriminatory, and just to the customers and consumers, and all unreasonable, discriminatory, and unjust rates and charges are hereby prohibited and declared to be unlawful; and whenever any of the States directly concerned has not provided a commission or other authority to enforce the requirements of this section within such State, or such States are unable to agree through their properly constituted authorities on the service to be rendered or on the rates or charges of payment therefor jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said Federal Power Commission, upon complaint of any person aggrieved, on the request of any State concerned, or upon its own initiative, to enforce the provisions of this section to regulate and control so much of such service rendered and of the rates and charges or payment therefor as constitute interstate or foreign commerce. The administration of the provisions of this section, as far as applicable, shall be according to the procedure and practice in fixing and regulating the rates, charges, and practices of railroad companies, as provided in the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and the parties subject to such regulation and control shall have the same rights of hearing, defense, and review as said companies in such cases."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I shall ask the indulgence of the committee for only a few moments. Before I state the object of my request for recognition, let me say by way of preface that I am quite sure that every Member of the House knows that I have been a very ardent supporter of the offer of Henry Ford since it was first made, and that I am to-day very heartily in favor of the acceptance of Mr. Ford's offer. I may say that I do not believe that any material or fundamental amendment should be proposed to the bill or adopted because the bill is founded upon a contract, and should either be accepted or rejected as it comes before us; and so far as I am concerned, I do not think that I shall support any amendment unless, perhaps, the amendment which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] announced yesterday that he proposed to offer, and which embodies the actual language of the proposal. Amendments to the bill, as a rule—and I say this without impugning the motives of any of those who may offer them—can not be considered in any other way except as having the effect of defeating the object of the legislation. The power companies and others opposing Henry Ford have been trying for two years, and have succeeded up to this time, to delay consideration of the proposition for the sole purpose, of course, of finally defeating it; and as I view it—and, I repeat, without impuguing the motives of any of those who may offer amendments—acceptance of amendments to this legislation now, which is based upon a contract, will amount to nothing less than its defeat.

It was stated yesterday that one of the power companies which is in this combine making an offer—the Tennessee Electric Power Co.—had been attacked in the courts of Tennessee for violation of the State antitrust laws. I have a telegram here from Judge J. M. Anderson and Mr. W. E. Norvell, jr., two of the most prominent and ablest attorneys in Nashville and citizens of the highest standing in the State, which they have asked me to present and read to the House. These gentlemen are the attorneys representing the Tennessee Power Co. in the suit referred to. The telegram is as follows:

NASHVILLE, TENN., March 6, 1924.

Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
Washington, D. C.:

We have been informed that it has been charged on the floor of the House that the Tennessee Electric Power Co. was organized and is being operated in violation of the antitrust laws of the State and has no legal status in Tennessee. A bill was filed by the attorney general some time ago seeking to oust this company from the State upon the grounds that it was organized and operated in violation of both the antitrust statute of the State and of the common law. About three weeks ago Chancellor Newman, after a full hearing on the pleading and proof, held that neither its organization nor its operation was unlawful, and the bill filed to oust the company from the State was by the chancellor dismissed. So far no appeal has been fixed. If our information as to the charge having been made is correct, will you please see that the same publicity that was given the charge be given the chancellor's decision.

J. M. ANDERSON.
W. E. NORVELL, Jr.

I felt that in all fairness it was proper to present the facts stated in this telegram to the House.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. In view of what the gentleman said about the effect of offering amendments, will the gentleman say that Members of the House who believe that the substantial features of the water power act should be applied in this case, who believe that to be a condition precedent, a sine qua non of their support of this bill, should not have the privilege to freely offer amendments to that effect, in the hope that Mr. Ford himself may accept such provision?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, no; I do not contend that they should not, and as I said, I impugn the motives of no Member who offers an amendment, and I do not question the sincerity of those gentlemen who may offer an amendment, but as I view this proposition, based as it is upon a contract, material and fundamental amendments can have no other result than that of defeating the legislation, and, in my judgment, Members of this House should be courageous enough in voting on this proposition to vote it up or vote it down, and not afford an opportunity to its opponents to indirectly defeat it by amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota: Page 1, line 5, strike out the words "the following contracts" and insert in lieu thereof the words "a contract or contracts containing the following provisions:"

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I merely want to direct the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to the language of the last line on the first page. It says "that the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed, for and in behalf of the United States of America, to execute the following contracts."

Now, turn the page and what is before you? It is not a contract, but certain provisions that the Secretary of War is later to set forth in the contract or contracts. Now, it seems to me, in the interest of good bill drafting and statute writing that the language of the bill before us should be so far modified as to say just exactly what is meant, I hope that this rule against the amendment to this bill does not go to the extent of preventing the perfecting of its phraseology.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I will.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does the gentleman think this is drawn in such a way that there is danger they can not carry out the proposals of this bill?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. No; but the gentleman likes to have bills pass the House in such form so that they really say what the House intends to say and what the gentleman intends to say. We have certain provisions here that the Secretary is authorized to embody in a contract.

Mr. McKENZIE. I might say to the gentleman from Minnesota that, so far as the chairman is concerned, I take it that the amendment is offered as a friendly amendment and not an unfriendly one——

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. It is.

Mr. McKENZIE. And intended to make it more specific. We might have framed that in a little better language in this section of the bill, but if that is true, so far as I am personally concerned, I have no objection to the amendment. If anyone else has an objection, all right; but if not——

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I am much impressed by what the gentleman says, and I want to ask a question. On page 1 the last word is "contracts." In reading this bill, how many contracts does the gentleman contemplate are to be made by the Secretary of War embodying this offer? I would like to ask the chairman of the committee that question.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. It is my idea there is to be but one contract, and that is between the Government and Henry Ford. It occurs to me possibly it might be advisable and necessary to have more than one contract, and that is the reason in the amendment I use the term "contract" or "contracts."

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Well, the bill itself says "contracts."

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I have not taken any time on this measure and very little on others, but there are a few things about this suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee that I want to talk about a little and in connection with the amendment proposed yesterday by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG]. Now, the gentleman from Tennessee is correct, that amending the substantial terms of an agreement proposed between Ford and the Government would be an amendment to a proposition which might make it such a different proposition as it might defeat the whole thing. But amendments which look to the guarding of the rights of the Government and the enforcement of the contract after the contract is made are absolutely necessary and do not destroy the agreement which is proposed by Mr. Ford, and such amendments as necessary should be made. Now, there is one that ought to be made. It is following the line of the gentleman from Ohio, but his amendment would put us in a worse condition than we are now.

This act provides that the contract may be enforced in any court and in the court of equity of the United States District Court. That provision is made, but there is no provision to provide for the forfeiture or reversion of the property in case of a failure to comply. Now, you ought to have both remedies. You ought to have the right in case of a failure to the Government either to elect to recapture and take possession of the property or go into court and force specific performance. You want them both, and the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio proposed yesterday was looking to that——

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. STEVENSON. I have not the time now. I will yield when I finish my statement. But his amendment is dangerous in this respect—but before I come to that I want to state the reason I say we ought to have a forfeiture clause in it. My State has been through this same experience we are preparing for the United States. In 1888 we were constructing a canal which had not been completed and the State was unable to complete. The State conveyed it to a corporation which contracted to complete the canal and furnish the water power with which to operate certain institutions. They completed it to a point where it was available for the generation of water power and stopped and for 25 years it stayed there and has done nothing except generate some water power, the State demanding all the time that it go on and complete it so as to furnish navigation? What is the result? The State went into court to recover possession of the canal and the property on the ground of failure to complete the canal and asked for a reversion of the property to the State on the ground that it had the right to recover because the contract had not been completed. The Supreme Court of the United States less than a year ago decided against the State because it had no recapture clause in it and that it had no right except to enforce specific performance, and consequently the State got kicked out of court and had to start an action for specific performance.

Now, I say that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] yesterday is looking to guard against that very difficulty. Something of that kind ought to go in, but not just what he offered.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. In a moment. I ask to be allowed to finish my statement, and then I will yield to gentlemen. The proposition which the gentleman from Ohio offered on yesterday is dangerous from this standpoint. You have to provide for these forfeitures and for the right to demand specific performance. If you do not look out and guard the right of election, you will have a court saying, "Well, you provided for the forfeiture, and therefore you can not have specific performance."

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman is talking about something that is not in the amendment at all.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am talking about the amendment that is printed in the RECORD. The amendment there does not give election to the Government to pursue either course, and when you get into court you will be met with the proposition that you provided for the forfeiture and therefore you have not the right to demand performance. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will redraft his amendment so as to guard the proposition that the Government will have election to do either. That amendment ought to be adopted. Is that what the gentleman wants?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. I have not talked much at this session.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEVENSON. I asked for that in order to yield to the gentleman who asked me to yield. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. I agree with the gentleman that we ought, of course, to have the right of the Government to recapture made clear. Could we not avoid the dangers he pointed out by having that recapture proposition put in to this effect: That a failure to carry out the terms shall be considered ground for forfeiture, and in that case the Government could recapture? That is a general recapture law and not a piecemeal bit of legislation.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes. There ought to be a provision written in here to the effect that the failure to carry out the substantial terms of this contract shall be ground for the forfeiture of the right, and the Government, on the proclamation of the President, has the right to enter and recapture, and in case that is not done, the Government shall have the right to elect whether to enter and recapture or require the specific performance of the contract.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman is talking exactly along the line of my amendment.

Mr. STEVENSON. If the gentleman is talking about some other matter, very well.

Mr. BEGG. I am talking about what you are talking about, but you do not know what you are talking about. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEVENSON. I am very much humiliated if that is true.

Mr. BEGG. I will convince the gentleman. What does Mr. Ford undertake to do other than to manufacture fertilizer?

Mr. STEVENSON. He undertakes to pay rent, 4 per cent, a considerable amount.

Mr. BEGG. That is something we agree to do, for him to pay 4 per cent on the cost.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman admits that I am right, although he says I do not know what I am talking about.

This is the proposition: The gentleman's amendment offered yesterday did two things: It provided that Henry Ford could default for three years and lie down and get out of the whole thing. It provided that he could default four years out of six, and not make a pound of fertilizer, and still hold his position and hold his property. That is not right. It ought to be that he has got to make it continuously and every year. And the act ought to say that he can either be kicked out or specific performance brought against him. That ought to be written in here.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. I understand the gentleman from South Carolina believes that there ought to be an amendment by which Mr. Ford will be compelled to make fertilizer or else the property reverts to the Government?

Mr. STEVENSON. I believe he should be compelled to make fertilizer and live up to the other terms of the contract or the Government shall have the right to elect either to take the property back without suit or process or go into court and compel performance.

Mr. KEARNS. The gentleman believes that this is not yet written into the contract?

Mr. STEVENSON. It is not in the bill as it is now, but this does not affect the terms of the agreement which have been offered. The substantial terms of the agreement are not affected by that. That is really provision for the proper enforcement of the right growing out of the contract, and therefore it would not destroy the contract, as has been suggested.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I wish to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it an amendment to the pending amendment?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes, sir. I offer an amendment as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON]. My amendment is in these words——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman send it to the Clerk's desk?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I beg leave to read it, and then I will send it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute amendment to the Newton amendment offered by Mr. MONTAGUE: Page 1, line 4, after the word "execute," insert "a." In line 5, strike out the words "the following contracts" and insert "contract or contracts" and before the colon insert "within and pursuant of the authorization, powers, and limitations contained in this act," so that as amended the paragraph will read: "That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed for and in behalf of the United States of America to execute a contract or contracts within and in pursuance of the authorization, powers, and limitations contained in this act."

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I have no objection to that substitute, and I ask for a vote.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I have no desire to debate it.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I will gladly accept it as a substitute for the amendment which I have offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON].

The question was taken, and the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] as amended by the substitute offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE].

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LOZIER] is recognized.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is very evident to anyone who has observed the proceedings of this House yesterday and to-day that this bill is in danger of being mutilated beyond recognition by the adoption of amendments. Let us see what the situation is. The bill, as reported by the committee, requires the Ford Co. to manufacture "continuously" throughout the lease period, "annually," at least 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen for the use of the American farmers. The only exception is in case of war, strikes, accidents, fires, or other causes beyond control. The Ford Co. must furnish this quantity of fertilizer each and every year.

Take the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG], which swept the House off its feet yesterday afternoon to such an extent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN], sponsoring this bill, controlling the time and supposed to speak for and reflect the purposes of those who favor the measure, without examining the Begg amendment, and without analyzing its provisions or weighing its effects, impulsively and injudiciously, on the floor of the House, expressed their approval of this "half-baked" amendment that will absolutely emasculate and destroy the very purpose and object which this legislation is intended to promote.

What is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG]? It provides, in substance, that if the Ford Co. fails for "three consecutive years to manufacture annually not less than 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen for exclusive use as fertilizer, then and in that event" the contract and lease between the Government and the Ford Co. shall be forfeited. In other words, instead of benefiting the farmer and instead of effectuating the purpose of this act, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio does exactly the contrary and is a legislative limitation and a legislative construction of the contract and a legislative declaration to Henry Ford and to his company and to the world that all that the Ford Co. is required to do is to produce 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen one year out of three, two years out of six, and so on.

Under the bill as it was reported by the committee Mr. Ford is under legal obligation to produce "each year" 40,000 tons of fertilizer for the farmers. Please observe that the words "continuously" and "annual production" are used in the bill, and by this language the Ford Co. agrees to produce that amount of fertilizer "continuously" and "annually" throughout the lease period, not one year out of three, not two years out of three, and not two years out of six, but "continuously" and "annually," which means uninterruptedly and without intermission or cessation. The Ford Co. is required by the terms of the bill as reported by the committee to produce at least 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen annually.

But the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] comes along and in substance proposes to relieve the Ford Co. of that burden and that obligation, and in effect proposes to write into this bill and contract a legislative declaration that the company will only be compelled to produce this quantity of fertilizer one year out of three.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOZIER. I will.

Mr. BEGG. In the first place, the gentleman is entirely in error about what the amendment offered by the "gentleman from Ohio" does. It does not strike out anything; it only adds to; and the gentleman is in error, further, when he says that the bill as drawn is positive——

Mr. LOZIER. Does the gentleman wish to ask me a question?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. LOZIER. I will answer the gentleman's question, if he has one to propound.

Mr. BEGG. I have one.

Mr. LOZIER. Then propound it.

Mr. BEGG. Suppose Mr. Ford should tear down the building and then take 25 years to build it? What are you going to do?

Mr. LOZIER. The gentleman "speaks an infinite deal of nothing."

Mr. BEGG. No; that is nothing, because that is common practice.

Mr. LOZIER. "His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff." Now, I am going to use the remainder of my time and not yield further unless my time is extended.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOZIER. I will not.

Mr. BURTNESS. I thought the gentleman said a minute ago he would yield to me.

Mr. LOZIER. The gentleman is mistaken. I will not yield now.

Now, take section 14. It provides as follows:

Since the manufacture, sale, and distribution of commercial fertilizers to farmers and other users thereof constitute one of the principal considerations of this offer, the company expressly agrees that, continuously throughout the lease period, except as it may be prevented by reconstruction of the plant itself or by war, strikes, accidents, fires, or other causes beyond its control, it will manufacture nitrogen and other commercial fertilizers, mixed or unmixed, and with or without filler, according to demand, at nitrate plant No. 2 or its equivalent, or at such other plant or plants adjacent or near thereto as it may construct, using the most economic source of power available. The annual production of these fertilizers shall have a nitrogen content of at least 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen, which is the present annual capacity of nitrate plan No. 2. If during the lease period said nitrate plant No. 2 is destroyed or damaged from any cause, the company agrees to restore such plant within a reasonable time to its former capacity, etc.

Now we turn to section 18. While without regard to any remedies reserved or created by this bill, the law of the land and the principles of equity jurisprudence unquestionably give the Government of the United States the right to enforce the provisions of this contract and to decree a rescission or forfeiture on the failure of the Ford Co. to comply with the terms and conditions of this contract, and to recover the property because of such default. In addition to the remedies available to the Government, as to every other litigant or party to a contract, section 18 of the pending bill provides:

In addition to any other remedies that may be possessed by the United States, and as a further method of procedure in the event of the violation of any of the terms of this proposal or any contracts made in furtherance of its terms, the company agrees that the Attorney General may, upon the request of the Secretary of War, institute proceedings in equity in the district court of the United States for the northern district of Alabama for the purpose of canceling and terminating the lease of Dam No. 2 or Dam No. 3, or both of them, because of such violation or for the purpose of remedying or correcting by injunction, mandamus, or other process, any act of commission or omission in violation of the terms of this proposal or any contract made in furtherance thereof.

While this language is very specific and comprehensive it does not in reality give the United States Government any additional remedy or new method of procedure by which to enforce compliance with the terms and conditions of this contract. It is merely declaratory of the rights which the Government as a contracting party would have should there be a failure on the part of the Ford Co. to carry out the terms and conditions of this contract; however, by section 18 the Ford Co. concedes to the Government the right and recognizes the power of the Government to institute proceedings in equity for the cancellation and forfeiture of the contract and for the recovery of the leased property should the Ford Co. default and fail to carry out, in good faith, its agreement with the United States. In other words, in the absence of section 18, the Government would have, under the law, the same rights as any litigant who sought the abrogation or rescission of a contract because of the default or abandonment of the contract by the other contracting party.

There is no question as to the right of the Government to have this contract rescinded and to recover the Muscle Shoals property and to recoup its losses in the event the Ford Co. violates the terms and provisions of this bill or fails to carry out the contract and lease made thereunder.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOZIER. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does the gentleman believe that an action for the specific performance would lie in the event that Mr. Ford failed to produce fertilizer for a year?

Mr. LOZIER. Undoubtedly under the bill as reported by the committee, but not if the Begg amendment is adopted. Courts of equity and courts of law, since we have had a judicial system in America, have given to litigants complete and effective relief in cases of this character. Courts of equity have exceedingly long arms and can reach out and enforce a literal compliance with the terms and conditions of this act. A court of equity can vitiate and forfeit this contract and restore the property to the Government, in the event of the failure of Mr. Ford and his company to observe and perform in good faith the letter and spirit of this contract. And courts of law can, in effect, accomplish the same result, by assessing damages for breach of contract, subjecting the property to a lien for the payment of such damages, and may decree recovery of chattels or lands, although nothing is said in the pleadings or judgment with reference to a rescission or forfeiture of the contract. Such recovery of possession in an action at law is based on the fact that possession of such property can not be restored to the Government unless there has been a rescission of the contract. This recovery of property in an action at law may be granted where there is a failure of consideration or for substantial violations of contractual obligations, or where there has been an abandonment of the contract by one of the parties thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman answer questions?

Mr. LOZIER. I most certainly will if I am given additional time.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I will not object to this request, I want to say I hope when the gentleman is through we shall proceed with the bill. The debate which is now going on is all out of order and will be in place when we reach that section of the bill. So, when the gentleman is through, I will object to the extension of time for others and demand the regular order.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I wish to make a statement in connection with the gentleman's request. We have a large number of appropriation bills pending, one a deficiency bill carrying $157,000,000, or something like that. Nearly every dollar in the bill is urgently needed by people whose claims have been filed and approved, and every day we postpone the consideration of that bill it is costing the country a lot of money for interest, so I hope this bill will be disposed of to-day in order that we may proceed with the appropriation bills. [Applause.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, I want to say that this bill is on the floor of the House by reason of a special rule; and if the deficiency bill was so important, and if delay in considering that bill is costing the Government money, it should have been here instead of this bill. But this bill being before the House, it must be discussed in full.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve the right to object in order to make one statement. Several men who are competent lawyers have worked with me on the amendment which seems to have created such a turmoil, and I believe that all of this trouble could be obviated and eliminated if there would be any way by which I could get an opportunity to get the amendment before the committee.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Chair to what part of this bill these remarks are directed? I have been hunting through it, but can not find it. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LOZIER] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURTNESS. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOZIER. Yes; I will yield for a question.

Mr. BURTNESS. I am asking this for information: Assuming there was a breach of the contract after it is entered into, under the bill as originally drawn, a breach in the failure to manufacture fertilizer, then just what would be the remedy which the Government would seek and what would be the measure of damages, if any, that either a court of law or a court of equity would give to the Government?

Mr. LOZIER. I will be very glad to answer the gentleman. The Government has two or more remedies. One is an action at law for breach of the contract and for damages and to recover the leased property because of an abandonment of the contract or because of failure of consideration. The other is an action in equity, having for its object and purpose an abrogation, rescission, or forfeiture of the contract because of the failure of the Ford Co. to comply with its terms. Or the Government would have a right to ask the court for a mandatory order compelling compliance with the terms of this contract, or to enforce specific performance of contract, in default of which the contract and all rights thereunder would be forfeited and the leased property restored to the Government.

Mr. BURTNESS. In either case would there be a reverter to the Government of the property conveyed to the company?

Mr. LOZIER. Undoubtedly, just the same as under any other contract, the consideration for which has not passed or the conditions and terms of which have not been performed. The Government would have the same right to recapture its property just like a landlord could recover possession of his property on failure of the tenant to pay rent, and just like a vendor of land can recover the land if the vendee fails and refuses to pay the consideration or otherwise abandons the contract of sale.

Mr. KEARNS and Mr. BOYCE rose.

Mr. LOZIER. I promised to yield to the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. BOYCE. The gentleman has already called attention to section 14 and to section 18 of the bill, and stated the specific terms of those sections as applying to this proposed contract.

Mr. LOZIER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYCE. I would ask what effect, in the judgment of the gentleman, has section 23 in connection with the proposed contract and its enforcement in law and equity?

Mr. LOZIER. Section 23 is a recognition by the Ford Co. of the rights which the Government, as one of the contracting parties, would have if that section had not been inserted. Every obligation imposed by this bill on Henry Ford is binding on his heirs, representatives, and assigns, and on the company to be incorporated by him to take over this property, and in like manner binding upon the successors and assigns of said company.

Mr. BOYCE. Just another word; would not the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] tend to weaken the purpose and intendment of these sections?

Mr. LOZIER. Undoubtedly. The amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] limits, circumscribes, and emasculates the provisions of section 14, because we would by the adoption of the Begg amendment in effect and by a legislative act construe that section as not meaning continuously, nor annually, but one year in three, two years in six, three years in nine, and so forth.

The Congress of the United States by the adoption of that amendment would solemnly declare that continuously does not mean continuously; that it does not mean without cessation; that it does not mean without intermission; that it does not mean without interruption; that it does not mean every year. But this House by the adoption of that amendment would declare by a solemn legislative act that the Ford Co. may skip one or two years in three without furnishing the 40,000 tons of fertilizer annually, provided the required amount was furnished the third year. In other words, the amendment avoids a forfeiture just so long as the Ford Co. does not "fail for three consecutive years" to furnish the required 40,000 tons of fertilizer annually.

This amendment amounts to a solemn legislative declaration and legislative construction of the contract and will permit the Ford Co. to skip two years in three, four years in six, six years in nine, and so forth. And the plain meaning of the term "continuously" is destroyed as well as the real purpose of this act.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOZIER. If I have any time left, I will be glad to yield.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. I wish to ask if it is not necessary before a forfeiture can be declared by a court of equity that the contract contain conditions of forfeiture?

Mr. LOZIER. Yes, sir; and no. It must contain conditions the violation of which furnishes grounds on which a forfeiture can be decreed.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. And whether forfeitures are not confined and limited to courts of equity exclusively?

Mr. LOZIER. Not necessarily. That may be the rule in some but not all jurisdictions. As I have stated, in actions at law where there has been a failure of consideration, courts of law may ascertain damages for breach or abandonment of a contract, impress property with a lien, and decree its return for failure of consideration or the other causes mentioned; although nothing may be said in the pleadings and judgment about a rescission or forfeiture of the contract, courts of law nevertheless in effect do cancel contracts.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Never; the gentleman is wrong.

Mr. LOZIER. I do not accept your construction of the law, nor do the authorities sustain your position.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Suppose an action for damages were begun. Who would be the parties in interest?

Mr. LOZIER. The Government of the United States and Henry Ford and——

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Would it not be the farmers who had been denied this fertilizer? Would it not be the farmers, and no one else but the farmers?

Mr. LOZIER. This is a contract made between the Government of the United States and Henry Ford and his company for the use and benefit of the Government, and incidentally for the use and benefit of the agricultural classes, and it is enforceable like any other contract made by the Government of the United States. But the action to enforce its provisions or to decree its forfeiture must be brought in the name of the United States. It is fundamental that where two parties make a contract for the use and benefit of a third party, such third party can not sue for breach of the contract, because privity of contract is necessary to any action founded on a breach of contract. The action must be brought by one of the parties to the contract.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The company shall complete for the United States, subject to the approval of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, Dam No. 2, its locks, power house, and all necessary equipment, all in accordance with the plans and specifications prepared, or to be prepared, or approved by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, and progressively install the hydroelectric equipment in said power house adequate for generating approximately 600,000 horsepower, all the work aforesaid to be performed as speedily as possible at actual cost and without profit to the company. It is understood that the necessary lands and flowage rights, including lands for railway and terminal connections, have been or will be acquired by the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered my Mr. BLANTON: Page 2, line 10, after the word "States" insert the following: At a cost to the United States not to exceed $28,000,000 additional to the amount already expended when the contract becomes finally executed, and costs of completion, additional to such $28,000,000, if any, are to be paid by said company.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, there was so much disorder, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported and that it not be taken out of the gentleman's time.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, there is not a man in this House who is more anxious than I am to see Henry Ford develop and operate this plant. But Henry Ford has specially prepared this contract through skillful lawyers. His interests have been particularly represented and protected in this contract that we are now considering, and the 110,000,000 people of the United States are looking to Congress—to you and to me—as their attorneys and agents to see that their interests are properly represented, safeguarded, and protected when this contract is closed in their behalf. We are the people's only attorneys and agents, and if a bad contract is made on the part of the people of the United States it will be because of our action taken here in the House of Representatives in not properly framing this bill, for if passed without amendment it will surely become a contract.

I have asked members of the committee to tell me what it is going to cost the United States to complete this Dam No. 2. I have tried in every possible way to get definite information. I went to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who seems to be one of the best-posted men on the proposition, and he states it will cost $28,000,000. I am willing to take the estimate of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who is chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I am willing for the Government to spend $28,000,000 more to get the plant in operation, but I do not want to pass a measure which may result in causing the Government to spend $100,000,000 more. I am one of those who helped pass laws hurriedly during the war Congress when cantonments and other Government projects, upon demand of the War Department, were built on the outrageous 10 per cent cost-plus contracts, and thereafter I witnessed millions of dollars of the people's money wasted by contractors who ought to have been put in the penitentiary, and I made up my mind then that I would never vote, as long as I was in Congress, for another contract of that kind. [Applause.]

I want to say to my friends on both sides of the aisle, you place in this contract no limitation whatever upon Henry Ford as to the amount he is to expend for you on Dam No. 2. You give him the blue sky as the limit. You merely say he shall make no profit out of it, and that is all you provide. You merely say he and his company are to make no profit out of it, but you say he shall rebuild it for the people at our expense, but you place no limit whatever upon the kind of contracts he and his company are to make with the contractors who do the work in completing the dam or how much they shall be paid for themselves and their laborers who will do the work.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. I want to use my time and I do not want to ask for any more extra time.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I just wanted to give the gentleman the accurate figures.

Mr. BLANTON. If I had the time I would gladly yield. I want to see that even Henry Ford is limited in the expense, and if you do not limit him, as much as I want to see him operate this plant, I am going to vote against it. [Applause.] Why, over here on page 3, see what you are turning over to him and what you are obligating the Government to do for 100 years. Let me read it to you. This concerns Dam No. 2, and not the dam merely but the gates and locks as well—> it being understood that all necessary repairs, maintenance, and operation thereof shall be under the direction, care, and responsibility of the United States during the said 100-year-lease period.

You colleagues who are lawyers know just what that language means, that this Government, in addition to the half a hundred million dollars already wasted on this project, is to spend from $28,000,000 to $40,000,000 more in completing it, and then for 100 years binds itself to keep this dam, locks, and gates in repair, and to maintain and operate them at Government expense.

That is what you are doing. You are saying that this Government shall repair, shall maintain, and shall operate this Dam No. 2, its locks and gates, for 100 years at the expense of the Public Treasury. And that could cost $100,000,000 more.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. HUDSPETH. If the dam washes away is it the duty of the Government of the United States to replace it?

Mr. BLANTON. That is just what I was going to discuss. My colleague from Texas, who was a former distinguished senator of Texas, who served his State ably and faithfully, knows that the big dam on the Colorado River, at Austin, the capital of Texas, washed out twice and almost bankrupted the good people there.

Mr. HUDSPETH. And it cost $5,000,000 to replace it.

Mr. BLANTON. This dam might wash out once, twice, or thrice in the next 100 years, and could cost the Government of the United States $50,000,000 each time to replace it. I am not going to overlook this feature of the contract from the practical standpoint of the people of this country. I am going to watch it, and if you do not amend the bill so as to require the Ford company to repair, maintain, and operate same I am going to be compelled to vote against the bill, although I would regret exceedingly to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. BURTNESS. I want to see if the gentleman's construction of section 2 is the same as mine. Under section 2 Mr. Ford or his company simply lets out the contract and then comes in and says that was the cost.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; he could let out every different part of the structure at 10 per cent plus or even 20 per cent plus contracts, because neither he nor his company would be making a dollar profit, and would come within the terms of the bill, but the contractors actually doing the work for him could make millions, and the Government would have to pay it.

Mr. BURTNESS. He could let out 100 contracts.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; without limitation or restriction, for all he contracts to do is not to make a profit on such construction for himself or his company; he does not say in this bill that there shall be no profit to the laborers and contractors who actually perform the construction work for him.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Regarding the gentleman's amendment limiting the cost, does not the gentleman think that is a different proposition than the statement he made about other matters. As I understand it, the work is to be done by Ford under the supervision of the United States, and I am sure the gentleman will agree with me that Mr. Ford can do the work cheaper than the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. He could, but would he?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Why would he not? Because he is to pay 4 per cent on the money actually expended for 100 years.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to state to my friend from Tennessee, who is usually careful in expenditures, that these same Army engineers overlooked and superintended the same 10 per cent plus contracts that were made for the building of the cantonments during the war, where millions of dollars of the people's money was wasted. What do they know or care about economy? Why, from the day they first start in the Government school at West Point and are then put on the pay roll until they become generals in the Army money comes freely and easily to them and they learn to spend Government money freely.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Is there any guaranty in the bill that Mr. Ford will continue to live until the dam is completed?

Mr. BLANTON. Why, no; he may die the next day after it is started. There will be 100 years for this contract to run, and there will be many other men in our places during this hundred years called upon to appropriate the huge sums of money necessary under this contract to repair, maintain, and operate this dam, locks, and gates, who will stand on the floor and damn us because of the contract we made unless we safeguard the people's rights. I ask my friend from Mississippi, I ask my friends from Alabama, to pause here and scrutinize this contract closely from a lawyer's standpoint and see if the Government's rights are properly protected and safeguarded in this proposition. I ask both sides to do that before we vote finally on the bill. This is the only time and opportunity we will have to correct the evils in it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I shall not take the time to reply to the argument of the gentleman from Texas on his amendment. In my own judgment the bill protects the interests of the taxpayers of this country when it says that this shall not be a cost-plus contract but shall be built by the man who is going to use it and who is going to pay 4 per cent interest on the cost of it for the period of 100 years. He is to build it under the plans and specifications and under the supervision of the Board of Engineers of the United States Army. In my judgment no stronger protection can be given to the people of this country in the matter of expenditure than to say that the man who is expending the money shall pay 4 per cent on the amount of that expenditure for 100 years.

In my humble judgment the gentleman from Texas is undoubtedly sincere, but he made the statement to the House in which he said that "unless I can have this thing put into the bill to suit me I shall vote against the bill and fight against the bill."

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McKENZIE. Let me call to your attention that the only reason the provision is in the bill is to keep down the overhead expenses of fertilizer which is to be sold to the farmers; another thing, to let you gentlemen know how little information my friend from Texas had about the matter when he said that Ford's attorney helped to draw up the proposition. Mr. Ford had no attorneys here. This proposition was worked out in the office of the Judge Advocate General of the United States in company with the Secretary of War, Mr. John W. Weeks, both of whom have the interests of the United States at heart.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. As a safeguard against the gentleman's suggestion of the possibility in subletting the building of this, the higher the actual cost to the Government the more rent Mr. Ford has to pay, because he pays 4 per cent upon the cost.

Mr. McKENZIE. Absolutely.

Mr. BEGG. Therefore he is interested as much as we in getting it built cheaply.

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I am one of the Members of the House who doubts what is the right thing to do. I am willing to accept the gentleman's statement, which will be made, I am sure, in all sincerity. How much will this improvement cost? Did the gentleman have an estimate, and is there any real reason why we should not put a limitation upon it? I have come to a period in my official life when I believe in putting the strings on, if they are strong enough to hold.

Mr. McKENZIE. What stronger limitation could you put on than to require a man to pay 4 per cent interest upon it for a hundred years?

Mr. BUTLER. That will increase the cost of the fertilizer.

Mr. McKENZIE. No.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. I was wondering whether it is contemplated that this company which Mr. Ford is going to form is going to be a construction company, and that that company itself will build this dam.

Mr. McKENZIE. No.

Mr. BURTNESS. That not being the case, this company which Mr. Ford is going to form will of necessity have to let the proper kind of contracts to other concerns; and is there anything by which you can be assured that the profits of those other concerns will not be unduly large?

Mr. McKENZIE. Of course the gentleman and I will agree that the man who is going to pay for the job in the end and to pay interest on the investment will naturally be interested in the amount of the cost, which is the best safeguard, in my judgment, that we could put around it. I want to say that the committee has not, in my judgment, tried to bring in a bill for Mr. Ford, but to bring in a bill in the interest of the people of the country. If it be necessary that every man must amend the bill so as to suit himself or he will not vote upon it, you may as well quit now and proceed to vote. I ask for a vote on this amendment.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. But I ask recognition in favor of the amendment, as a member of the committee.

Mr. McSWAIN. The gentleman has no right to be heard. Under the rule only one can be heard in support of an amendment and one in opposition thereto.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to say that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is very alert to the rights of the American people, and I am for his amendment. I intend to vote for it because I have the same point of view on the limitation of cost to the United States on Dam No. 2. I am not interested in Mr. Ford or anybody who has or will make offers for Muscle Shoals, but I am interested in "fertilizer in time of peace and nitrates in time of war." If the amendment of the gentleman from Texas does not prevail, then I propose, in the interest of limitation of cost of the dams, to offer the following amendment suggested by the gentleman from Texas, on page 2, line 19, after the words "to be performed as speedily as possible at actual cost and without profit to the company," to insert the words "or any other person or corporation."

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Yes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Does not the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] bear out the fact that the purchasers of fertilizer will pay in the overhead cost of production the entire cost of this plant and 8 per cent profit besides?

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I say to the gentleman that it does. This contract which we are considering, and which is so sacred that we can not even suggest amendments to it according to the gentlemen who favor it, provides that the Ford company may make a maximum profit of 8 per cent on fertilizer.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. And not on their capitalization, but on the turnover?

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Absolutely; and there is nothing in this bill to prevent the Ford company from capitalizing those portions of the expenditure of the United States which they have not paid back and do not have to pay back.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. And according to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE], who is the sponsor of this bill, the 4 per cent sinking fund which the Ford company will contribute each year will be included in the price of fertilizer?

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Absolutely; and I hope the House will vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Texas. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 34, noes 60.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HILL of Maryland: Page 2, line 19, after the word "company" strike out the period and insert a comma and the language "or any other person or corporation."

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I shall not enter into any protracted discussion of this amendment. We are told by the proponents of this bill that Mr. Ford and his associates are actuated purely by the altruistic motives of furnishing fertilizer to the farmers of the United States. This section 2 of the McKenzie bill assumes that there will be no profit under the Ford offer to anybody in the completion of the dams. The language provides that there shall be no profit to the Ford company, but does not provide that there shall be no profit to some subcontractor. I ask that the amendment which I have offered be adopted in order that there shall be no profit to anybody, and that the United States shall pay only the actual cost of building the dam.

In this debate the Alabama Power Co., the Tennessee Electric Power Co., and the Memphis Power & Light Co. have been attacked as being capitalistic and monopolistic, while Mr. Ford, his heirs (Edsel Ford) and assigns, have been lauded as patriotic philanthropists. I know nothing of any of them, except from the hearings in this case, but here is a chance to make sure there will be no profit in the building of the dams. If the Ford offer is based solely on patriotic fertilizer philanthropy, adopt my amendment.

A few years ago the Secretary of War, Mr. Baker, considered the Alabama Power Co. "generous and public spirited."

To-day it is attacked as a greedy corporation by some of those who have advocated the Ford offer. I wonder how Ford will be regarded five years from now if you accept his offer with a possible 8 per cent profit on fertilizer alone?

I believe in a square deal for all parties who make offers for Muscle Shoals, and I call your attention to the following extracts from the hearings before the Military Affairs Committee Friday, February 24, 1922, at page 669 of the hearings during the Sixty-seventh Congress, and especially to the letter of Secretary Baker, which was read at my request, although introduced by some one else, and I had never heard of it before. In the interest of farmers note the following:

Mr. KEARNS. Then, if Congress should authorize the Secretary of War to accept the Ford offer, then it would be transferring to Ford a part of your property for which the Government never had any kind of a contract.

Mr. MARTIN. That is correct, Mr. Kearns. We did convey to the Government, in fee simple, several years ago, the site at which the Wilson Dam is being erected. We also owned that and we conveyed that to the Government in 1918 for $1.

Mr. KEARNS. But that does not include these other properties?

Mr. MARTIN. No, sir; that land which constituted the abutment sites of Dam No. 2, the Wilson Dam, we had expended upward of $500,000 on its development, and at the inception of the war we were asked to hasten the whole program, and we conveyed that title to the Government for $1.

Mr. KEARNS. Was there a provision in the contract or in this conveyance whereby the Government was to return it to you?

Mr. MARTIN. No, sir; we practically donated it to the Government.

Mr. KEARNS. You donated $500,000 worth of property to the Government for $1?

Mr. MARTIN. Yes, sir. I have in my hands the letter, if you care to know about it, to the Government officers tendering it, giving our reasons for it, and the answer of the Secretary of War acknowledging it with thanks and appreciation; if you would like to hear it, I would be glad to read it.

Mr. KEARNS. You can put that in the record.

Mr. HILL. May he not read that, Mr. Chairman? I would like very much to hear it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it very long, Mr. Martin?

Mr. MARTIN. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you might read both the letter transmitting the offer and also the letter accepting it.

Mr. MARTIN. I am reading from a letter dated February 18, 1918:

ALABAMA POWER CO.,
Birmingham, Ala., February 18, 1918.

Col. C. KELLER,
Corps of Engineers,
Office of the Chief of Engineers,
United States Army, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Following the several interviews which I have had with you recently on the subject of the desire of the Government to acquire from the Muscle Shoals Hydroelectric Power Co. the dam site and certain other properties at Muscle Shoals, I have conferred fully not only with the directors of that company but also with the representatives of the security holders of the Alabama Traction, Light & Power Co. (Ltd.). As I believe I explained to you, the last-mentioned company is interested by reason of its stock holdings in Alabama Power Co., which latter company owns the stock of the Muscle Shoals Hydroelectric Power Co.

The properties in question represent a very heavy investment by our company, and have occupied an important position in our plans for securing power for the future. For several years we have worked on plans for ultimately developing these water powers as an integral part of the hydroelectric system which will be required by our companies to meet the needs of the communities which they serve. Much of this work was done by us in collaboration with the Army engineers, looking toward a development in cooperation with the Government on some such plan as was favorably reported on by the Army engineers in House Document No. 1262, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session.

I am adverting very briefly to these features, as I judge from the several interviews which I have had with you and with other representatives of the Government that you are fully aware of what the company has done in preparation for the ultimate development of this water power, and I believe you appreciate that it should receive consideration in the disposition of any surplus power not required for the needs of the Government.

From our recent interviews it is obvious that our respective views as to the value of our property and the price which you would agree to pay are quite irreconcilable. As directors of a large public-service corporation, we have always believed that in addition to the development of our water powers at Muscle Shoals being a very valuable and necessary complement to our system throughout the State, the large industrial community which would grow up at Muscle Shoals would add a special value to that power plant. In times like these, however, such considerations must be secondary to the urgent needs of the Nation to secure these properties immediately for the carrying out of the Government project for the production of war nitrates, and we have accordingly determined to donate our lands to the Government for this purpose. I have already given instructions to the company's attorneys for the preparation of the necessary deeds of conveyance.

It is our understanding from you that the Government only desires to acquire the site at Dam No. 2 and adjacent properties, with flowage easement on such of our other properties as may be affected by this development.

I need hardly assure you of the desire of the company to cooperate with the War Department to the fullest extent in placing at your disposition the benefit of all our engineering studies and records relating to the projected development.

I trust that this disposition of the matter meets with your views.

Yours very truly,

JAMES MITCHELL, President.

Then, on the 20th of February, 1918, a letter from the Secretary of War:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 20, 1918.

Mr. JAMES MITCHELL,
President Alabama Power Co., Birmingham, Ala.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your letter of the 18th instant, addressed to Colonel Keller, in which you express the willingness of your company to donate to the United States certain properties and flowage easements needed for the proposed Federal power development at Muscle Shoals, I beg to acknowledge with thanks the company's generous and public-spirited action.

The further steps necessary in regard to the matter will be given immediate attention.

Very truly yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Then, I have in my hand a photograph of the check which we received from the United States in the sum of $1 in payment for these lands.

Mr. KEARNS. And that was land connected with Dam No. 2?

Mr. MARTIN. Dam No. 2, the Wilson Dam.

Mr. KEARNS. Which had cost your company $500,000?

Mr. MARTIN. Yes, sir; slightly less than $500,000 we had expended in connection with that development.

I never saw Mr. Martin before he came before our committee. I have never seen him except in relation to hearings on Muscle Shoals. I do not know whether he claims to be a philantropist or not, but here are the thanks of Secretary Baker to his company. This is a pure business proposition, gentlemen. If you really want to take the profit out of the building of the dams, adopt my proposed amendment. If Mr. Ford is really a philanthropist, his advocates here will vote for it. [Applause.]

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, of course it is impossible to discuss this question at length in five minutes. I dislike to impose upon the time of the committee, but being unable to get time under the general debate on the bill, I feel I can not let an opportunity pass without adding my enthusiastic indorsement to the action of the majority of the members of the Committee on Military Affairs in presenting this bill in its present form to the House. For two years the Congress and this great Committee on Military Affairs have been considering the Ford offer and during those two years, despite the interest and opposition shown to the Ford offer by practically all the hydroelectric power companies of the country, no better offer has been made. Indeed, no offer has been made that can compare favorably with the Ford offer, having in view the carrying out of the policy of the Government as expressed in the act of Congress in 1916.

The Committee on Military Affairs of this House, which has always been a nonpartisan committee and which must necessarily be nonpartisan as to matters pertaining to our national defense, has studied this problem from alpha to omega and has carefully considered every offer submitted. That committee has faithfully safeguarded the interests of the Government at every turn under the provisions of this bill, and a very large majority of its members have presented the bill here for our consideration. In doing this they have responded to an urgent demand of a vast majority of the people of this country for immediate action by Congress as to the disposition of Muscle Shoals. There is no question in my mind but that a very substantial majority of the people demand that this Congress accept the offer of Mr. Ford. And yet gentlemen are here presenting amendment after amendment to the bill containing the Ford offer, or a proposal to accept that offer, for this great water-power project. I agree with the chairman of the committee, if we must adopt amendments to the Ford proposal in order to meet the views of every man, especially those of men who have not studied this proposition, why we may as well say so and stop this proceeding.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I will.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. And the amendments are offered by men who will not support the bill even if their amendments are accepted.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I would not say that applies to all who wish to amend the bill. Of course, there are those who wish to defeat the Ford offer in any way possible.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Not now; I do not wish to be discourteous. I think there are gentlemen on this floor who are perfectly sincere in feeling that probably additional safeguards should be put in this bill in order to properly protect the rights of the people and the Government in the years to come. I can but believe, however, if they will carefully study all the provisions of the bill they will agree that it needs no amendment in that regard. For myself, I believe those gentlemen who have made it their business to study this Ford offer know more about it than anyone else who has not given to it a great deal of study and attention. Therefore I think we should accept the bill as it is written and pass it without amendment. Personally I can but believe that those who are really for the Ford offer will prefer to see it passed without any change whatsoever.

Mr. WURZBACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I regret I can not now, as I wish to make some further remarks and my time is very limited. I hope the gentleman will excuse me.

Now, gentlemen, I submit that no one can view this question as a sectional or partisan problem, but every man here must realize that it is a matter of a great national policy. I confess I was surprised and disappointed that the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], for whose industry and intellect I have always had the greatest respect, should stand here and say, if Muscle Shoals were in some other section of the country, we who happen to have a local interest in it, would not vote for it.

I do not believe the gentleman from Indiana speaks the sentiment of a dozen Members on this floor. I am exceedingly glad that the membership of this House have not come to the point where they will refuse to approve any legislation that does not bring some peculiar benefit to their respective districts or sections of the country. Let me remind you, gentlemen, that often, and time after time, we have heartily supported your great irrigation and reclamation projects of the West. Time after time we have stood, and will continue to stand, shoulder to shoulder with you who have advocated great national projects carrying out our national policy of conservation and development. I need not tell you again that to-day we are dealing with a national problem, and not a local one. This bill involves a question of national defense and the carrying out of the policy of the Government as set forth in an act of Congress in 1916, when the first dollar was spent at Muscle Shoals. We are not dealing with an ordinary water-power site, such as would ordinarily be subjected to the provisions of the Federal water power act. In my opinion the Congress has a different policy specifically as to Muscle Shoals; at least, it has not been the intention that the power site at Muscle Shoals should come under the jurisdiction of the Federal Power Commission. This bill contains a proposal to accept the only offer or proposal ever made to the Government that in any appreciable manner meets the fixed policy of the Government in dealing with this national project.

There is no reason for us to be swept away from the issue by the cry that is raised against a vast expenditure of public money by Henry Ford in the completion of Dam No. 2 and the construction of Dam No. 3. What better safeguard could be provided against the useless expenditure of this money than to provide, as the bill does, that he pay 4 per cent interest on the money required for this work? Do you believe he will make the expenditures as large as possible just for the privilege of paying 4 per cent interest on it for 100 years?

This is not a proposition to make money, though we like to be assured that the Government will be reimbursed. Under the offer of Mr. Ford, I am informed the Government will receive annually approximately $300,000 more than it would receive under any other offer, including the last and best offer of the power companies. We built the Alaskan railroad at public expense of many millions and it has not begun to pay any interest on the money. I supported an appropriation for it because a great national policy was involved. The same may be said of the Panama Canal, though it has begun to show returns. How much money have we expected or received for our investment in irrigation and reclamation projects? Yet in this Ford offer it seems assured that the Government will have returned to its Treasury every dollar to be expended with interest at 4 per cent. I submit it is not such a bad business deal after all.

There are only two courses open for us to follow. The one is Government ownership and operation and the other is to sell or lease to some private enterprise that will carry out the national policies involved. I can not believe this Congress is quite ready for Government operation. It has been suggested by a very few in the course of this debate. We all know that our Uncle Sam is a very poor business man. Therefore we should lease or sell, and we should make the best bargain possible. This bill represents the best we can do.

I am sure the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is thoroughly earnest and sincere in his contentions, but let me beg you gentlemen, if you really wish to settle this problem for the American people, not to urge these amendments that will destroy this bill and defeat the very purpose of this legislation which evidently a majority of the American people are demanding. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I desire to revise and extend my remarks if permission has not already been granted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has that permission.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I am one of the Members of those who are opposed to the Ford offer for Muscle Shoals ever since I have studied it and listened to the testimony two years ago. I am opposed to this bill because I believe it is open to legitimate criticism in a great number of places. I am opposed to it because I do not believe that its terms grant the thing that the proponents of this bill claim that it will give to the people of this country. As to the fertilizer clause contained in this offer I am of the opinion that it does not compel Mr. Ford at all times and under all circumstances to furnish fertilizers to the farmers of this country. And let me say to you without this bait we are holding out to the farmers of the United States that there would not be a handful of the membership of this House who would vote for this bill. Therefore the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] recognized the truthfulness of the statement I am making, and has already offered an amendment to this bill that will make it compulsory upon the part of Mr. Ford to make 40,000 tons of nitrate per annum or in the event that he fails for two years to do this to reconvey the property that he has gotten for nothing from the United States back to the Government. Now you say he is going to do this. Then why object to this amendment. If you say that the terms of the bill, which are rather crude, are intended to do this, why object to the amendment he now offers that would make it compulsory upon his part beyond peradventure of a doubt to furnish this, because that is what every farmer of the country——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEARNS. For a brief question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. KEARNS. No; I used to be but I am not now.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Did the gentleman offer this amendment in committee when the matter was up before the committee?

Mr. KEARNS. I did not offer it because I could not get such an amendment accepted by the committee at that time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Did the gentleman——

Mr. KEARNS. I have answered the gentleman's question and I desire to be entirely courteous to the gentleman, and I assert this was discussed in the committee two years ago, and the only reason it was not written in the provisions of this bill was because it was thought if it was tied up too much Mr. Ford would not accept——

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEARNS. I will.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman has made a study of the bill which I have not had the opportunity. I want to ask my friend from Ohio with section 14 of this bill as it is written will it not compel Mr. Ford or his company to manufacture 40,000 tons of nitrate every year instead of one year out of three?

Mr. KEARNS. I thank my good friend from Texas for asking me that question, and I shall be glad indeed to give him the benefit of my opinion, if it is worth anything. I am going to read:

The company expressly agrees that, continuously throughout the lease period, except as it may be prevented by reconstruction of the plant itself, or by war, strikes, accidents, fires, or other causes beyond its control, it will manufacture nitrogen and other commercial fertilizers, mixed or unmixed, and with or without filler, according to demand.

Now, he is allowed to charge 8 per cent on the investment. Will the gentleman from Texas listen to this: Suppose the 8 per cent that he is allowed to charge should make the cost of manufacturing this fertilizer there so expensive that the farmers can not buy it? Therefore there is no demand.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Then there will be no necessity for manufacturing 40,000 tons, if there is no demand.

Mr. KEARNS. Yes. Make him manufacture 40,000 tons year after year, and he will be compelled to sell it, regardless of cost and at a price that will enable the farmers to buy it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my friend from Ohio may have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio may have two minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, we can never get through this bill section by section if under section 2 we can discuss section 14. I am not going to object to my friend from Ohio getting two minutes' more time, but hereafter when gentlemen want to discuss the fertilizer section they should wait until we get to that. We shall never get through if gentlemen can discuss section 14 under section 2.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEARNS. If my fears should prove to be true, then if you will adopt the Begg amendment, regardless of whether there is a demand or not, Mr. Ford must make this fertilizer, 40,000 tons of nitrate each year, and must sell it at a price at which the farmers will demand it; consequently you will get cheap fertilizer. If he is going to make it anyhow, this amendment can do no harm. I advocate that because I want to see the farmers get what they are told they will get. There is much said here about those opposing this bill and——

Mr. HUDSPETH. It permits him to lie idle two years out of three in the manufacture of fertilizer under the Begg amendment. That is the harm I anticipate will follow the adoption of the Begg amendment.

Mr. KEARNS. If the Begg amendment is open to that objection it ought to be cured.

There has been much talk here, I say, to the effect that the membership of this House that is opposed to the Ford offer for Muscle Shoals was linked up with some combine or with Wall Street. I want to say to the gentleman from Alabama that I never knew but one man who was interested in the water-power business in all my life, and that is his own neighbor, Mr. MARTIN, the only man I ever saw who was interested in it. I do not know of one man who is interested in the manufacture of fertilizer, either as an employee or as a manufacturer. I do not know any of these men. I am opposed to this bill because I want to do for the farmer the thing you claim this bill will do. I want to ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN], who yesterday made the statement that if Mr. Ford got this great water power down there he was going to send out this power in every direction from Muscle Shoals and sell it to the small industries down there and to the farmers. I see the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] is not listening. I want to know where he gets the authority for this statement. He does not get it from the hearings. He does not get the authority for that statement from the bill itself. Where does the gentleman get authority for saying that Mr. Ford is going to sell this power?

Mr. QUIN. From the statement of his representative in October.

Mr. KEARNS. Are you going to rely on that statement? I recall that a representative of Mr. Ford said positively he was going to use that power for his own purposes and would not use a kilowatt of power for the manufacture of fertilizer. If Mr. Ford or his representative has made that pledge, why not write it in the bill? Why, a member of the Farm Bureau who is lobbying for this bill has had the audacity to make the statement to the farmers of this country that Mr. Ford was going to sell the power to run the machinery of the farms, and was going to light villages, towns, and cities with his electricity, when there is not an iota of testimony upon which to base such a statement as that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. KEARNS. I wish I had more time. I would like to know. [Applause.]

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I shall not take the time of the House to debate the amendment offered by my good friend from Maryland [Mr. HILL]. It is wholly an unnecessary amendment, in my judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS] is withdrawn, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. The company will lease from the United States Dam No. 2, its power house, and all of its hydroelectric operating appurtenances, except the locks, together with all lands and buildings owned or to be acquired by the United States connected with or adjacent to either end of the said dam, for a period of 100 years from the date when structures and equipment of a capacity of 100,000 horsepower are constructed and installed and ready for service, and will pay to the United States as annual rental therefor, 4 per cent of the actual cost of acquiring land and flowage rights, and of completing the locks, dam, and power-house facilities (but not including expenditures and obligations incurred prior to approval of this proposal by Congress, payable annually at the end of each lease year, except that during and for the first six years of the lease period, the rentals shall be in the following amounts and payable at the following times, to wit: Two hundred thousand dollars one year from the date when 100,000 horsepower is installed and ready for service, and thereafter $200,000 annually at the end of each year for five years.

With a committee amendment as follows:

Page 3, line 9, strike out the words "approval of this proposal by Congress" and insert "May 31, 1922."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BURTON: Section 8, page 2, line 23, after the words "United States" insert the words "under the terms of the Federal water power act." Page 3, line 2, strike out the words "one hundred" and insert the word "fifty."

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, the discussion and disposition of this amendment, I think, will save a great deal of desultory debate, because it goes right to the substance of the questions that have been brought forward here.

I favor this amendment, in the first place, because it is in accordance with the policy of the United States Government established by a statute passed in 1920, and because after the thought of the best minds in the country had been brought to bear upon this problem, even those who were seeking to exploit water power and desired special privilege, nearly all of them, as represented by electrical engineers and promoters, agreed that this was right.

In the next place, it is utterly unfair to those who have been developing water power and who have accepted licenses under this act of 1920 to give to another person a privilege denied to them. They have, some of them—yes, many of them—gone out into the wilderness; they have gone into communities where there was no industrial development, no considerable population, and ventured their capital in sums small and large for the development of this country.

But here what do you have? You have the Government building two dams at an expense of over $75,000,000; you have a bill by which the Government shall maintain those dams on the allowance of a mere pittance; you have a form of privilege under which the Government takes all the risk and the party who exploits it takes all the gain. I say that is grossly unfair to others who have taken up this water power in quantities surpassing that at Muscle Shoals. It is unfair to the Government as well.

There is an analogy between this and some other things—oil, gas, forests. This is the best and most effective statute of any of them. This is the best policy; this is the one best adjusted.

Now, I went over this subject two days ago, but at the risk of repetition I shall show some respects in which this discriminates against all others, and in which the Ford offer is altogether out of keeping with the policy of conservation, by which those who are opposed to waste and to monopoly will stand and stand right here, and if defeated now we will stand by that policy in the future, appealing to a more-informed sentiment upon the subject.

I believe in the conservation of forest, mine, and water power. I believe in looking forward to the future. No one knows what will happen in 100 years nor in 50 years. Science by its developments, thick and fast, is revolutionizing methods, oftentimes every year, and we can not afford to tie up this water power.

I will call attention to only a few of the things in which this is a departure from the policy of the Government.

PROVISIONS OF FEDERAL WATER POWER ACT VIOLATED OR IGNORED BY THE FORD OFFER.

COMPREHENSIVE SCHEME OF DEVELOPMENT REQUIRED.

1. As a part and condition of any license issued to develop water power, the project adopted, its plans and specifications must be such in the judgment of the power commission as are—best adapted to a comprehensive scheme of improvement and utilization for the purposes of navigation, of water-power development, and of other beneficial public uses. (Sec. 10 (a).)

EXCESS PROFITS APPROPRIATED.

2. Excess profits of the licensee from the water must be paid to the United States, whether they are profits of a public utility or a private user. (Reg. 18, sec. 106.)

LIMITATION OF TERM AND RECAPTURE.

3. The franchise is limited to 50 years, conditioned upon acceptance of all the terms and conditions of the act. (Sec. 6.)

At the end of the 50 years, the right is reserved to the Government to take over the project upon payment of the net investment by the licensee, but not to exceed its fair value, and excluding any consideration for good will, going value, or prospective revenues, or rights granted by the franchise. (Sec. 14.)

At the end of 50 years, in the event the Government does not exercise the right to take over the project, preference by section 7 is given to applications by States or municipalities.

The right of the United States or any State or municipality is expressly reserved to take over by condemnation proceedings and maintain and operate the project at any time during the 50 years license period upon payment of just compensation to the licensee therefor. (Sec. 14.)

That is, during the 50 years there is the right reserved in the United States to take over the property on paying just compensation.

RENEWAL.

No preference right for renewal of the franchise or any proprietary claim for power is secured to the licensee. If a license is renewed, it must be under the then existing law and conditions. (Sec. 15.)

NO TRANSFER WITHOUT APPROVAL.

4. The licensee can not execute a transfer of any right secured under the license or of property under the license without written approval of the power commission. All transfers or assignments, whether by judicial sale or foreclosure, must be subject to the conditions of the act. This provision is construed by the present power commission to extend to a lease of any property under license. (Sec. 8.)

MAINTENANCE AND OPERATION.

5. The licensee is required, at its own expense, under supervision of the power commission, at all times to maintain the project adequately for purposes of navigation and efficient operation in the development and transmission of power, must make all necessary renewals and replacements, and must maintain adequate depreciation reserve. (Sec. 10c.)

POWER FOR NAVIGATION FACILITIES.

6. The licensee is required to provide, free of cost, power for operation of all navigation facilities (sec. 11c), and authority is reserved in the Government at all times to prescribe regulations in the interest of navigation, including control of the pool level and installation of necessary lights and signals. (Sec. 18.)

REGULATION OF RATES, SERVICE, AND SECURITY ISSUES.

7. A licensee which is a public utility corporation must abide by such reasonable regulation regarding the services rendered its customers and its rates and charges of payment therefor as may be prescribed by the State; and if there be no laws of the State regulating rates, services, or security issues, then the Federal Power Commission exercises such regulation (sec. 19); and if the power enter into interstate commerce and the States can not agree, then the Federal Power Commission makes such regulations. (Sec. 20.)

8. All rates for power sold in public service entering into interstate commerce must be "reasonable, nondiscriminatory, and just to the customer, and all unreasonable discrimination and unjust rates or services are hereby prohibited and declared to be unlawful." (Sec. 20.)

Even where the licensee sells to another company for resale to the public, the act undertakes to regulate rates, service, and security issues of that purchaser from the licensee in the event there is no local regulation. (Sec. 19.)

AMORTIZATION PAYMENTS.

9. After 20 years of operation amortization reserves are required out of surplus earned thereafter, if any, in excess of a specified reasonable rate of return upon the actual legitimate investment, to be held until the termination of the license or applied, in the discretion of the power commission, in reduction of the net investment of the licensee. (Sec. 10d.)

HEADWATER IMPROVEMENTS.

10. The licensee is required to make equitable contribution for benefits accruing to it from headwater improvements, either by storage reservoirs or otherwise, whether done by other licensees or by the Government. (Sec. 10f.)

COMBINATIONS PROHIBITED.

11. "Combinations, agreements, * * * or understandings, express or implied, to limit the output of electrical energy, to restrain trade, or to fix, maintain, or increase prices for electrical energy or service, are hereby prohibited." (Sec. 10h.)

USE FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE.

12. The right is expressly reserved to the United States at any time to take over a project when in the opinion of the President the safety of the United States demands for manufacturing nitrates, explosives, or munitions of war, or for any other purpose involving the safety of the United States, involving a liability only for just and fair compensation for use of the property taken, to be determined by the power commission upon a basis of a reasonable profit to the licensee in peace time, plus the cost of restoring the property to as good condition as when taken, less a reasonable value for improvements made by the United States that are serviceable and valuable to the licensee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes, although I may desire more than that, because my convictions on this subject are so strong that I want to present them fully to the committee.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio be allowed to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio be permitted to proceed until he completes his statement on this amendment.

Mr. BURTON. I should not wish to ask that, because I think in 10 minutes I can finish.

Mr. MORIN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my objection and my request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio may proceed for 10 additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURTON. This statute evoked most careful consideration during three or four administrations. I give credit to President Roosevelt for having initiated the general idea; President Taft also promoted it; President Wilson and Secretary Baker, from whom a letter will be read during the course of this discussion, rendered excellent service upon it; and I ought not to omit Secretary Lane, Secretary Houston, and others. But this Congress is asked to cast down the result of all their labors and to destroy this policy.

Oh, but we are told by the gentleman from Tennessee, for whose judgment I have the highest respect, that this is a contract, and that you must not vary from it. Why, Mr. Chairman, there have been several contracts made within the last few years that we should have amended very decidedly; and that is not confined to any one administration. [Applause.]

What was the excuse for the Teapot Dome contract? And the contract in itself is not such a dreadfully bad thing. It was intended that the Government should retain the oil reserves; but along came some persons who said, "The oil supply is being depleted. More than that, we must dig out the oil for the Navy; we must put it in tanks, and so we will make a modification of the laws and regulations." I do not care to express an opinion here as to whether that contract was legal or not; but I do say this, that the contract was an unusually favorable one for the Government. Instead of the usual royalty of 10 per cent or, at the outside, 20 per cent, turned over to the lessor, it provided that from 12½ per cent for the least-producing wells up to 50 per cent for the best wells should go as royalty to the Government—an unprecedented proposition.

It also provided that storage tanks should be built and that a pipe line be constructed at a cost of $9,000,000, but universal condemnation has rested upon that contract, or, at least, condemnation has rested upon one person, the Secretary of the Interior, because of his affiliations with the parties and because of secretive methods. But that is not as bad as the contract you are proposing here, that is not as wide a variation from settled policy as this, nor does this promise such advantages.

You have established a policy by the water power act which makes these resources available for the future, it authorizes such changes as time and development may require, and it does away with discrimination. But monopoly and discrimination abide in every section of this bill, and I shall call attention to them as we go along.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, Mr. Ford ought not to object to submitting to the same regulations which others have met. I repeat, he is very much more favorably treated than others who go out and risk their own capital. The dams are to be built for him, and the steam power plant, for which $4,500,000 is offered and which rents for $350,000 a year, is there. He asks that of the $5,000,000 he pays, $3,500,000 shall be set aside for replacing a plant with 40,000 more horsepower. I can not understand how gentlemen can think they can grant such privileges and so give away Government property.

I do not wish to see this project delayed. I hope to see something done about it. There has been occasion for criticism from the other side about the delay. I have not a bit of doubt but that some of the water-power users and developers thought, "Oh, that whole expense there will amount to nothing and it will go into scrap and we can get it for a song." They were standing by and thinking they would buy for little or nothing. Along came Mr. Ford and took advantage of that situation and made an offer. If he will submit to the regulations to which every other citizen and to which every one of us would have to submit, and if he will pay a fair price for the property, I would like to see Mr. Ford have it, but this Congress is not here to grant special privileges to Mr. Ford or to any other great capitalist of the country.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Ford makes us a proposition. If, in the interest of the Government, we see fit to change it a little and say to Mr. Ford, "Here is our proposition," can Mr. Ford take any offense at that?

Mr. BURTON. I think if it should be one of us and we were dealing with a person and made a proposition, we would hardly expect that the exact words of our proposition would be accepted by somebody else.

A few days ago very bitter complaint was made because a Government official, a responsible Secretary of the Treasury, had sent in a bill here, and it was said that we must not take that, but to-day we are told we must swallow Mr. Ford's offer as a contract or we can not carry it through. [Applause.] The question is, are you going to swallow it?

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. McSWAIN. The gentleman having already spoken for more than 60 minutes on this bill and not having once mentioned the matter of national defense, let me ask him if these other persons and companies that have developed water power against whom he says there would be a discrimination, have obligated themselves to maintain a nitrate plant ready at all times, for 100 years, to provide nitrates for this Government in the event of war and ready to instantly go into the manufacture of it.

Mr. BURTON. Now, that seems like a poser. The gentleman omitted to hear what I said the other day, and I read the provision. I will not read it again, but every man and every corporation that has a license under the water power act, which I am seeking to have binding here, must agree that he will turn over the property to the Government for the purpose of making explosives at any time.

Mr. McSWAIN. If the gentleman will yield, I will say that I not only listened to every word he said, but I have read the Federal water power act many times and I will ask him whether in a single case where a concern got a license under the Federal water power act they agreed to maintain their plant for the fixation of nitrogen from the air so it could be converted into manufacturing explosives within five days.

Mr. BURTON. See how easy an answer calls that down. There is already the nitrate plant there constructed by the Government. Mr. Ford does not have to construct it. It is there ready to be maintained. That absolutely forecloses your question and makes that idea of no account whatever.

Mr. McSWAIN. What about these other people at Keokuk?

Mr. BURTON. That is merely sentimental, whether they offer to do it or not. The plant is there, and it has been constructed at the expense of the United States Government, and Mr. Ford does not have to pay a nickel to construct it. Why, the idea of giving him credit for turning over to the Government something that he gets for practically nothing, that he did not build, and that he had nothing to do with, but which was built by the Government of the United States at the expense of the Government.

Mr. McSWAIN. Does the gentleman assume it would cost nothing to maintain it and to keep it in condition for 100 years so it can, on five days' notice, begin the making of explosives?

Mr. BURTON. Whatever is available for the manufacture of nitrates is available for explosives, and there is provision in the bill for maintaining this plant, and the Government itself must provide for the repair, maintenance, and operation of Dam No. 2. This shows how Mr. Ford has the advantage.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio be granted five additional minutes.

Mr. BURTON. I do not wish that, gentlemen. I may say, Mr. Chairman, that I am intending to be heard later on some other amendments and am afraid the committee will be tired of hearing me before I get through.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, it is not at all a delightful task to differ so radically with my genial and learned colleague from my State, whom every man loves and respects. However, I find myself in this bill on the directly opposite side from him on the 50-year and 100-year proposition, with the understanding, of course, that the amendment, revised, which I suggested yesterday, will be adopted. And I am going to say I believe it will be adopted, and if it is adopted then there is not a possible chance for Henry Ford or any other man ever coming into control of this water power and failing to make 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen or more annually or over 2,000,000 tons of actual commercial fertilizer. It is on that basis I want to argue in favor of 100 years as against 50 years. My good colleague from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] argues that we should not stray away from the Federal water power act and its 50-year provision; but, my colleagues, I want to call your attention to this difference. There has never been a license issued under the Federal water power act that was not issued for the selfish interests of the man obtaining the license [applause], and I maintain and argue that instead of straying away from the policy of Roosevelt of conservation of national resources we are only holding fast to that policy if we can tie up any man or set of men to produce a minimum of 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen for the constant upkeep and improvement of the fertility of the soil. If that is true, that is conservation. That is not wastage, and, added to that, there is a commission provided in this bill, which is a Government commission, to regulate the price at which this fertilizer can be sold.

Mr. ALMON. And the distribution?

Mr. BEGG. And the distribution.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield? And the States regulate the price at which the current will be sold.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Where does anybody get that impression? I say that is not the law.

Mr. BEGG. I will not admit that is the law, because I am one who does not believe they intend to sell the current. I believe they are going to use it for manufacturing; still I am for it on a 50-year basis. Now, men, as business men let me call your attention to another vital proposition as against any proposition under the Federal water power act.

I am going to assume that I get a lease under the Federal water power act, and I care not what the purpose is or what I manufacture. The United States does not make it its business at all as to what price I am going to sell that commodity. The Government is not interested in that, and I go ahead and include in the cost of the product that I am going to manufacture and market a return on the capital invested; regardless of whether I have amortized my capital in a bank account, I still continue to charge so much earning power on my capital. There is not an industry in the United States that does not do it now. I am charging an earning power on my capital even though my dividends have exceeded my capital ten times. In this bill it is decidedly different. We do not give Mr. Ford or the corporation that power. Here is what we do give them: We give them the power to amortize the capital stock, or the cost of it, in 100 years, and from the time of the 100 years thereafter every ton of fertilizer made at Muscle Shoals will be sold on the basis of cost less the capital stock charge.

Now, if that is true—and I challenge anybody who opposes the 100-year proposition to prove that it is not true—the Government has it within its power at all times to compel the sale of nitrate at the actual cost of the labor and material with no capital stock charge against that. And in 100 years from now who knows how many people will have to be fed off the fertile fields of the United States, because fertilizer may be one of the big factors included in the consumption cost and will affect every man, woman, and child, whether he lives in a city or on a farm.

And because this is different in that respect than any contract made under the Federal water power act, I maintain it is justification enough to make it 100 years instead of 50 years. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa was recognized.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, before proceeding further I would like to see if we can not arrange as to the limit of time to be consumed in the discussion of this section. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa what he thinks about a time limit.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think it would be advisable for us to allow the discussion to run along for 30 minutes or so and then perhaps we can come to some agreement.

Mr. McKENZIE. It has now been running 20 or 25 minutes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There is an important amendment pending and an important amendment to be suggested. The real merits of the bill are contained in this section.

Mr. McKENZIE. I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that we have one hour for debate, to be equally divided between those opposing and those in favor. Will that satisfy the gentleman?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. On this amendment?

Mr. McKENZIE. On this section and all amendments thereto.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; because there are two or three other amendments to be offered to this section. Let us go on for half an hour.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has been recognized and has the floor.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I send a letter to the Clerk's desk and ask to have it read in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNION TRUST BUILDING,
Cleveland, Ohio, March 4, 1924.

MY DEAR MR. HULL: Through your kindness I have just received a copy of the minority report from the Committee on Military Affairs, dated February 8, with reference to the proposed disposition of the Government's interests and properties at Muscle Shoals. The discussion of the several "offers" made for the purchase or lease of these properties is most informing, and I congratulate you upon the wisdom and farsighted patriotism with which the report is infused. I have always thought and continue to think that it would be a public calamity to have this great national asset come into private hands upon any terms now possible to be secured. The progress of invention can not be foretold, but it is wholly within the bounds of reasonable likelihood that within a very few years the production of synthetic nitrogen compounds, without great power consumption, will be cheap and easy and that in such event it would be wasteful to devote any substantial part of the available power at Muscle Shoals to that use. But it is certain that with every passing day in the United States the population and their transportation and industrial needs grow greater and the stocks of unmined coal and unpumped oil grow less, and it inevitably follows that in relatively few years the possession of this immense source of power means dominance over the lives and fortunes of a rich and populous section of our country. Muscle Shoals is an inexhaustible national asset. It is too large and too vital an element in our national economy, whether in peace or war, to be privately owned, either by an individual or a corporation. Impatience to recover a few million dollars in money and modest prospects of benefits to farmers are blinding us. The real interests of the farmers and of everybody else, for the hundred years in question, are identical with the national interest. The water power act is framed to induce the development of doubtful projects by unusual rewards. So far from abating its provisions in any lease at Muscle Shoals they should be strengthened. This is not a doubtful project but a palpable gold mine.

Thank you heartily for your fine public service.

Cordially yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the letter that has just been read was from the ex-Secretary of War, who unquestionably had more to do with Muscle Shoals than anyone else. I think you will all admit that. I myself had many conversations with Secretary Baker before the war and during the war in regard to Muscle Shoals. I perhaps received from him some of the inspiration that caused me to side with you gentlemen on this side of the House in demanding that we should develop Muscle Shoals, and now I, like the Secretary of War at that time, want to keep Muscle Shoals for the people of this country and not for the selfish private interests of anybody.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I hope no one will interfere with me, because I was interfered with the other day and tried to answer everyone that came along, and it took up nearly all my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does not the gentleman think that he is very inconsistent in reading a letter from ex-Secretary of War Baker, protesting private ownership, when he himself is sponsor for a bill directly violating that policy?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will explain—I sponsor nothing of the kind. I am beginning to believe, as the Secretary of War says, that this is too big to trust to any selfish private interest. I think that unquestionably, when you get through, that will be the final decision of the people of this country.

Now I hope that gentlemen understand it. I tried for two years to find out from Henry Ford and from others what Henry Ford proposed to do with Muscle Shoals—the second largest national enterprise you have. I have been unable to find out. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] the other day said that I had met Henry Ford. I did, and it was not for four or five hours. I was told that Henry Ford would come here to explain everything. I want to tell you about that visit. It was at the Union Depot. I was taken there, I think, by Judge ALMON, and on Henry Ford's car I met Mr. Ford. I asked Mr. Ford this question: "Mr. Ford, I would like to ask you a few questions in regard to what you propose to do at Muscle Shoals." Mr. Ford immediately said to me, "Mr. HULL, I have important business, and I want you to see somebody else about that. I know nothing about it."

That is as near as I have ever found out from Henry Ford or anyone else what he proposes to do. I have asked the committee for two years to have Henry Ford come before us and let us sit down as gentlemen should and talk about this great business proposition. I was told at first that that was what would happen. They have purposely, as I look at it, kept Henry Ford away. I was told that I could go to Detroit and they would make an appointment with him. I wanted to see him before I voted on that proposition. The appointment never was made, and Henry Ford, so far as I know, is just as far away as he ever was from the men who ought to be able to talk to him.

Mr. Chairman, this is an offer made by Henry Ford. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] stated it properly. It is now up to you gentlemen to say what you will offer to Henry Ford, and you have a perfect right to amend this bill as you see fit. You can change it. It is your offer to Henry Ford. It is idle to waste words and say that the great House of Representatives, representing the American people, can not change a contract. So far as I know this is the first time in legislative history that a contract like this has come before the House of Representatives. Usually it is a bill which we authorize, and then immediately afterwards we usually criticize the bill. To-day, to-morrow, or whenever you pass this bill, it will be you, and you alone, who are responsible for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. WINGO. When was it that the gentleman saw Henry Ford?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. At the very inception of this thing, about two years ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I wish to discuss for a few minutes the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]. This is a vital amendment, and if accepted by the committee and by the House must be construed as a rejection of Henry Ford's offer for Muscle Shoals. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], a few days ago, on Wednesday, I think, spoke for 45 minutes on the pending bill, during which time he paid a glowing tribute to what he called our comprehensive national water power act, and he made bold to assert that Congress in passing that act in 1920 had established a definite and well-defined policy which, it was intended, should obtain and be applied to all future grants of hydroelectric development on the navigable streams of our country. The gentleman was in error, I think, in assuming that Congress had declared so comprehensive a policy as he outlined, because the very act of which he speaks carries limitations, and very wise limitations, on the powers of the commission appointed thereunder, and the project at Muscle Shoals falls clearly within the limitations so imposed on the commission.

There are two provisions of the act that limit the authority of the commission in the granting of licenses on navigable rivers. The first is found in the third proviso under subdivision "E" and reads as follows:

Provided further, That in case the commission shall find that any Government dam may be advantageously used by the United States for public purposes, in addition to navigation, no license therefor shall be issued until after two years after it shall have reported to Congress the facts and conditions relating thereto.

Then again, under section 7 of the power act, reading from the second paragraph, we find:

That whenever in the judgment of the commission the development of any project should be undertaken by the United States itself, the commission shall not approve any application for such project by any citizen, association, corporation, State, or municipality, but shall cause to be made such examinations, surveys, reports, plans, etc., and shall submit its findings to Congress.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Let me continue, please, for a moment. The Secretary of War, a member of the commission, recognized the limitations thus imposed by the power act on the authority of the commission, and very properly, in calling for bids through the Chief of Engineers, gave notice that if any bids were submitted offering a fair return on what the Government had or might be required to expend in the completion of the project, he would refer the same to Congress. This he was compelled to do by the very terms of the act to which I refer. Congress in passing the act clearly recognized that there would be developments of such magnitude on our navigable streams as to far exceed in importance either navigation or power development—these purposes, though important, being mere incidents to the chief objectives sought. The project at Muscle Shoals presents an exceptionally good illustration of exactly what Congress had in mind in imposing these limitations on the authority of the commission. Certainly no one will contend that the commission under the power act is clothed with authority to carry out the broad and clearly defined purpose of Congress as set out in the national defense act of 1916, and which we are now endeavoring to provide for at Muscle Shoals. In the act of 1916 Congress was primarily providing for national defense in time of the Nation's need and for agriculture in times of peace—navigation and power development being simply incidental to these two great outstanding purposes.

An initial fund of $20,000,000 was provided to carry out the purposes of the act. The President, in the exercise of his authority under the act, selected Muscle Shoals as the site for the building of a nitrate plant and providing water and steam power for its operation. It was intended to provide here explosives for the Nation in time of war and fertilizer for agriculture in time of peace.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I gladly yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BURTON. Does not the argument of my good friend from Alabama absolutely destroy any claim for licensing this to a private corporation or individual? The reservation on the power of the commission is to be made when they find that the United States should do the work.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The very fact that Congress denied to the commission the right to act, and the matter has now been properly referred by the Secretary of War to Congress, certainly clothes Congress with full authority to do what it may determine is best to conserve and carry out the original purposes that Congress had in establishing this nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals. Now, what does this proposal of Henry Ford offer to do, and which the power commission is without the slightest authority to provide or carry out? The offer, if accepted, will provide for the continuous operation of nitrate plant No. 2 for 100 years, and a guaranty to produce annually at such plant at least 40,000 tons of nitrogen—this being the maximum capacity of the plant—to maintain at all times during this period of 100 years this plant in efficient operating condition, and to turn it over to the Government on short notice, if required, with an adequate working force.

The offer further provides for the payment of interest on all expenditures incurred after a certain date, in the construction of Dams Nos. 2 and 3, and for the purchase of necessary lands, flowage rights, and the installation of power plants, and further, for the amortization of this entire expenditure during the lease term. Other valuable promises, obligations, and undertakings are set out in the offer we are now considering, and adequate provision is made to guarantee and insure the faithful performance of all conditions, promises, and undertakings made the Government. Certainly, no one will claim that the power commission, under the power act, is clothed with any authority as to matters of this kind.

Now, passing on, the gentleman from Ohio says that his amendment seeks to shorten the lease term from 100 to 50 years, and claims that failure to adopt the amendment would be an unjust discrimination against power developments made by other companies pursuant to the power act since the date of its passage in 1920. Others with more time will discuss at length this feature of the amendment; but I wish in passing to say if you reduce the term to 50 years you will impose a heavy burden on those for whom the bill is seeking to provide cheap fertilizer. To amortize the indebtedness which this bill provides in 50 instead of 100 years would require that the annual payments by the lessee be seven times larger than such payments would be under a hundred-year term.

Adverting now to the question of discrimination which the gentleman from Ohio charges if a hundred-year lease is given to Henry Ford, he fails to take into account that in the immediate section where this power is to be developed the very companies which he claims would be discriminated against by a hundred-year lease to Henry Ford now enjoy extensive water-power rights in perpetuity on both navigable and nonnavigable streams. The nonnavigable streams on which these companies hold large power rights in perpetuity should be defined and classed according to the gentleman's argument on Wednesday last as navigable streams. These numerous green circles on the map I now exhibit to the committee in the States of Georgia, North and South Carolina, and the circles in red in Georgia and Alabama show perpetual leases to companies that Mr. Ford and his company, if this bill is passed, must compete with. This circle on the map in red on the Tennessee is Hales Bar, where the lease was for 99 years. Now, I submit that the gentleman's argument that a hundred-year lease to Henry Ford, with the large benefits that his offer will bring to the Government and to agriculture, is not a discrimination against companies in that section which hold the perpetual leases this map discloses.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I ask that I may have five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama for five additional minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I repeat, what foundation is there for the claim made by the gentleman from Ohio that this 100-year lease would be unjust to companies coming in competition with Mr. Ford in the distribution of power? Now, these upper stretches of the Tennessee, classed as nonnavigable under the definition of "navigable streams" given in the power act, should be hereafter classed, in my judgment, as navigable. As authority for this I refer to a statement made by the gentleman from Ohio in his speech on last Wednesday, where in referring to the case of The United States v. Chandler-Dunbar Water Co. (229 U. S. p. 53), he says:

This sweeping decision establishes the principle that the Federal Government has full control of the development of water power in navigable streams, and it should be added that a river or stream is to be taken as an entirety, and the fact that it is not navigable in one portion, while navigable in another, does not take away the quality of navigability for the whole extent of the stream or river. Indeed, this principle might also be extended to tributaries. For a time there was no especial interest in the development of water power.

Here, then, is the Aluminum Co. of America enjoying water-power rights in perpetuity which approximate one-half million horsepower at the headwaters of the Tennessee. The gentleman has referred us to a decision of the Supreme Court showing that Congress has the right to change the definition of navigable streams as defined in the power act so as to include in that definition the upper stretches and tributaries of the Tennessee. We can not change the perpetual grants of power, but if Congress should later deem it wise to adopt the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio, so as to declare the little and upper Tennessee navigable streams and thus bring all the water-power grants in that section now held in perpetuity under the jurisdiction of the power commission, there might then be some equity in the position taken by the gentleman that this lease for 100 years to Henry Ford should be brought under the power act.

Mr. HERSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I must decline.

Mr. HERSEY. Right in that connection, for information.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I have but a few minutes, but I will yield.

Mr. HERSEY. I want to know when these companies got their grants of perpetuity, whether it was before the water power act was passed or later?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. It was before the passage of the power act. However, the decision cited by the gentleman from Ohio, as he interprets it, holds that the Government still has the power to bring all of these companies under the power act by treating and declaring the headwaters of the Tennessee as parts of a navigable stream. Now, the gentleman from Ohio called attention to a provision found in the power act which he asserts is most important, and which he claims will be ignored unless his amendment is adopted. Here is the provision:

The project adopted must be such as in the judgment of the commission will be best adapted for a comprehensive scheme of improvement and utilization for the purpose of navigation, water-power development, and other beneficial uses.

Let us see what Henry Ford's offer contemplates. Certainly, far more than any offer that has been submitted to the Military Affairs Committee, both for navigation and power development at Muscle Shoals. His offer looks to the completion of Dam No. 2, and the early completion of Dam No. 3, and he offers not only to pay 4 per cent interest for 100 years on the total amount expended in the completion of these dams, but to pay an additional sum semiannually sufficient to amortize the entire amount so expended during the term of the 100-year lease. His offer contemplates the installation of power plants, a large part of which must remain idle until storage dams on the Tennessee above Knoxville are built. This idle power installation awaiting the building of storage dams will represent more than $7,000,000 in money, on which Mr. Ford will be required to pay 4 per cent. You can see what an incentive it will be, if his offer is accepted, to promptly—at his own expense—provide storage dams so as to make this idle power machinery available. Certainly, this is a most comprehensive plan for both power development and navigation. How different, in fact, from the plan the gentleman from Ohio seems to favor, because we find this sentence in his speech of Wednesday last: "I want to say in this connection that I don't think it is best to build Dam No. 3 at this time." Yet in another part of that same speech he admits that Dam No. 3 will not only develop large additional power but will open up the Tennessee River to navigation almost to Chattanooga.

Now, if Henry Ford's proposal is accepted, it means the continuous operation at maximum capacity of nitrate plant No. 2, the sale of cheaper fertilizer to farmers, the building of Dams Nos. 2 and 3, storage dams, and the opening of the river to navigation. Is not this "a comprehensive scheme of improvement, and utilization for the purpose of navigation, water-power development, and other beneficial uses"?

I submit that the reasons are most compelling why the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio should be defeated. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Has the House decided that every gentleman has leave to extend and revise his remarks without further request? The House so decided yesterday, I believe.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. KETCHAM having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MUSCLE SHOALS.

The committee again resumed its session.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendment to apply the terms of the Federal water power act to Henry Ford's control of Muscle Shoals is for the purpose of terminating the contract at the end of 50 years, so that the works will then revert to the Government.

LEASE FOR 50 YEARS NOT LONG ENOUGH.

To fully utilize the water power at Muscle Shoals will require an expenditure of from $300,000,000 to $500,000,000, and will take from 25 to 40 years.

Most people make the mistake of thinking of electricity only in terms of power. It should also be thought of in terms of heat. Men think of electricity and visualize it in the form of lights, street cars, and revolving wheels. It should be visualized in the electric furnace.

To understand what electricity means to industry, we should study the situation at Niagara Falls, where it is demonstrated that electric energy is sometimes too valuable to be used for power purposes. Buffalo, 30 miles away, is forced to rely for power and lights upon a fuel plant burning coal brought hundreds of miles from the Pennsylvania coal fields, while the bulk of the Niagara electric energy is used for the production of aluminum, carbide, carborundum, cyanimid, quick steel, and the other alloys necessary to American industry, particularly in the manufacture of tools and automobiles. To produce these materials the high-temperatured electric furnace is required.

There is a limit to the heat which may be produced by combustion. Temperatures above 1,000 to 1,500 degrees are quite difficult to produce from fuel. It is almost impossible to produce these high temperatures on a large scale by combustion. Yet the production of the materials which I have named requires temperatures of from 2,500 to 3,500 degrees. Where large units of energy are available, such temperatures may be obtained by the electric furnace without great difficulty. For this reason Niagara Falls has become the greatest center in the world for the production of aluminum, carbide, and the other products of the electric furnace. Niagara Falls is no longer a mere tourist resort, a goal for wedding journeys. It has jumped within a few years from a village of 10,000 to a busy industrial center of some 200,000 people, all because of the electric furnace and its possibilities in connection with modern industry.

MUSCLE SHOALS AND THE ELECTRIC FURNACE.

If Muscle Shoals were adjacent to great cities and populous industrial centers, with large demands for power, Ford might well accept a lease for 50 years; but such is not a fact. There is no substantial demand for power in that section, beyond the supply now developed or which will be available upon the completion of developments now under way. Nashville, Chattanooga, Birmingham, and Montgomery are already served with water-generated power. The Alabama Power Co., which has a monopoly in Alabama, is building additional plants on the Coosa and the Tallapoosa. Already it serves almost every town and village in Alabama except Mobile, which will no doubt be served by its Tallapoosa plant. The fact is that there is even now in sight a surplus of water-generated power in that section, and there are numerous additional water powers which might be harnessed. The Alabama Power Co. has no use for Muscle Shoals. They are in no position to use it.

They have no demand for its power. They can not afford to develop it.

If it were Ford's proposal to use Muscle Shoals for the production of power with the expectation of selling it to the surrounding territory, I should call him foolish indeed. The great use for Muscle Shoals, with its expensive development but tremendous possibilities, is through the electric furnace in the production of fertilizer, aluminum, carbide, and the steel alloys so essential to industry. To utilize its energy is not merely a matter of constructing a dam, turbines, and distributing cables, but the much more difficult and expensive task of building vast plants for the use of the electric furnace. A capital investment of hundreds of millions is involved—skilled employees by thousands must be assembled, a city of homes must be built. But even all of this is not sufficient. A market must be found or developed for the materials which will be produced. Yea, more. Sources of raw materials must be located, railroads constructed, and the means found for assembling the materials at the Muscle Shoals plants.

Take the case of aluminum. The Aluminum Trust, which at present has a monopoly in the production of this metal, obtains the bauxite ore from its Arkansas mines, carries the ore to East St. Louis, where the first steps in reduction are taken, then carries the product to Niagara, where it is finally smelted. It is said that the production of aluminum on a large scale is practically impossible except by the electric furnace. The Aluminum Trust owns all known to be available deposits of ore. To produce aluminum at Muscle Shoals Ford must find a satisfactory supply of bauxite. There is said to be much of this in certain sections of Georgia and Alabama, also in Tennessee. It is known to exist in small quantity near Leeds, in Jefferson County, Alabama. Ford must hunt out these deposits. He must test them to see whether they may be worked economically. He must assemble the ore and other materials at Muscle Shoals.

To utilize Muscle Shoals, Ford must produce hundreds of millions in capital. He must build railroads, assemble scientists and skilled workers from every quarter and organize his working forces, make investigations, and carry on operations such as have never before been attempted by any one man, and he must seek in the industrial centers of the world a market for his productions. This is not a matter for a few years, but will require from 25 to 40 years, perhaps even longer, for its full consummation. There would be no hope for Ford to earn his investment back in 50 years. He could not afford to accept any lease short of 100 years. A vote for 50 years is a vote to reject his offer.

THE LABOR ASPECT.

I desire now to speak of the labor aspect of Ford at Muscle Shoals. It has tremendous importance to the workers in my district and throughout the South. It is largely because of my interest in them that I feel such deep anxiety that Ford's offer should be accepted.
